LIMELIGHT

THE employment of Mr. Wendell Willkie in behalf of the motion picture industry in connection with Washington hearings on the Wheeler-Clark-Nye charges of jingoism is an important move in one of the most important public relations operations in the career of the screen. Mr. Willkie's connection is guaranty of a special intensity of attention by the press, by reason of his name value and political eminence. This may be expected to insure that what the motion picture industry has to say for itself will get space, attention, audience. It is a procedure denoting in itself assurance on the facts.

THAT belaboured opposition of the lay press to the new rule of denying it review access to product until it is made available to the public at theatres, this week, as the news columns record, has reached the status of at least a truce, in Hollywood, rather than New York.

The issue has not been precisely stated, but it now clarifies itself into this: Is reviewing a function and service of Production, or of Distribution?

On top of this, strategically rather than logically relevant, is the sensitivity of Hollywood to the press—a fact that the lay press has been quick to demonstrate at a poignant period.

FUDGING

ANY observer who chances about the country a bit, or who has occasion to scan the amusement pages of many newspapers, will be discovering that the smut picture business is on the upturn. There will be surprise to some in the discovery that some of this product, obviously without Code seals, has been playing theatres controlled, and sometimes operated, by signatories to the Production Code agreement, which put such violations under penalty. The development, especially in this day of much critical attention to the screen, may yet head up to something.

AMERICAN MARKET

WITH a scholarly, poised discussion, Mr. William Dieterle, director of note, contributes an article to the current issue of Studies in Philosophy and Social Science, published by the Institute of Social Research in New York, on the subject of Hollywood and the European Crisis.

Mr. Dieterle, with ten years of Hollywood experience on top of his European career, writes with a special candour. It is his considered opinion that Hollywood miscalculates its probable future position in the world amusement market, regardless of the outcome of the wars.

"However, even if the foreign markets are eventually wiped out," says the director, "I insist that Hollywood can maintain its functioning, and functioning with profit. Let us take a lesson from other American enterprises. Macy's for instance, which caters to a purely American trade, has been able to offer the public quality products at moderate prices and still enjoys a reasonable income. Woolworth's, which could not, as Hollywood says it would be forced to do, decrease the quality of its goods, is continuing satisfactory operations, regardless of the effect of world conditions on its wide-spread foreign markets. And Hollywood will likewise be able to make money on readjusted budgets. . . ."

NEWSREEL DISUNITY

OUT of the clutter of confusion and circumstance surrounding the newsreel coverage, and uncoverage, of the Churchill-Roosevelt meeting-at-sea emerges the fact that, while there is no sharp disunity between the American newsreels, there is also no unity.

The newsreel is an institution of the American screen. But it is not represented, either in Washington or elsewhere, as an institution. It is represented by five separate, and always competitive, enterprises.

The British reels have an organization which appears to have a decided utility. Cooperative effort between American newsreels is still, after many years, a matter of luncheon conferences telephone calls and conversational projects. Rivalries are in the main responsible for that, and chief among the disagreements is divergence of policies on the issuance of local and regional pictures.

Local and regional special sections of newsreels are always given away, or delivered as bonus product. The costs fall on the whole release. This pleases some sales managers, displeases some editors.

WITH the world a-roar with the hoof beats of the four horsemen of the Apocalypse, with Page One and the very air and radio redolent of hell, strife and destruction, there is encouragement perhaps in the glints and gleams of promises of a better world, of deeper interests and vaster adventures to come—some day.

In the welter of tidings in copy and manuscript that flood this desk appear materials about two super-universes yet to be explored, the one that waits on that new giant telescope that is almost ready to reach into the sky from California's Palomar mountain, and the one that is to be revealed by the Radio Corporation of America's newest electron microscope. From Palomar we shall see twice as many millions of light years into space as before. With the new microscope, which may have to wait for its real career until war clouds have passed, five times the voltages previously available will peer deeper than ever into the sub-microscopic regions of the unknown world about us. It may some day develop that this instrument born of radio research will loom larger in human history than the devices by which Man can now shoot around the world and make faces by television.

The motion picture can claim a certain kinship, with its share in the development of photography, for it is the photographic plate alone which empowers the remotest reaches of both microscope and telescope.

This Week in the News

Dollar Landslide

SHOWMEN in that heart of the show business, New York City, this week looked back upon a happy, hectic Labor Day weekend, during which the invasion of the folks from the hinterlands hurtled receipts beyond anticipation.

From other cities came reports of similar weekend business, and strong receipts generally.

In New York, the crush of people in theatres, hotels, railroad stations, and Broadway's amusement area prompted newspaper feature articles, and photographs.

New York's Paramount Theatre ended its first week of "Aloma of the South Seas" with $73,000, of which $48,000 was garnered between Saturday and Monday. The Music Hall's Samuel Goldwyn feature, "Little Foxes," gathered $90,000 during Thursday, August 28th, through Monday; and its third week began Thursday. The Strand's "Dive Bomber," opened Friday, August 29th, extracted $33,400 on that day, and three following. The Roxy, with "Wild Geese Calling," received $40,700 through the weekend. "Sergeant York," at the Hollywood, entered its fourth week Monday, after gaining an estimated $23,000 in its third week. Metro's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," at the Astor, drew $21,600 in its third week, ended Tuesday night, with $10,700 of this received on the weekend. "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," at the Capitol, grossed $25,000, from Thursday, August 28th, through Tuesday.

No Anti-Trust Let-up

THE NAMING by President Roosevelt of Francis Biddle, Solicitor General of the United States, to be Attorney General is not expected to develop any major changes in the Department of Justice anti-trust prosecution policy. The new Attorney General, descendant of the first head of the Department of Justice, is believed to have become imbued with the viewpoint of his predecessor, now Supreme Court Justice, Frank Murphy, who was in substantial agreement with the policies of Thurman Arnold, head of the anti-trust division who established an all-time record in recent years for trust prosecutions in the fields of the motion picture, oil, labor and fertilizer.

That the new department head will follow the lines already laid down has been indicated by the fact that the anti-trust division has continued undisturbed in its program of monopoly suppression during the months since former Attorney General Murphy left for the Supreme Court, during which time Mr. Biddle has been acting head of the department.

For Draftees

A PLAN may develop extensively as a means of making home town papers available to selectees in camp at special subscription rates was arranged in Gloversville, N. Y., where Manager Lou Hart effected such a promotion as part of his campaign on "Caught in the Draft" at Schine's Hippodrome. Presentation of subscriptions and other gifts to a contingent of local selectees on the eve of their departure was held on the stage of the theatre on opening night of the picture. Further details and highlights of other new showmanship promotions are set down this week in Managers' Round Table, starting on page 55.

The Davis-Fox Case

THE second jury disagreement in the trial by the Federal Government of ex-Judge J. Warren Davis, in Philadelphia Federal Court, on charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States, brought reports this week from that city of a pending grand jury investigation of matters perhaps of interest to some of the big electric and communication systems.

William Fox, who pleaded guilty to a felony in the Davis case, and who was a witness against the former jurist, must stand trial. Meanwhile, talk now has it that the Fox matter will be "kept on ice" pending disposition of the Davis situation.

The Government contended that Judge Davis had conspired with William Fox, in a scheme to sell justice. The Government presented testimony designed to show that Mr. Fox made unsecured loans to Mr. Davis during the time the Fox bankruptcy proceedings were before the Appellate Court.

War Censorship

NAVY censorship Monday, cracked down on dramatic film production for the first time in knowledge in the present emergency. In Los Angeles harbor, a boarding party from the USS Nevada, according to press service wires, boarded the yacht of Eddie Albert, former Warner player, and halted location sea scenes for an independent production which Mr. Albert is making with director Irving Applebaum.

Marines and sailors, with sidearms, it was said, swarmed over the rail of the yacht Cynthia and seized cameras and 500 feet of film. After protests from director and actors the cameras were returned. Navy officers kept the film however, but promised it would be returned after developing if there were no battleships, belligerent vessels, or defense works visible.

"Kane" on Coast

WILLIAM Randolph Hearst owns two large Los Angeles newspapers, the Herald-Express, and the Examiner; he also owns other Western newspapers of influence.

Fox West Coast circuit operates a chain of houses in that territory.

Last year Orson Welles, young wonder-producer, did a picture entitled "Citizen Kane," much and timorously debated as to its possible relation to phases of the life story of Mr. Hearst. Mr. Hearst had nothing to say in print, or otherwise openly, about it. There were indications, however, that perhaps he was not fond of it. His papers were not.

"Citizen Kane" has played premieres in New York and a few other key cities and this week went to about a hundred theatres. Also this week the Fox West Coast circuit disclosed that it had acquired the film in RKO's first block-of-five—but would not play it.

RKO has no such hesitations. The home office, in New York, this week, indicated it would sell "Citizen Kane" in whatever locations FWC refused to play it. In Los Angeles, the RKO circuit's Hillstreet and Pantages theatres have bought the distributing company's first block.

FWC has 237 theatres, from San Diego to Seattle.

Truce on Previews

CONTROVERSY between the Los Angeles Times and studio executives on editorial policy relating to pictures and on the newspaper's request for relaxation of the rules against lay press reviews of pictures prior to release date, ended Wednesday night when the full membership of the studio publicity directors committee met with the Times managing editor, L. D. Hotchkiss and the cinema editor, Edwin Schallert, at the Times Building and agreed upon principles of cooperation satisfactory to both parties. Informed by the publicists that restrictions on previews were in the domain of home office executives who had declined to revise them pending further trial, the Times agreed to hold the issue in abeyance. Also the newspaper agreed to weigh suggestions for the handling of straight news of film affairs and film personalities.

Prior to Wednesday's meeting all but one of the companies which had curtailed advertising in the Times had restored normal schedules. It was said that this exception, Warners, would now resume use of space on a pre-dispute basis.

Also on Wednesday it was announced Columbia and Universal had joined the preview plan.

The preview bars were adopted with the inception of consent decree selling conditions and following a vigorous expression on the subject by Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA president, and subsequently implemented by Y. Frank Freeman, Producers Association president.

It will be recalled that the five companies signatory to the consent decree placed the previewing function, formerly a studio responsibility squarely in the domain of the distribution departments with the inauguration of advance trade shows. First to question the necessity of this change and to intimate publicly a questioning of motive was the Los Angeles Times' motion picture editor, Edwin Schallert, in an article which turned out to be the first of a sequence of articles examining the industry's policies in general and holding them to be less than perfect. Supporting Mr. Schallert up to and beyond a full dress hearing of issues reported in last week's MOTION PICTURE HERALD was Times publisher Norman Chandler supplying incidental leadership to lesser lights of lay journalism in Hollywood.

Breen Gets Lorentz

CONSUMMATION of contractual conversations between Pare Lorentz, cinematic documentarian, and Joseph I. Breen, RKO Radio production head, were disclosed late Wednesday by RKO, in the following announcement issued from the home office in New York:

"Pare Lorentz, whose . . . 'The Fight for Life' created a world-wide sensation when released a year ago, has been signed by Joseph I. Breen, vice president in charge of RKO Radio production, to write, produce and direct feature pictures for this company.

"The first man to make factual films of America, Lorentz attracted widespread attention with his . . . 'Plough That Broke the Plains,' a story of the dust bowl . . . for the United States Government. This was followed by 'The River,' which dealt . . . with erosion, and 'The Fight for Life,' dealing with childbirth. . . .

"Lorentz will immediately start work on an epic of modern American life. . . ."

Basic Agreement

THE IATSE this month will reenter the studio labor basic agreement from which it withdrew several years ago following the granting of full autonomy to studio locals, it was learned Wednesday night. Reentry will be made at the basic agreement conference set for New York September 20th and 21st, at which wage and hour scales and working conditions of six internationals now signatories to the basic agreement will be discussed with company executives. With the IATSE returning to the agreement fold all negotiations are taken entirely out of the hands of locals and at the same time there arises a query concerning possible revocation of autonomy for studio units.

Reaching a deadlock on the question of wage scales, the Screen Office Employes Guild in Hollywood on Wednesday notified representatives of MGM, RKO, Columbia, Universal and Republic that it had authorized negotiations to call a strike if an agreement was not reached by Friday noon.

An Aylesworth Deal

AT mid-week the indications were that when the dust settled it would be found that the much discussed move by the National Broadcasting Company to divest itself of its Artists Bureau, a booking agency, would disclose that Merlin H. Aylesworth, former president of NBC, former president of RKO Pictures Corporation, former publisher of the New York World Telegram, and currently a counsellor to industry, was the head and front of an organization taking over. It was said that a deal had been all but concluded for sale of the Artists Bureau to Daniel S. Tuthill, NBC executive, and that the project was being financed with Hollywood motion picture money, ostensibly, but unostentatiously, by the Myron Selznick organization.

The customary denials were variously issued by press representatives. The trio of executives concerned were not available.

Juke Priorities

THE CHICAGO Tribune of August 31 says: "A firm in which Capt. James Roosevelt, the President's eldest son, is vice-president and a heavy stockholder already is receiving a million dollars a year rental for films used in 3,000 movie juke boxes, and the future manufacture of thousands more of the boxes is assured because 'government departments want the machine for educational purposes and we expect to get priorities on materials.'

"This disclosure was made yesterday by Fred Mills, president of the Mills Novelty company, 4100 Fullerton avenue."

TALENT, LABOR SHAKEUP BRINGS 'NEW ORDER' HOME TO HOLLYWOOD

Early Season Production Rush Shows Effects of Decree; Increased Fluctuation in All Studio "Call Work" Expected

Consent decree selling might be believed by some to be solely the problem of the Big Five distributor signatories, but it's going to present problems, and major ones, to all Hollywood, from top producers and stars to the laborers on the black lot, before many months pass.

Seen as the most prominent effects of the decree, barring any radical changes in the entire production setup, are:

Severe fluctuation of employment in virtually all production crafts.

Upsurge in value of name players and the subsequent premiums placed on their services.

Increase in the number of "hyphenated" services, such as writer-director, writer-producer-director, and other combinations in the streamlining of production channels.

Most adversely affected will be labor, the thousands of workers on day to day calls, or on week to week salary bases, as indications are that the 1941-42 production-selling period will bring more week by week fluctuation in the number of man days worked than ever before.

At present the backstage crafts, the workers whose chief labors are to prepare for production, and the on-set crafts, such as cameramen, sound men, electricians and the like, are enjoying and have enjoyed for weeks, steady pay checks, plus overtime. However, the boom days in all probability will slack off immediately following the end of September, for the backlog of product up to September 1, the nominal start of the new season, totals approximately 120 pictures finished and about 70 in work for all companies—the eight majors and the three independents.

One Third Finished

To use a round figure, the 11 companies are expected to make about 500 pictures for the 1941-42 period and should 170 be finished by the end of September, more than one third of the entire year's projection machine fodder will have been in the cans at the end of the first month of the new sales period.

Looking at Hollywood as a whole, the policy of flexibility adopted by several companies and the constant need of preparation for new pictures will not materially affect the employment situation in the majority of crafts, because of the preponderance of pictures already finished and in work.

First studio to recognize the possibilities of employment lulls and adopt a program to rectify them, Warner Brothers this week announced a plan under which a minimum of six pictures would be kept before the cameras every working day of the coming year. Twelve features will be started within the next two months and preparations have been launched for 12 more to follow in the succeeding two months. The decision was made at conferences among H. M. and J. L. Warner, Hal B. Wallis, Gradwell Sears and S. Charles Einfeld.

"The use of stage space, lighting equipment and general manpower also will be staggered, cutting to a minimum layoffs between pictures," the announcement of the plan said.

Employment in the most picture crafts at best has been only casual, with many workers being enslaved to their telephones awaiting calls from their locals' hiring halls, directly from studios, from Central Casting, or from other means of hiring. Placements in all crafts have materially increased throughout the summer months over corresponding periods of other years, but a production letdown will mean the unemployment of thousands.

With defense industries calling various crafts workers, machinists, plumbers, carpenters and others, away from the industry, union leaders previously have pointed out to producers the need for minimum work guarantees in order to prevent a shortage of labor required for studio needs. The subject of work guarantees, discussed spasmodically for more than a year, will be brought up again at the studio basic labor agreement discussions, date for which has not yet been set. Seven unions and the major studios are signatories to the pact.

At present, few workers have any idea whether they will be working next week, or next month, most vociferous of the groups being the extra players whose status is that of day by day uncertainty.

The average of 2.5 roles for the 139 name players in pictures finished, in work and being prepared, as disclosed in the Motion Picture Herald of August 16—this before the full season's schedules are drafted—is expressive of the bent of the studios to seek marquee embellishments for their product. The natural inclination of the top players who work on a picture to picture basis, or who have contracts calling for so many pictures per year, is to place a limitation on their services for tax purposes and otherwise, thus putting the production companies in the position of adding enticements to their proffers of extended contracts to clinch the deals.

Signing of so many players for so many roles prior to the start of the new season's selling period is a singular occurrence, at least in recent production history.

Independents Hit

Walter Wanger, United Artists producer and president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, last week scored the consent decree in its effects on independent production.

"Designed to aid the independent exhibitors of films and incidentally to help independent production, the decree is working in exact reverse," he declared. "What has happened is this: The major companies all want to be in the position of having a good and sufficient supply of pictures to offer to the exhibitors during the trade showings. Consequently every bit of available talent is being tied up. This not only goes for stars, directors and the better writers, but extends even to cameramen and technicians.

"Agents for talent are having a veritable holiday. You can hardly talk to them about making contracts.

"You will note that several independent producers have already quit their own activities and lined up with the big companies.

"Here in United Artists our position as producers is strong, but even we are having difficulties over securing the necessary people for our enterprises.

"To my way of thinking, the decree is turning out to be a dangerous menace and a boomerang for the purposes for which it was intended."

Creation of new boxoffice personalities has engaged the attention of every studio more than ever before, because of the tying up of the "name" people. Each major studio has no less than six players being given buildups.

Promotion from Ranks

Considerable increase in the streamlining of production functions, such as writer-producer, director-writer and director producer contracts and the elevation of assistant directors and editors to directorial posts and other variations has been noted in recent months. The effect of this will be to have as producers and directors persons thoroughly versed in other phases of film making and capable of doing multi-facet jobs of turning out screen entertainment. Looking still further ahead, several studios have well defined programs of developing young potential actorial and directorial talent on feature pictures.

A survey of "hyphenated" contracts and recent promotions from the ranks follows:

Columbia has three producer-directors, Wesley Ruggles, George Stevens and Mitchell Leisen, and one writer-producer, Gene Markey, on its rolls. In addition, the studio recently signed Harold Klurman, Group Theatre director, as a writer-producer-director. Edward Dmytryk, former film editor, is also on the contract list.

Dore Schary, prominent writer, recently was made a production executive at MGM, co-head-

TRADE SHOWS SET FOR SHORT SUBJECTS

In accordance with the policy established at the Warner convention, Norman H. Moray, short subject sales manager, announced last week that the first national trade showing of short subjects would be held at the company's exchange cities during the week of September 8th. The time and place of the screenings will be set by the branch manager of each exchange, so as not to conflict with other trade showings in their locality.

Subjects to be trade shown include: "The Tanks Are Coming," a two-reel Service Special in color; "Kings of the Turf," a one-reel Sports Parade in color; "University of Southern California Band and Glee Club," a one-reel Melody Master Band; "40 Boys and a Song," a one-reel Melody Master; "Miracle Makers," a one-reel Hollywood Novelty; "Polo With the Stars," a one-reel Hollywood Novelty; "Minstrel Days," a two-reel Broadway Brevities; "All This and Rabbit Stew," a one-reel Merrie Melodies cartoon in color; and "Henpecked Duck," a one-reel Looney Tune cartoon.

A "bookers' goodwill short subjects contest" has been announced by Bernard Kreisler, Universal short subjects manager. The contest will run from August 29th to October 11th and prizes will be awarded in each of the company's seven districts.

Talent and Labor In Hollywood Hit By Decree Selling

ing a unit with producer Harry Rapf. King Vidor at the same lot is a director-writer and Clarence Brown, Robert Z. Leonard and Mervyn LeRoy are producer-directors. Writer Sam Marx is a producer.

In addition to producer-directors C. B. DeMille, E. H. Griffith, Mark Sandrich and Sam Wood, Paramount has Preston Sturges, writer-director; Elliott Nugent, writer-director; Ted Tetzlaff, cinamatographer-director; Lewis Allen, from the stage, as writer—co-director—director, and Stuart Heisler and Hugh Bennett, the latter two elevated from editors.

Producers Releasing Corp. has promoted writer Martin Mooney to rank of producer, heading his own unit.

Republic has Joe Kane, George Sherman and Bernard Vorhaus as producer-directors, and lately announced that Harriett Parsons, who is making a series of shorts for it, would serve as writer-director-producer on features. William Morgan and Lester Orlebeck, former cutters, are serving as directors. Jack Townley, writer, has been given directorial status, also.

With Orson Welles continuing as actor-writer-director-producer, RKO has Monte Brice as writer-director-producer; Frank Rayn and John Twist serving as writer-producers, and Lewis Milestone as producer-director.

Twentieth Century-Fox several weeks ago signed Arch Oboler, the radio figure, as writer-director-producer; Ernst Lubitsch joins the staff as producer-director Jan. 1, and Mark Hellinger, writer, is a producer. Milton Sperling, former writer, is working on his first picture as a producer. Full status as a producer has been given Ralph Dietrich, editor who was one of Darryl Zanuck's associate producers. Director Herbert I. Leeds is a former cutter.

At Universal, there are Gregory La Cava, William Seitzer and Frank Lloyd as producer-directors. Bruce Manning, writer, recently was made a producer, and his associate on his first picture, "Appointment for Love," is Frank Shaw, former assistant director. George Waggner has the status of writer-director-producer, and Alex Gottlieb, publicity man turned writer, has been given producer rank.

Warners has four writer-directors under contract, Paul Gerard Smith, John Huston, Vincent Sherman and Jean Negulescu, and one writer-producer, Jerry Wald. Jo Graham and Irving Rapper, dialogue directors, recently were promoted to full-fledged directors.

New Exploitation Plans

To give exhibitors added service in selling new product to more patrons, several publicity departments have been revamped to include field exploitation men working more or less directly from Hollywood.

Twentieth Century-Fox, having hired Hal Horne and his staff to carry on an extensive program of field exploitation from New York, has created a department of six persons at the studio which will make forays into the field to stimulate interest in new product. Arrangements are being made to take personalities to various openings throughout the country, and 12 girls are being sought to form a beauty troupe for flying visits.

Warners, in order to create more interest in its short subjects, created a special unit, headed by John Holmes, to exploit them, working directly from the studio.

MGM also made a special unit in its publicity department to stimulate attention in its featurettes, which under the consent decree must be sold independently of feature product.

Civil Liberties Group Protests Censor Ban

The American Civil Liberties Union, through its National Council on Freedom from Censorship, has protested the New York State Censors' ban of Steinback's "The Forgotten Village" as "dangerous of bureaucratic censorship" and has offered its services in any action which the film's distributors, Arthur Mayer and Josephn Burstyn, may take to lift the taboo. Quincy Howe, chief news commentator of the New York radio station, WQXR, is chairman of the Council.

On Tuesday Mr. Burstyn said that no legal action had been brought against the State censors to reverse decision, but he intimated that an injunction probably would be filed sometime this week.

Radio Networks Get Extension

Again deferring the effective date of its network regulations announced last May 2, the Federal Communications Commission has arranged to hear oral argument September 12 on the application of Mutual Broadcasting System for changes in the rules dealing with option time and the term of affiliation contracts.

The details of these two provisions were worked out over a period of weeks in a series of conferences with officials of National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System. The results were not satisfactory to Mutual, which favored the original much stronger regulations, and it filed an application for amendment last month.

Plan Tax Discussion

A round table discussion with representatives of broadcasters may be held in the near future on the subject of franchise taxes, it was disclosed Tuesday by Chairman James L. Fly of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. Fly said the commission, which has been studying the subject for two years or more, has as yet no specific formula for the tax, but "eventually something will be worked out."

He admitted that great difficulty is being encountered in developing an "agreeable" formula.

American Exchanges Close in Mexico

American film companies on Tuesday shut the doors of their Mexico City exchanges immediately after a strike called that day by the National Cinematographers Union against MGM and Columbia. The union represents office workers in the exchanges, and threatens to strike at all American majors' offices in the Mexican capital. The strike occurred after a breakdown of negotiations under the auspices of the city's mayor, Javier Romo Gomez.

The other American companies demonstrated their unity with MGM and Columbia, by the closing, despite respites offered them by the union, which named September 17th as their deadline.

The strike was the first since 1935 against American film companies. Mexico City industry observers fear the Americans will quit the country. Exhibitors especially are alarmed over a possible product famine.

Theatres Press USO Campaign

The "Theatre Week" drive of the United Service Organizations started officially in theatres throughout the country Labor Day and was to continue through Saturday. Approximately 10,600 theatres had pledged cooperation before the drive got under way, it was announced.

In several cities theatres opened their campaigns on Friday and Saturday. Exhibitor and distributor co-chairmen in exchange centers are in charge of the local drives which are co-ordinated from New York. Theatres for the most part are using collection boxes in lobbies, while others are making auditorium collections with the aid of USO workers. A goal of $1,500,000 has been pledged by the industry to the USO.

Allied States members were urged to support the industry's USO drive by Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel, in a message to regional leaders.

"No drive in which the theatres have been privileged to participate has had a more worthy object," Mr. Myer's letter said.

Joseph Kinsky of Tri-States Theatres in Omaha, in a letter to Joseph Bernard at the National USO Campaign office in New York described how his territory prepared for the campaign.

Morris Wolf, attorney for Warner Brothers, and Jay Emanuel, exhibitor-publisher, were selected as co-chairmen for the Motion Picture Division in Philadelphia's 1942 United Charities Campaign which gets under way in October. Associate members of the committee include Ted Schlanger, Warner theatres zone chief; Sidney E. Samuelson, business manager of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied; Lewen Pizor, president of United M.P.T.O.; and Mrs. Edna R. Carroll, chairman of the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors.

Republic Pictures Due For MPPA Membership

Republic Pictures Corporation may soon become a member of the Motion Picture Producers Association, it was forecast in Hollywood this week, following disclosure the latter organization would meet Monday and consider the producing company's application.

Herbert J. Yates founded Republic Laboratories in 1918. His Consolidated Film Industries now does the film processing. In May, 1935, Mr. Yates sponsored merging of four producing companies, to make Republic Productions, Inc. Later Republic Pictures Corporation was formed, to distribute the films through 17 franchise holders, and 16 of its own exchanges.

President of Republic Productions, Inc., is M. J. Siegel. President and general sales manager of Republic Pictures Corporation is James R. Grainger.

Summer Theatre for Rochester

The Rochester, N. Y., Summer Theatre moved into the city and indoors over Labor Day, presenting the stage version of "Yes, My Darling Daughter" at the RKO Palace theatre, under arrangements made by Jay Golden, manager. This is believed to be one of the first times a Summer Theatre has been booked to play a large house.

MARK OF SHOWMANSHIP

ARMY THEATRES GET SAME CLEARANCE FOR NEW FILMS AS REGULAR HOUSES

Schedules Allow Showings at Post Theatres Immediately After Neighborhood Datings; Theatres Asked to Cooperate

Clearance schedules in the vicinities of Army camps have been adjusted by the Army's motion picture booking office, and a special film industry clearance committee appointed. The plan is designed to soothe a long standing sore point which has caused some commanding officers to complain of lack of cooperation from exhibitors.

Last week from Washington came disclosure that beginning this week clearance which militated against Army theatres in local posts, would be adjusted so that films might be shown at the posts almost immediately after showing at the neighborhood houses.

Compulsion is said not to be a part of the agreement. It was understood some while ago that local exhibitors, asked to do so by the distributors, would allow greater availability of film to competitive Army theatres, as their gesture in the nation's defense—recognizing the need for maintaining soldier morale, and heeding protests from certain posts, in which men had complained of "old pictures." Some protests and possible refusals are expected. It was understood last week's agreement provided that distributors cut clearance on request of Army authorities, after asking cooperation of the individual exhibitor and, perhaps regardless of the protest of that exhibitor.

Complaints Cited

The Army Motion Picture Service New York office has consistently refused to publicly complain about clearance situations. However, that office did let it be known that it and the Washington headquarters were in continual conference with the film industry's clearance committee on situations which were unsatisfactory.

Reminded that the Federal consent decree provides arbitration of clearance complaints, a spokesman for the Service several weeks ago asserted the Army would not make use of it, preferring direct contact with distributors and exhibitors on the committee. On that committee are Francis Harmon, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; E. C. Grainger, of the Feiber and Shea circuit; Neil Agnew, Paramount; A. Montague, Columbia; Nathan Yamins, of National Allied; William Scully, Universal.

Although the films reaching Army theatres now are expected generally to be considerably newer, the admission prices are not expected to be changed. As a palliative to possible exhibitor objections the War Department says the approximately 300-odd Army theatres will play only to military personnel.

It was said that in some instances of complaint, there had been clearance of as long as 90 days, giving rise to the frequent trainee complaint of having seen the films in civilian life.

The clearance adjustment is regarded as merely part of the War Department's new desire to provide the best possible, in the circumstances, for soldier entertainment. The War Department has been made conscious of poor morale, if not by reports from its commanding officers, then by the numerous newspaper and magazine interviews and rumors anent soldier morale, especially since the Congressional approval of an additional 18 months' training.

Reported from Washington this week was the War Department's desire to provide, or have provided, "live shows" for every Army post in the country—shows similar to those provided by the U.S.O. and the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy, Inc., which have sent more than half a dozen traveling shows to many Army posts, but not to all. This entertainment program is still inadequate not only because of the numerous Army posts to be reached, but because the shows have only appeared once or twice in each camp.

Expansion Planned

The Army's Morale Branch, newly expanded and headed, is reported planning this extension of "live shows"; although how this will be done this week was still conjecture. One conjecture was that patriotically minded Broadway producers might be encouraged, or subsidized, to produce the shows. Their own services would be donated, their personnel would be paid on an Army-provided budget. In the reported plan, there would be a variety of show types, legitimate, minstrelsy, vaudeville, comedy, musicals.

It was further said the Army would work not directly, but through the already functioning Citizens' Committee.

New chief of the Army's Morale Branch is Frederick H. Osborn, whose appointment by President Roosevelt is still to be confirmed by Congress, and who succeeded Brigadier General James Ulio.

Meanwhile, even as the above reported plans were studied in Washington, the Morale Branch went ahead with promotion of amateur theatricals, issuing a "Manual for Amateur Theatricals," prepared by the National Theatre Conference.

It was said by Major Marvin Young, of the Branch, that 90 per cent of the Army's own endeavors would probably be musical. "Yip, Yip, Yaphank," in 1941 version, will be one of the first shows to be produced in the camps under the new impetus.

ASCAP TUNES FREE FOR ARMY SHOWS

In a blanket release given by Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, permission to use, without royalty charges, all ASCAP tunes was granted, for amateur shows presented by and for soldiers. The release was presented to Thomas J. Watson, chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy, Inc., of New York.

The signing of the formal agreement by Mr. Buck was witnessed by Barclay S. Leathem, executive secretary of the National Theatre Conference, which has joined the Citizens Committee in preparing a program of amateur shows for soldiers in the camps throughout the country.

President Roosevelt last week approved a nationwide $5,000,000 WPA project to provide 5,000 trained recreation leaders in military and industrial defense areas.

Certified as important to national defense by War Secretary Stimson, the project is sponsored by the Federal Security Agency which coordinated recreational activities in the defense program. Sports, entertainment, social events, crafts, informal recreational activities and other programs will be conducted by the recreation leaders in approximately 350 areas designated by the FSA.

Ninth Corps Area headquarters announced from San Francisco last week the early construction of three 1,000 seat theatres at Fort Ord, and four of 1,038 seats each, at Camp Roberts, same state, California.

Defense Tests

East Coast cities will have their first taste of conditions under "enemy" air attack when the Army Air Corps stages maneuvers to test its ability to locate and give battle to a "blitzkrieg" air fleet. Tests are scheduled for sometime between October 9th and 16th. Elaborate preparations are now under way for extensive blackouts, including theatre marquee lights, in key cities on the Atlantic seaboard to coordinate Air Corps and civilian defense measures. The entire mechanism will be commanded by Brig. General John C. McDonnell, First Interceptor Command of the First Air Force who will direct 240 planes and 43,000 civilians in the maneuvers.

Various blackouts and other tests have been in preparation for this major move but the pending maneuvers will be the largest ever undertaken, and are designed to improve the Army's basic system of air defense, utilizing all forces necessary to withstand any air fleet attacks. Citizen air raid wardens, volunteer first aid units and squads organized to clean up debris and generally assist in rescue work will be on hand for the key city blackouts.

The First Corps area which includes New York, roughly extends from Norfolk, Va., to Boston and as far West as Harrisburg and Scranton, Pa.

Ohio will see its first war time condition blackout Saturday, when Lima darkens at 10:05 P.M. that evening.

Rogers with RKO

Charles "Buddy" Rogers, film actor and orchestra leader, has been signed by RKO for a top role in the next "Mexican Spitfire" pictures, starring Lupe Velez and Leon Errol. The deal also calls for an option on Mr. Rogers' future services on a long term contract basis.

Two Warner Promotions

William Berns of Warners' publicity and advertising department in New York has been promoted to assist Mrs. Isabel Turner in the radio department. Morton Brill has been promoted to Lee Blumberg's theatre exploitation staff.

Roach Color Feature

Hal Roach has announced that his first streamlined feature to be produced in color, "Fiesta," a musical comedy with a Mexican background, has gone before the camera. The romantic leads will be announced shortly.

WILLKIE, RETAINED BY THE MAJORS, PREPARES FOR WASHINGTON FRAY

Industry Leaders Prepare to Cite Record of Service to Patriotism at Hearing on Wheeler-Nye-Clark Charges

Led by Wendell L. Willkie, its special counsel, the motion picture industry will be ready to present an "all-out" rebuttal to Senatorial charges of "inciting to war" when it appears next week before a subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce committee. The screen is ready and willing, spokesmen indicated, to cite verse and chapter from its record of patriotic service to refute allegations that it is spreading war propaganda.

Mr. Willkie, the 1940 Republican presidential candidate, disclosed on Monday that he had been retained by the industry to present its case. He immediately asked for and received a week's postponement of the subcommittee's hearings, in order to give him time to prepare his case. The five Senators appointed to the subcommittee by Senator Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee postponed the initial sessions from Tuesday for one week, until September 9th.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., served notice on Saturday by letter to Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman of the subcommittee, that while the industry would cooperate with the committee in supplying pertinent facts, its denial of the "war mongering" charges would be vehement. Accusations, frequently voiced by Senators Wheeler, Clark, Gerald P. Nye and other isolationists, that the films are in the hands of "groups interested in involving the United States in War" are "false and shameful," Mr. Hays wrote. He branded the charges as a threat to the freedom of expression.

Willkie's First Case

Austin C. Keough, chairman of the MPPDA legal committee and general counsel of Paramount made the announcement that Mr. Willkie had been engaged to speak for the films when the Senators start their probe of alleged screen and radio propaganda. This will be the first case in which Mr. Willkie has made a public appearance as counsel since he reentered law practice with the firm of Willkie, Owen, Otis and Bailly at New York following the presidential campaign.

A cue to the probable course of the industry rebuttal was seen Wednesday when Mr. Willkie, by telephone revealed that he was occupied with Mr. Hays and other film leaders in a thorough study of the record of film production and content. He declined to comment on projected strategy for the hearings, but indicated that while there might be some question of the Clark committee's investigatory powers, the film industry would ignore it, welcoming the opportunity for a factual reply to the critics who have alleged propaganda.

"The pictures which have been produced are the best proof of the falsity of the charge that the industry has been engaged in a gigantic campaign to get this country into war," Mr. Hays also said in his letter to Senator Clark, "Upon this we will present complete and detailed information."

Details of the industry testimony and counter attack were under discussion this week among Mr. Willkie, Mr. Hays, Mr. Keough and top executives and lawyers of the major film companies. Beyond the letter to Senator Clark and news release sent to the press generally by Mr. Hays last Saturday, however, there will be no further official word on industry plans until the hearings begin.

On the legal committee of the MPPDA, which is assisting Mr. Willkie in the preparation of his case are, in addition to Mr. Keough, J. Robert Rubin, of MGM, Joseph H. Hazen of Warners, and Herbert Freston, Mendel Silberberg, and Maurice Benjamin, Los Angeles attorneys for the Motion Picture Producers Association who flew east to join in the preparations.

Hearings will begin Tuesday, it is understood, with testimony by Senators Gerald P. Nye and Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri, co-authors of the resolution which directed Senator Wheeler, Interstate Commerce Committee chairman, to appoint a subcommittee to determine the need for an investigation of film propaganda. They will be followed by Jimmy Fidler, Hollywood columnist, who promised "revelations" for the committee and by industry leaders who accepted the "invitation" of the subcommittee to testify. The group has no power of subpoena, or appropriation for a full-fledged investigation of its own.

Film executives who will testify, press wire services reported from Washington after interviewing Chairman Clark, include Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., Harry M. Warner, president of Warners, Barney Bala-

Will H. Hays Tells Senator Clark Charges Are "False, Shameful"

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in accepting an invitation to appear before the Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee wrote Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman, that charges that films sought to incite the public to war were "false and shameful". The record of production will prove them utterly false, he said. The text of Mr. Hays letter, dated August 30, 1941, follows:

"My dear Senator Clark:

"You have invited me to appear before your Sub-committee considering proposed Senate Resolution 152, and as you have been advised, I welcome the opportunity to do so.

"The Resolution is based upon charges that the motion picture industry has been engaged in propaganda 'designed' to incite the American people to war and that the alleged propaganda 'is in the hands of groups interested in involving the United States in war.'

"No more false and shameful accusation could be made, striking as it does not only at the loyalty of the persons concerned, but at the quality and extent of their personal patriotism to a country and cause in which they so vitally and sincerely believe. This accusation is baseless. It is resented and indignantly denied.

"In order that your Committee may prepare for its hearings on this Resolution, it seems proper that you be advised of the position of the motion picture industry.

"The industry will prove that the charges made against it are wholly unsupported by the facts and constitute an unjustified attack upon, and challenge to, the fundamental American principle of freedom of expression.

"The freedom of the screen like the freedom of the press, radio and other means of expression is an essential pillar of American liberty. No freedom is secure if the motion picture may not dramatize what the press prints, what the air carries, what the magazines serve to their readers, what book publishers present in current literature, or what the living stage portrays of the world scene of today. Regardless of how great the pressure, the industry cannot cease to resist every attempt to prevent the exercise of such rights. The industry recognizes the distinction between liberty and license as is evidenced by its self-regulation in the field of morality, decency and good taste, and by its impartial presentation of economic and political issues.

"We have been accused of using the screen 'as an instrument of Government propaganda.' We conceive it to be the obligation and duty of the industry to cooperate in every way with our Government in connection with the National Defense Program recommended by the President and adopted by the Congress of the United States. To this end, the motion picture screen has taken its place with other media of information, education and entertainment to mirror and aid the Country's gigantic effort to train and equip a vastly expanded army, construct a two-ocean navy, and transform our industrial machinery for adequate and complete national defense. No charge of 'propaganda' can alter the duty of the industry to reflect upon the screen these needs of our democracy at a time when it is imperilled.

"To yield to the demand that picture makers ignore the fact that we live in an era of destruction and tyranny that surpasses the blackest period of barbarism, that all the principles upon which American life is based are being destroyed in a great part of the world, would best serve the purposes and interests of the most bitter enemies of our way of life. There can be no compromise by the industry with respect to this issue.

"It has been charged that the industry has been engaged in a 'gigantic campaign of propaganda to get this Country into war.' The pictures which have been produced are the best proof of the utter falsity of this charge. Upon this we will present complete and detailed information.

In closing may I respectfully say that the motion picture industry will cooperate fully with your Committee by making available every pertinent fact in connection with the matter covered by this hearing.

"Will H. Hays, President Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc."

NEW MANAGERS' UNION AFTER N. Y. CIRCUITS

New Group Makes Bid for Jurisdiction; Disney Studio Extends Shutdown Two Weeks

New York's theatres, at peace through a series of contracts with the country's strongest projectionists' union, Local 306, of the American Federation of Labor, and with the Empire State Operators' Union, an independent union, this week faced renewed labor strife with the appearance of the "Exhibition, Exposition Entertainment Employees National Union," which, according to its lawyer, Gustave Gerber, is seeking recognition and a contract from the large RKO chain.

The union presumably would organize the "front of the house" employees untouched by the organiztaional efforts of the projectionists and other AFL unions. The new union is reported to be unaffiliated, and represents a successor to the ill-starred motion picture division of the Theatrical Managers and Agents Union, which holds a charter for such employees from the AFL. This unit collapsed over a year ago, and no efforts have been made by the TMAU to revive it, according to that union's officials who also maintain the AFL charter still contains the right to organize film house managers and other executive employees.

The Exhibition, Exposition Entertainment Employees National Union embraces managers, assistant managers, and treasurers, according to a letter sent members of the "RKO unit" by Mr. Gerber Wednesday, August 27th.

Office Employees Organized

Meanwhile, also in New York, the majors' home offices again heard rumblings among their "white collar" personnel, with an organizational meeting Thursday evening, August 28th, of the Paramount Pictures Employees Association of Greater New York.

Circulars distributed the day previous disclosed no affiliation with other office employees' unions, but they did say that organization of such employees at Warners was almost complete, and that Columbia would follow. They boasted, too, that the union idea was spreading in the home offices of Twentieth Century Fox and Loew's.

The office employees union at Universal's New York home office belongs to the AFL.

In the same city, last week, the Harry Harris circuit sued in New York Supreme Court to prevent arbitration by Joseph Basson, Local 306 president, and Bert Popkin, its business agent, of a wage increase under a union contract signed March 23rd, 1938. The union had notified the Harris circuit the two men would arbitrate the question.

In Hollywood, the Walt Disney studio extended its shutdown two more weeks, designating the opening day as September 15th. Delay in reopening was blamed on the illness of Federal conciliator James Dewey, ill in a hospital. Mr. Dewey is to consider differences between the studio and the Screen Cartoonists Guild, which several weeks ago ended a 62-day strike. The Guild met last week to consider the situation but no action was announced. The studio has about 75 employees working, on Canadian Government military training film.

Possible picketing and other embarrassments of Mr. Disney's tour of South America were forecast last week, with transmission of a letter of warning from William Littlejohn, Guild president, to Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Littlejohn charged the Disney studio with failure to comply with the strike settlement, and warned that labor organizations in South America "are being contacted, and arrangements made to picket Disney's tour and his pictures."

He also asked the State Department to "insist that Disney comply with the Government (strike) award, and American standards of fair treatment of labor, including all Federal statutes, before permitting Disney to represent the United States as a good-will ambassador in South America."

IATSE Awaits Negotiations

Also in the production capital, other labor matters bubbled with increasing impatience manifested by the ten IATSE unions who have been awaiting reopening of negotiations on wages and hours scales and conditions, following the reclassification of studio workers earlier in the year.

The studio projectionists union, Local 165, met Sunday to discuss a strike. The photographers union, Local 659, met last week with producers, on new demands.

It was understood that, in addition to matters pertaining to hours and pay, the cameramen's union also wants sole jurisdiction over still photographers who have no relation to the American Society of Cinematographers.

Incumbent officers of the Screen Actors Guild were renominated last week. They are Edward Arnold, president; George Murphy, vice-president; Paul Harvey, second vice-president; Walter Abel, third vice-president; Lucile Gleason, recording secretary; and Porter Hall, treasurer.

In New York, rumors of organization of film bookers in the major's exchanges persist. There is at present a Motion Picture Bookers club, comprising the bookers for majors and the circuits, and independent booking offices.

Negotiations in Chicago between the city's theatre owners, and the projectionists' union took place last week, and were scheduled to continue this, with the union asking a ten per cent general wage increase and two weeks' vacation with pay.

In Detroit, the new IATSE local for lower wage scale theatre employees is negotiating with the Cooperative Theatres chain.

In Columbus, Ohio, Common Pleas Court Judge Joseph M. Clifford last week granted a temporary injunction restraining members of the projectionists Local 386, or other IATSE unions, from picketing three restaurants using coin-operated music machines, serviced by non-union maintenance men. The petitioner in this instance was Panoram.

Musicians, Warners Settle Dispute

Disagreement between the American Federation of Musicians and Warner Brothers Philadelphia theaters was settled Wednesday in N. Y., as a conference between James Petrillo, AFM president, and Frank N. Phelps, Warner theater labor negotiator. Settlement was reached after negotiations between Warners and the Philadelphia musicians local broke down and Mr. Petrillo intervened and took a direct hand in the negotiations.

The Musicians' contract with Warners was extended for one year without change.

Willkie Prepares For Senate Fray

ban, president of Paramount, and Darryl F. Zanuck, of 20th Century-Fox.

After hearing the motion picture producers the committee, said Senator Clark, will inquire into the workings of the "March of Time," calling Louis de Rochemont, producer, and Henry Luce, head of Time, Inc. Meanwhile the committee is compiling data, and reviewing films, the Idaho Senator revealed, which "deal with controversial subjects."

Senator Wheeler clashed with the "March of Time" last January when he charged that the reel unfairly edited his comments and refused equal footage to isolation spokesmen discussing defense issues.

The purpose of the subcommittee, according to its chairman, is to build up a record "so that the Senate may decide upon the question of launching a full investigation." Specific Senate authorization to probe the films would carry power to subpoena witnesses and funds to hire investigators.

The members of the subcommittee were appointed by Senator Wheeler, chairman of the powerful Interstate Commerce Committee, a leader of isolationist groups and frequent critic of motion pictures. In addition to D. Worth Clark (Dem.), of Idaho, chairman, members are Senators Ernest W. MacFarlane (Dem.), of Arizona, Homer T. Bone (Dem.), Washington, Charles W. Tobey (Rep.), New Hampshire, and C. Wayland Brooks (Rep.), Illinois. With the exception of Senator MacFarlane all have been outspoken critics of Administration foreign policy and aid to Britain.

The general press and Washington observers on Wednesday were predicting certain clashes between Mr. Willkie and the isolationist Senators if he is granted cross-examination of committee witnesses. Mr. Willkie since his defeat in the presidential election has been outspoken in his support of President Roosevelt's foreign policy.

Papers Praise Stand

Editorial support for the motion picture industry and a vigorous condemnation of the subcommittee hearing as a "witch hunt" and assumption of unauthorized power appeared this week in the New York Post and the Washington Post.

The Washington paper, voicing approval of Mr. Hays' letter to Senator Clark wrote:

"His is a substantial answer to the propaganda charge. But it does not take into account the chief reason for the appearance of films to which the isolationists object. And that is that people like them—which has been and always will be the basis of the Hollywood success formula. It is a discouraging thought for the committee members."

Last week at Buffalo additional public support was voiced before the Jewish War Veterans convention by Professor James H. Sheldon, chairman of the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League who charged that the investigation was prompted by isolationists not to uncover propaganda but to "strangle the agencies of democratic expression." Mr. Sheldon charged that the Clark committee had omitted to examine the activities of Ufa Films, Inc., German motion picture importer at New York or any of several companies "which have been actively and openly engaged in circulating and exhibiting films which everybody acknowledges to be barefaced Nazi and Fascist propaganda."

Discrimination in the summonsing of motion picture leaders to appear at the hearings was also cited by Mr. Sheldon.

"All except one of those invited, bear a conspicuously Jewish name," he said. "The requests to appear were not issued to companies, as might have seemed natural, but rather to individuals, thus making it possible to emphasize the Jewish origin of the persons concerned."

NO HOUSE OF CARDS IS M-G-M!

There's food for thought as the New Season begins—
The past Summer will not be soon forgotten.
While others wavered M-G-M spoke up boldly and said:
"We will not hold back—
We'll deliver our Biggest Pictures when they're needed most!"
When "Life Begins for Andy Hardy" roared into the headlines
Topping every Hardy hit in the entire series, it looked like
The climax of a memorable period.
But August's close had yet another triumph—
"When Ladies Meet" ends our season with glory!
A whirlwind finish to a great year.
Like "Boom Town" and "Philadelphia Story"
It was a natural for a Four-Star line-up!
Crawford, Taylor, Garson, Marshall,
All in one brilliant entertainment.
Only one company can do it—
It's been going on for years.
M-G-M is built to withstand any change!
And so in the changing year 1941-42
For your stability and security there's the One and only—The Friendly Company!

NEW WAR TAX OF 15% WILL COST INDUSTRY ANOTHER $107,900,000

Graduated Scale Set Up for Prices Up to 50 Cents, with Fractions Eliminated; Final Draft Is Third Version

With all exemptions eliminated and a tax on admissions roughly running at 15 per cent, the Senate Finance Committee on Tuesday reported its version of the 1941 tax bill, under which it is estimated the amusement industries principally motion pictures will pay an increased revenue of approximately $107,900,000 annually in ticket taxes.

In its report, submitted Wednesday, the Finance Committee explained that the admission tax schedule would return approximately $191,000,000 for the first full fiscal year, as against $83,100,000 under the present law. The House bill, the report said, would increase the yield approximately $60,000,000 over the present law and the increase of rate to 15 per cent would add another $45,900,000.

The Senate late Wednesday accepted the sliding scale of admission taxes and approved the action of its Finance Committee in striking out the House tax provision on radio advertising.

Differing from the House-approved bill in many respects, the Senate measure omitted the 5-to-15 per cent tax on radio advertising, but reduced the personal exemptions to $1500 for heads of families and $750 for single persons, and made adjustments in a number of the excise levies.

In the course of its drafting of the bill, the committee returned three times to the admission tax provision, after initially approving the House proposal for reduction of the exemption from 20 to nine cents.

Too Many Fractions

On its first reconsideration, the committee adopted the exhibitor suggestions that the exemption be dropped entirely and that the tax on cut-rate tickets sold children, scholars and men in uniform be applied on the price actually paid.

Twenty-four hours later, the committee decided to increase the rate of tax to 15 per cent. The following day it concluded that a 15 per cent tax would result in too many fractions, as in the case of a 30-cent ticket, on which the tax would be 4½ cents. The committee then determined upon a definite schedule, as follows:

Admissions Not Exceeding
10 cents	1 cent tax
15 cents	2 cents tax
20 cents	3 cents tax
25 cents	4 cents tax
35 cents	5 cents tax
40 cents	6 cents tax
45 cents	7 cents tax
50 cents	8 cents tax

Admissions over 50 cents are to be 15 per cent and, where the tax includes a fraction of one-half cent or more, the fraction is to be extended to one cent.

It was pointed out that the Committee schedule incorporated the plea of representatives of the MPTOA and Allied to kill the exemption entirely. It was also pointed out that the Senate bill also provides for the tax concessions asked by the exhibitors for children's tickets and carries a stipulation that reduced price tickets sold persons under 18 years of age shall be taxable only on the price paid.

The new tax scale was reported to the Senate Tuesday, and at mid-week, consideration of the bill was beginning. Washington observers believed the Senate committee proposals would go through substantially as reported. Leaders in the Senate predicted passage after two to three days' debate.

Exempted are civic concerts, in instances where no profits accrue to stockholders; and, previously, agricultural fairs.

After protesting the levy, newsreel companies received from the committee a refund of the 10 per cent tax on film, in instances they can demonstrate the film was used in newsreels, not in commercial films.

The estimated yield from the tax on photographic apparatus, according to the committee, will be $9,900,000 per year.

In the House, last week, Bertrand W. Gearhart, Republican Representative of California, called the proposed taxation "a greater burden than admissions can carry.

He added: "There is a limit to all things; and I believe 10 per cent all admissions can bear. We certainly don't want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg."

Polling of House sentiment revealed some dissent from the Senate committee tax version and some opposition is expected in the lower chamber. Capitol Hill watchers also noted the close vote for the taxation in the Senate committee, ten to eight.

As the Senate committee members left last weekend for three days rest, they indicated there would be no reconsideration of the 15 per cent rate decision.

The film industry was represented at the Senate committee hearings by Abram F. Myers, general counsel to the National Allied States Association, and Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, both of whom spoke several weeks ago, opposing unfair levies, and asking for elimination of exemptions.

Anent the dropping of the tax on broadcasting, Senator Walter George, of Georgia, chairman of the Senate committee, remarked last week that the group had not given up the plan, that it had merely instructed the Treasury Department and the Joint Committee on Revenue Taxation, to study a possible franchise tax.

In the Senate tax bill, coin-operated machines are to be taxed thus: $10 for each "non-gaming device"; $200 on each gaming device. The House proposals had asked a $25 tax on gaming machines, asked none on non-gaming machines.

Bowling alleys and pool and billard parlors must pay $10 taxes.

In New York, last week, after the Senate proposals became known, Marcus Heiman, president of the League of New York Theatres, asserted, of the 15 per cent tax rate: "It is possible the Treasury would get less at 15 per cent than at 10 per cent. Ten per cent is high enough, especially for the higher priced seats."

Actors Equity council after a meeting Tuesday wired to more than a dozen Senators:

"The Actors Equity Association, on behalf of all actors, actresses, and chorus people of the dramatic and music theatres, protests against the contemplated 50 per cent raise in the amusement tax. It believes such an increase would do irreparable damage to an already overburdened theatre which is struggling to preserve the morale and enhance the culture of the people of this country in this emergency under adverse conditions, and would lead to increased unemployment. It urges that the present ten per cent tax be not disturbed for at least another year."

Shumlin, Kuykendall Protest

Herman Shumlin, producer, assailed the new rate, and said the theatre was "burdened enough."

Ed Kuykendall, speaking for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which he is president, on Monday, in his home town, Columbus, Mississippi, called the 15 per cent rate "outrageous." Warning "there is no time to lose", he asked all exhibitors to protest to Congressmen, and said the MPTOA would fight the new rate to the end.

The Rochester Civic Music Association officially opposed the new taxation.

Ohio exhibitors have been asked by "Pete" Wood, executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, to wire Senators to vote against the proposed new 15 per cent rate on theatre admissions.

Mr. Wood, as well as others in the film industry, expected to be in Washington this week, to register protest.

Pennsylvania Amends

The Pennsylvania State Penal Code was amended last week by Governor Arthur James's signature to a bill providing no minors (18 years or younger) be employed in places selling liquor.

The amendment was reported not affecting the present age limit of 15 for employees in theatres.

The bill, as first written, would have prevented employment of those under 18 years, in any place of entertainment.

Last week state secretary of labor and industry Lewis G. Hines issued a warning to all employment agencies in Pennsylvania that they must be licensed by his department after August 30 or face drastic penalties. The licensing is mandatory under a law passed by the state legislature and signed by Gov. James July 31. It embraces placement services, nurses registries, theatrical booking agencies and all types of employment bureaus which charge fees either directly or indirectly.

Sunday films, much discussed in the state, will be on the ballot in this Fall's primary elections.

Bombing A Felony

Governor Forrest C. Donnell of Missouri has signed a bill making it a felony to toss a stench bomb. The measure was supported by St. Louis exhibitors. Formerly the offense was a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or jail sentence or both; now an individual convicted for this crime may be sentenced to two years in prison.

LOCAL NEWSREELS BUILD BUSINESS

News pictures taken by Bert Hanson, manager of the Rialto theatre in Butte, Montana, and incorporated in the newsreel shown in the theatre, brought the house one of its best grosses of the year, Mr. Hanson reports. The subject was the opening of the first grass golf greens on Butte's Country Club course.

HOLLYWOOD AGAIN NO. 1 SOURCE OF AIR PROGRAMS AND TALENT SUPPLY

New Broadcasting Season to Bring More Shows Starring Film Personalities; Comedians Set in New Weekly Shows

Labor Day, last Monday, turned another new season for radio, as with the screen and stage. And, again, the multi-million-dollar roster of Hollywood acting, writing and directing talent becomes the first source of talent supply for entertainment on the air waves, and Hollywood continues in the lead as the site of program origination.

Again radio will dip into Hollywood for its main and minor program requirements, with hardly a studio or performer not contributing, after a two months' summer lay-off.

Abbott-Costello Set

The National Broadcasting Company has tentatively slated some new shows with Abbott and Costello for the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy spot, (Chase and Sanborn) Sundays, 8:00-8:30 P.M. NBC also has scheduled Frank Fay for Thursdays, 10:30-11:00 P.M. ("Tums," Lewis Howe Company). Mr. Fay will call upon many Hollywood personalities to fill in as guest stars. "The Great Gildersleeve," another new NBC spot, Sunday nights, 6:30-7:00 (Kraft Company) will be a variety show featuring guest stars from the Gold Coast. "Highlights from Hollywood," an NBC short-wave show, premiered over the week-end, featured Robert Sterner, executive art director of the Walt Disney Studios as guest. This program, which will be beamed to England every Saturday, 11:30 to 12:00 noon and re-broadcast to South America, 11:30 to 12:00 midnight the same day, will present film stars, producers, directors and executives from Hollywood and will include a few minutes of Hollywood news and gossip, with commentator Nancy Marshall, a West Coast NBC actress.

The Columbia Broadcasting System is bringing Bob Burns to the air in his own show, "The Arkansas Traveler" (Campbell Soup Company) on a Tuesday night spot, 8:30-8:55. CBS also signed Orson Welles for a new series of programs on Mondays, 10:00-10:30 P.M. Mutual Broadcasting launches "Three Ring Time," a new variety show starring Charles Laughton, Milton Berle, Shirley Ross and Bob Crosby, on September 12th. Another MBS new program, George Fisher, Hollywood Reporter, will premiere on September 28th, for Sundays, 1:15-1:30 P.M. This will be a gossip potpourri.

Last Friday, CBS launched a new national defense program, "Proudly We Hail," 8:30-8:55 P.M., starring Ray Milland, who flew from the West Coast to New York for participation in this show which is dedicated to and written about America's civilian defense industry workers. Mr. Milland was commentator in a "real-life" drama about happenings "behind the scenes" in California's Vultee Aircraft plants. It is reported that all three networks probably will sponsor similar "Government" shows to help build public morale, drawing heavily on Hollywood talent for audience attraction. Since early summer, CBS has air-waved "The Treasury Hour" on a 13-week Wednesday night spot, sponsored by the Texas Oil Company. This show will be switched to NBC after October 1st, for another 13-week run, with Bendix Aviation Corporation taking over the radio time payments for the Treasury Departments plug in the sale of defense bonds and savings.

In addition to the new shows scheduled, both NBC and CBS are returning to the air within the next three weeks. Following perennial summer "lay-offs," the regular, popular programs in which Hollywood names figure so prominently. Following is a list of the shows:

The Mutual Broadcasting-Don Lee network on the West Coast will again use a considerable amount of Hollywood talent. Their new season's programs are now in the making.

In addition to these regularly sponsored shows, all three networks will carry during the forthcoming season, charity programs which feature Hollywood stars predominantly. Last year, practically every large charitable organization which presented a nation-wide program, depended to a great extent upon the industry's stars, producers and directors for program entertainment. In all cases, these Hollywood luminaries contributed their time and talent. Among the notable charity shows were: the President's Infantile Paralysis Drive; United China Relief Campaign; United Service Organization and the American Red Cross.

Garbo Holds Out

Program and publicity department staff members of both NBC and CBS agree that practically every major Hollywood actor and actress has appeared on one or more radio programs within the last ten years, with the exception of Greta Garbo. Nobody can remember Miss Garbo's ever appearing on a radio broadcast, whether sponsored or charity.

The Screen Actors Guild program, Screen Guild Theatre, on CBS, probably holds the record for Hollywood "name" appearances. Since its debut in January, 1939, more than 300 top-ranking stars and feature players have contributed their time and talent to the show, presented by the Guild, under the sponsorship of the Gulf Oil Corporation. It is estimated that $800,000, representing funds which ordinarily would have been paid to Hollywood actors for their performances, has gone into the treasury of the Motion Picture Relief Fund which the Guild maintains. The Screen Guild Theatre is supported by the Screen Writers Guild, the Motion Picture Producers Association, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the Screen Directors Guild. All members of these groups are available for preparation and presentation of the Guild shows.

EDGAR BERGEN TALKS ON "LITTLE THEATRE"

Prior to his one night personal appearance at Multnomah Stadium in Portland, Ore., Edgar Bergen, ventriloquist of stage, screen and radio, said, "I would like to see someone take a motion picture theatre that has a stage and combine it with a little theatre of the town. Then give a two or three-act play and a good picture. That would bring 'em out.

"Then once a week, this new theatre could display the best still photographs taken in the town by local people. And two or three times a week give afternoon teas for the ladies and old gentlemen and members of the press."

Arthur Leaves Republic

George Arthur, Republic associate producer, has obtained a release from his contract with the studio.

FEATURE COMMITMENTS FOR '40-41 97% DELIVERED BY DISTRIBUTORS

Only Eight to Come on Last Season's Program; New Lists Indicate No Change in Number of Pictures for 1941-42

For the 1941-42 motion picture year the ten major film companies—five of which will operate under the consent decree—will deliver the same number of pictures as they have in the past. According to product announcements there will be delivered in the next 12 months from 528 to 547 feature productions. This compares with the 528 to 540 promised for 1940-41 of which 512, or 97 per cent were delivered to Labor Day, September 1st, with eight still to come on last year's program—only eight less than the minimum promised. This is an all-time record for deliveries. Five of the eight coming are from PRC.

The cleanup this year also is a record, occasioned by the big production splurge in advance on 1941-42 product, to meet the advance selling under the decree. As reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on August 23, pages 12-16, the companies had 119 features for 1941-42 ready and in the can.

No Decrease Indicated

From the five companies which will sell their product under the terms of the decree there has been no noticeable drop in the product promised for the new year as compared with previous seasons. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer promised 44 to 52 features and to September 1st delivered 51. The company has announced they will deliver the same number of pictures for 1941-42. Paramount delivered 51 of the 52 to 56 that the production scheduled called for including six Harry Sherman "Hopalong Cassidy" westerns, and has announced delivery of 45 features for next year. RKO Radio has delivered 47 of the 53 features announced at the beginning of the 1940-41 season, and have announced that they will deliver 40 to 45 this current season. Warner Brothers have delivered the complete number of films promised —48 in all—and have announced the same number for the new production schedule.

Non-decree signers for the most part have increased their production schedules of the number of pictures they will release during the new season. Columbia plans 64 features as compared with the 60 announced for the past year, which also includes 16 westerns both years. Monogram has increased their schedule from 48 to 48 pictures. Producers Releasing Corporation will deliver 42 features this year as compared to the 38 announced for 1940-41. Republic likewise has increased their schedule from 58 films last year to 62 for the current season. United Artisst, which promised 22 for 1940-41, will deliver from 20 to 25 during the next 12 months. Universal has boosted its schedule from 59 to 63 pictures for the new year.

Remaining on the 1940-41 schedule are eight pictures—two from Columbia, five from Producers Releasing Corporation and one from Republic.

Columbia has "Prairie Stranger" and "You'll Never Get Rich," to be released September 18th and September 25th, respectively, to wind up last year's program. On the Producers Releasing 1940-41 program remains "Dangerous Lady," September 12th; "Jungle Man," a special, September 19th; "Mr. Celebrity," October 10th; "Lone Rider No. 6," October 17th, and "The Blonde Comet" on November 17th. Republic still has "Down Mexico Way" to be released September 18th.

With only these eight still to be released the studios and home offices spent the greater part of the spring and summer preparing new pictures for selling under the decree. After a wave of unprecedented summer activity they have completed a backlog of more than 184 films in preparation or finished and in the can ready for exchanges throughout the country.

To date Columbia has 17 features set with release dates. They are: "Mystery Ship," September 4th; "Harmon of Michigan," September 11th; "Ladies in Retirement," September 18th; "Two Latins from Manhattan," October 2nd; "Texas," October 9th; "Blonde from Singapore," October 16th; "Roaring Frontier," October 16th; "Three Girls About Town," October 23rd; "Men in Her Life," October 30th; "Bachelor's Baby," November 6th; "Secrets of the Lone Wolf," November 13th; "You Belong to Me," November 20th; "Go West Young Lady," November 27th; "Sing for Your Supper," December 4th; "Honolulu Lou," December 11th; "Gloria Is Willing," December 18th, and "Harvard Here I Come," December 25th.

Film Actors Named for Theatre Guild Shows

Film names who will have prominent roles in a series of six revivals of former Broadway stage successes planned for the 1940-42 season have been announced by the Theatre Guild. The six plays to be revived will be selected from eight under consideration and will be given at least four-week runs at the Guild Theatre. The revival series is separate from the usual Guild subscription series.

Guild officials also said that they have received a cable from Vivien Leigh saying that she expected to appear in "Caesar and Cleopatra" with Sir Cedric Hardwicke and that she would like to appear in this play under Guild auspices.

Harry Carey will appear in the first revival, "Ah, Wilderness!" which will start rehearsals this month. The remaining seven under consideration are "The Rivals," with Mary Boland; "He Who Gets Slapped," with Raymond Massey; "R.U.R.," with the stars not yet selected; "John Gabriel Bjorkman," with Charles Laughton, Elsa Lanchester and Eva Le Gallienne; "The Devil's Disciple," with Spencer Tracy; "Desire Under the Elms," with Walter Huston, and "Alice In Wonderland," with Miss Le Gallienne.

Colonnade Pictures Set for Monogram

George Hirliman, executive producer of Colonnade Studios, has completed arrangement whereby Monogram will release all the company's product.

First of seven pictures to be released under the new contract will be "Here Come the Marines," starring Wallace Ford, Toby Wing and Grant Withers. Other releases will include "Mesquitto Fleet," "Flame Fighters," "Men in Blue," "Tiger and the Lady" and "The Sponger."

Seattle Business Improved

Week-end business at local film houses during recent weeks has been reaching new summertime proportions as a result of the war activities in Seattle. Thousands of enlisted men from Fort Lewis, and sailors from Bremerton Navy Yard each Saturday and Sunday converge on the city and swell attendance at theatres, night clubs, and other places of indoor and outdoor amusement to an appreciable extent. Summer week-day business continues only fair, according to exhibitors, but the two-day weekend patronage has been materially aiding grosses at all classes of houses.

New Tampa Policy

The Tampa, of Tampa, Fla., has been trying out a new schedule of full week runs for their shows and is reported to be working out satisfactorily. The theatre originally operated on a schedule of three changes each week, with an occasional extended run, and then cut to two changes. The Tampa is the only theatre in the city presenting a program with just one feature and shorts. All other theatres have "double feature" bills and a few shorts.

Lee Acquires Film Rights

Arthur A. Lee has acquired the American distribution rights to "Yellow Season," described as a satire on Benito Mussolini, from Associated British Distributors.

Judge May Rule From Hospital on Anti-Decree Law

A ruling on the major distributors' petition at Minneapolis to enjoin enforcement of the Minnesota anti-blocks-of-five-law may be handed down by Judge Hugo O. Hanft next week from the hospital bed in St. Paul where he is recovering from what his clerk called a minor ailment.

Plaintiff distributors filed answers Tuesday to the briefs of James F. Lynch, Ramsey county attorney, and other Minnesota enforcement officers named as defendants in the suit. The distributors seek a temporary injunction from Judge Hanft prohibiting enforcement of the anti-decree law.

Mr. Lynch said all the briefs and answers had been sent to the Judge and expressed the belief that he would begin his study of the law at issue immediately. Reports that the jurist was to leave the hospital his week could not be confirmed, but even if his stay is extended it is not expected to interfere with his ruling on the case, Mr. Lynch said. A quick ruling has been sought in order that film distributors might determine their course in relation to selling new season product as soon as possible.

An appeal was foreseen by Minneapolis attorneys, no matter what the lower court rules. If Judge Hanft grants the injunction, however, the Big Five might sell under the federal consent decree provisions until the appeal is acted upon. If it is denied they will be forced to withhold sales in blocks-of-five until the state Supreme Court rules.

The Minneapolis exchanges meanwhile are reported to have transferred the balance of their sales staffs to out of state districts. They are maintaining contact with Minnesota accounts, however.

Folk Melodies Produced

Brandon Films, independent producing company working at Durland Farms, near Nyack, N. Y., has completed the first of a scheduled series of 10 short subjects designed to depict the background of American folk songs. The initial film, running 10 minutes, was produced by Tom Brandon and directed by Willard VanDycke. It has been titled "Tall Tales," and will show the songs of the frontier of early America.

Warner Publicity Changes

Ted Tod, former Chicago newspaper man, has joined the Warner Brothers field publicity staff and will work in the Des Moines and Omaha territory. Bob Williams, of Mort Blumenstocks' publicity staff, has been transferred from the New York office to the studio. For the past five years Mr. Williams has been handling fan magazine contacts and more recently New York newspaper contacts.

Republic Signs Singer

Judy Clark, singer and dancer with Ray Heatherton's orchestra, has been signed to a long term contract by Republic Pictures. Her first picture for the company will be "Marines On Parade," starring Al Pearce and his Gang, which goes into production in October.

APPEALS FROM LOCAL ARBITRATORS ARE NOW HITTING 30% OF DECISIONS

Exhibitors, Distributors Have Each Appealed 4; Total of 11 Appeals Filed in Seven Months of Operation Under Decree

Thirty per cent of the 39 arbitration decisions, handed down in local tribunals of the American Arbitration Association have been carried to the Appeal Board at New York for a final ruling on consent decree interpretation in the cases.

The increasing proportion of cases being appealed to the "supreme court" indicates that the success or failure of the arbitration sections of the consent decree will probably be determined chiefly by the three members of the Appeal Board.

Eleven cases are on the record of the Appeal Board after seven months of arbitration. Decisions have been handed down in the first two appeals while nine others are pending, in various stages of the appeal process. Only one case is currently under advisement by the three members of the Board, Van Vechten Veeder, chairman, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger.

Four Decisions Appealed

Distributors and exhibitors have each appealed four decisions and three appeal actions have been instituted by intervenors whose theatre operations were affected by decisions. In the two cases decided to date, exhibitors, originators of the complaint, have had their appeal dismissed and the original ruling upheld. The first ruling, in the Ken theatre, Chicago, clearance complaint upheld the arbitrator's opinion that he lacked jurisdiction. The second Appeal award, in the complaint of Ruben Frels, Texas operator upheld the dismissal of his some run complaint.

Nine of the eleven cases appealed involved clearance. In most instances the appeal hinged on the arbitrator's scope in interpreting section VIII of the consent decree. Only two cases involved some run. One of these was based on circuit affiliation leaving just one instance involving interpretation of Section VI.

Cases which have been appealed include:

Chicago—Case No. 2, clearance, Ken theatre, Chicago, operated by Ben Banovitz. Appeal Board ruled case involved specific run rather than clearance.

Dallas—Case No. 2, some run, Normana theatre, El Campo, Tex, Ruben Frels operator. Appeal board ruled distributors had offered reasonable run.

Washington—Case No. 3, clearance, Westway theatre, Baltimore, appealed by Lee Homand, operator.

Boston—Case No. 3, clearance, Manchester, N. H. theatre operated by Lucien Descoteaux. State Operating company, and distributors appealed.

Philadelphia—Case No. 2, some run, Earle theatre, New Castle, Del. MGM appealed award of run.

Albany—Cases No. 1 and 2, clearance, American theatres, operated by Alex Papayanakos, Canton, N. Y. Appealed by distributors, Schine circuit.

Los Angeles—Case No. 1, clearance Mission theatre, San Gabriel, Calif. Edwards circuit, intervenor, appealed altered clearance.

New York—Case No. 2, clearance, Squire theatre, Great Neck, N. Y. Skouras Theatres and Northern Amusement Co., intervenors, appealed reduced clearance.

Washington—Case No. 6, clearance, Apex theatre, Washington. Warner circuit appealed reduced clearance.

Philadelphia—Case No. 6, clearance, Hill theatre, Philadelphia, Edward I. Singer, operator, appealed dismissal of case.

Attorneys for all of the Big Five distributors who signed the consent decree this week denied reports that they were planning to ask a reduction in the number of arbitration tribunals. Some trade journals, noting that three tribunals had received no cases, and that the docket in others listed on an average less than half a dozen complaints, have published reports of a move to reduce the administrative expense of arbitration by centralizing the tribunals.

The distributor lawyers pointed out that in the first seven months of arbitration only two clauses of the consent decree were involved and said that they were determined to wait until there was a larger backlog of experience before seeking a change. One attorney noted that a move now by the distributors towards reducing the 31 tribunals set up in the decree might be interpreted by the Government as an attempt to make arbitration difficult or impossible for the small exhibitor. To prevent this the decree located tribunals in the principal exchange centers, within ready access.

Discussion of next year's arbitration budget or of proposed changes in the administrative machinery is not expected to get underway for several months.

New Philadelphia Appeal

The Appeal Board received its eleventh case this week when Edward I. Singer, operator of the Hill theatre in Philadelphia filed formal objection to the dismissal of his clearance complaint against Paramount, Warners, RKO and the Warner Circuit.

W. A. Wiedersheim, arbitrator dismissed the Hill complaint (Motion Picture Herald, August 16, page 17) after finding that the seven day margin of the competitive Affiliated Circuit's Rialto and the seven day clearance of Warner's Sedgewick over the Rialto were reasonable. Mr. Wiedersheim also observed that the complaint involved specific run more than it did clearance, stating that he did not believe Section VIII empowered him to reduce clearance if run would be altered in consequence.

ARBITRATION CASES FILED TO DATE

The following is a summary of the arbitration cases filed to date:

Filed This Week:

San Francisco—One on Clearance

Previously Reported:

Clearance	78
Some Run	28
Total to September 3rd	107

Settled This Week:

None reported.

Appealed This Week:

Philadelphia—Case No. 6

San Francisco

The fourth San Francisco complaint was filed last week by the Piedmont Theatre, Inc., of Oakland against the Big Five and four downtown Oakland first run houses asking a reduction in clearance. The complaint asserts that the Paramount, Fox, Roxie, and Esquire theatres in Oakland enjoy their first run status by excessive margins over the houses in nearby suburbs.

The Sierra theatre operated by the T and D circuit at Susanville, Calif., intervened this week in the clearance complaint filed two weeks ago by Rotus Harvey in behalf of his Westwood theatre in Westwood, Calif. Mr. Harvey asked day and date with the Sierra.

The withdrawal of the second San Francisco action, clearance complaint of A. C. Karsky, operator of the Laurel in Oakland, was entered as a formal consent dismissal by arbitrator Roger Sherman this week. Settlement was reported in Motion Picture Herald on August 23rd. Costs were paid by the complainant. RKO, Warners, 20th Century-Fox and nine Oakland theatres had been named in the action.

Chicago

As Chicago this week Balaban and Katz through the firm of Spitz and Adcock, attorneys, intervened in the clearance action of the Oriental theatre against the Big Five and all Class-A loop theatres. B and K operated the large Oriental until two years ago when it was taken over by the 32 West Randolph St. Corporation. Eighteen of the B and K houses are subject to the complaint.

The Woods Theatre Corporation and the Diana Theatre Corporation operators of the McVickers theatre have also intervened in the Oriental complaint.

Harold J. Clark has been appointed arbitrator in the fifth Chicago complaint, clearance readjustment sought by Steve Bennis, Lincoln, Ill., exhibitor. Hearings will start on September 15th.

Kansas City

The Fox—Kansas City Corporation in behalf of five of its Kansas City downtown houses has intervened in the clearance complaint of the Dickinson theatre in suburban Mission, Kans. The Dickinson in a complaint against RKO, Warners, Paramount and 20th Century-Fox asked that the first run margin of Kansas City houses be cut from 56 to 14 days.

Philadelphia

Case No. 8, the clearance complaint of Columbus Stamper, operator of the Great Northern Theatre in Philadelphia, scheduled for hearing September 8th, has been postponed for a second time until September 30th. It is directed against Paramount, MGM, 20th Century-Fox and the Warner circuit. Postponement was again requested by attorneys for the film companies. Walter H. Robinson, Philadelphia attorney, will arbitrate the complaint.

Detroit

Additional information was reported from Michigan this week in the complaint of the Drayton Plains theatre against the Big Five and the Butterfield circuit. In the first action outside of Detroit, and the tribunal's third case David Newman operator of the Drayton Plains house asks that his clearance be reduced from 67 days after Pontiac—60 days after first run and seven after second—to seven days. Other towns within 30 miles of Pontiac enjoy a seven day margin he charges. The Butterfield circuit controls all Pontiac theatres. Mr. Newman opened his house in July.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Off Trend

It's no secret in Hollywood that the theatregoers of the nation have manifested by their selection of films for patronage an acute and evidently insatiable appetite for comedy.

It's no secret anywhere that producing companies have given effect to this manifestation in their plannings for the future; an extensive itemization of the production projects conceived with an aim toward supplying the public with more of that which it has indicated it likes was published in this magazine.

It may be a secret outside of Hollywood for a little time, however, that some of the attractions recently previewed in these parts, films due for distribution shortly, are not only at variance with the general veering toward comedy but are pointed in a directly opposite direction.

As if in disregard of the portents from the box-offices of the nation, a series which has prospered on a comedy-drama basis was pitched point blank into the tragedy division with its current edition.

Another series which has profited mightily as an exercise in the domain of good, clean fun was shunted onto strictly adult ground.

A million-dollar special containing some of the finest performances of the year was revealed as underscoring sordidness and eventuating in unrelieved tragedy.

Another million-dollar job did an about face in midpicture to dish up some of the hottest illicit romancing witnessed since the barriers went up against that sort of thing in 1933, punishing the indulgers with nothing more terrible than a ripe old age.

A semi-musical romance expected to offer a diverting demonstration of idyllic lovemaking to lilting music turned out to contain a mildly demented villain given to assassinating innocent bystanders by way of pressing his courtship the hard way.

Off trend as these excursions into zones of interest far removed from comedy may be, and with whatever outcome, they do not actually indicate ignorance of or indifference to the nature of public demand on the part of their producers.

Actually, these are pictures which were completed, or too near completion for change, at the time when the news that the American people had abruptly developed a yen for comedy, and acquired the money with which to buy their fill of it, reached Hollywood.

As of that time it was a theory widely subscribed to in this town that amusements touching the extremes are demanded in war time by a population which is itself experiencing extremes of every variety in its daily existence. A general letting out of rope in all directions by way of coping with this assumed condition of public requirement was under way, with the result only now becoming evident.

Some point out that it is the more extreme variety of comedy which has prospered, arguing that therefore the more extreme varieties of melodrama and tragedy will prosper proportionately.

Opposed to this reasoning is the belief that extremes have nothing to do with the matter and that the public simply is in the market for laughter and not for tears, fears or problems.

As to which of these lines of reasoning is correct, the public will be informing the industry presently in terms of support and non-support of the pictures.

For the present, and doubtless for some while, it is in the nature of prevailing circumstances and Hollywood thinking for some pretty extreme extremes of subject matter, themes, treatments and presentations to be coming along in the flow of product.

More Sneak Leaks

Documented in detail and background on this page of the August 23d edition was the modus operandum by resort to which syndicated columnist Hedda Hopper had managed to abridge the rules against pre-release lay press review on films by printing the opinions of one Bob Carl of Pasadena on pictures observed by him in a sneak preview at that place. A parallel circumvention was achieved this week by syndicated columnist Louella O. Parsons, whose printing of an opinion of an MGM project starring Greta Garbo was prefaced by these remarks: "Scoop for Bill Simpson, the original previewer. He was the first to send in previews for any column. Others have tried to copy him but there is only one Bill."

It was stated in the piece in this space about Miss Hopper that "The difference between reader Carl's violation of the rules and Miss Hopper's escapes the eye." Stet for Miss Parsons.

MIGHTY NEAT TRICK IF HE CAN DO IT

Quote Paramount announcement:—

"Charles Boyer, Edward G. Robinson and Joel McCrea have been signed by Boris Morros as the first of some fifteen stars who will play principal roles in 'Tales of Manhattan,' the unique story which he will make for Paramount this Fall.

"Each of the three stars will take the lead in one of the seven sequences of the story, which deals with the adventures, romantic, humorous and dramatic, which befall various persons who wear the same fine evening suit."

Warners First

Warner Brothers, committed last week to a policy of keeping at least six pictures in shooting stage of production around the year, was well ahead of promise at weekend and leading the studios in point of films in work with eight films before the cameras.

Birth of the Blues

Crosby Croons a Hit

About half way through this more or less historical accounting for the rise of rhythmic music in the world, Bing Crosby steps into the chorus of "Melancholy Baby" and sings the rafters right off of the auditorium. He had the exhibitors present at the Los Angeles tradeshow forgetting their buyer-resistance utterly and clapping like just that many happy ultimate consumers.

But "Melancholy Baby" is just one of nine hits tunes of other years sung by Mr. Crosby and others in this hit musical of today and tomorrow. Among the others are "Cuddle Up a Little Closer," "Wait 'Till the Sun Shines Nellie," "Memphis Blues," "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," done in the illustrated song media and with technicolor lending a note of authenticity to the slides, and that old reliable "St. Louis Blues" itself. There's a new song by Johnny Mercer, additionally, which belongs in this classic catalogue.

When it isn't musical, which is most of the time, the picture is concerned with depicting the rise of ragtime from its dusky beginnings in the late nineties to a healthy hold on the population in 1915 or thereabouts. The tale is told in terms of the adventures of a jazz band headed by Mr. Crosby as clarinetist and vocalist with Mary Martin as feature singer and Brian Donlevy blowing hot licks on a trumpet. Rochester is along as valet to supply some comedy, J. Carrol Naish is met up with as an early day gangster to provide some menace and Tiny Carolyn Lee as Miss Martin's infant aunt, supplies the charm of cuteness.

Victor Schertzinger, never more at home than in direction of a picture pertaining primarily to music, missed never a chance to combine story and score with loss to neither and profit to both.

Monta Bell rates a bow as associate producer.

The film compares most directly, as to type, with "Alexander's Ragtime Band," its appeal in large part being based upon the appeal of the old song hits and their power to reawaken memories of its audience. Orchestration of these is in the mode of the period of their origin. There's no age limit or other ceiling on the film's potential usefulness.

Among the Living

Melodrama and a Mad Man

This thriller-chiller type melodrama stands head and shoulders above its kind in point of realism, plausibility and performance. It opens in a graveyard, moves to the basement of a supposedly haunted house where a mad man has been imprisoned for fifteen years, then releases the maniac to roam the town and follows him through a sequence of murders to his death in the graveyard where the picture started. It's got everything the shock film trade demands.

Produced with far more skill and imagination than most pictures in its field, this thriller stays within the bounds of logic and packs for that reason a wallop few have equalled. The mad man who commits the murders does so for a reason that squares with the realities of dementia and they are the more terrible because realistically motivated. A sequence in a cheap cafe is a masterpiece of sordid reflexes, the maniac's pursuit and murder of a girl he meets there are terrifyingly authenticated and the final sequences in which a mob storms the haunted house in quest of the killer are without precedent in their impact.

Performances by Albert Dekker, as the maniac and his twin brother; Susan Hayward, as the flirtatious companion of the unsuspected mad man, and Harry Carey, as the doctor who knows the secret but does not reveal it until three lives have been lost, are powerful in every particular.

Production by Sol C. Siegel is tops for the field it serves and direction by Stuart Heisler makes every inch of footage an effective part of the powerful whole.

Subject matter and treatment by and large, suggest limiting the film to adult presentation.

Mexican Spitfire's Baby

(RKO Radio, 1941-42)

Lupe and Leon Continue

This, the latest of the Lupe Velez-Leon Errol "Lord Epping" series, is of the same pattern as the previous efforts, a pattern for the most part designed for frequent belly-laughs. The title stems from one of the earlier of the series.

It is a robust—and sometimes rough—comedy of errors centered around the usual blundering endeavors of Errol—Uncle Matt—to bring happiness to the one-year married Velez and Charles Buddy Rogers, by arranging for them to adopt a French war orphan. The measures for the adoption are placed in the hands of "Lord Epping"—the other half of the Errol doublerole, and when his Lordship arrives with the luscious and grown-up Fifi, the war orphan, things, as to be expected, happen. They happen just a bit too long for continuous laughter and attention, but while they happen, the comedy rocks ahead, not at all times, however, for family patronage.

In addition to the star names, there is the usually sputtering and continental-mannered Fritz Feld to add to the mirthful confusion, which he does as the fiancee of Fifi, whom he misplaced at the boat. Fritz, as an officer in the French Chasseurs—pronounced "chaser" by Zazu Pitts, another contributor to the fun—pushes the comedy a notch higher with his attempts to duel Errol to assuage his honor.

The story, if the Velez-Errol duo needs one—moves on to a resort hotel, where Errol tries to hide Fifi, while "Uncle Matt" squares his ever-suspicious wife and the more suspicious Lupe. Arrive "Lord Epping," Mrs. Epping and a host of others and everything is finally cleared up in the conventional farce comedy manner. In addition to custard pies and knives, some mud-spattered double-barreled dialog is thrown which is hardly needed to swell the goodly laugh total.

Glamour Boy

(Paramount Pictures, 1941-42)

Musical Comedy Romance

Producer Sol C. Siegel and his colleagues have turned out a superior all around gloom chaser. Funnyman F. Hugh Herbert, he of the expressive hands and zaney antics, contributed additional dialogue to the picture, which offers a proper setting for Paramount's singing young star, Susanna Foster.

The plot has a Hollywood background with a new twist. Jackie Cooper plays a juvenile actor, who at 18 is a soda jerker, waiting for a come-back into pictures. Marathon Studios hires him to coach a new juvenile in a remake of one of the former star's successes. In a projection room, the old "Skippy" and the new, view a few sequences of the film. In reality, the audience watches Jackie Cooper studying himself on the screen as the real youngster who played the part more than ten years ago. It is a good bit and the preview audience liked its novelty.

The older boy gets embroiled in studio politics, loses his job and is responsible for the quick rise and fall of a girl he has undertaken to advise on how to become a star. The hitherto obnoxious new juvenile resolves his predecessor's troubles to the confusion of all and to his own smug satisfaction.

The story is handled lightly and ably by director Ralph Murphy, and the best laugh lines probably were those contributed by Hugh Herbert. Jackie Cooper plays his juicy part to the hilt, Susanna Foster sings a few songs in a pleasant coloratura, but it's Darryl Hickman as the youngster whom the customers will remember. Walter Abel, in the role of Mara-

137 Independent Owners Sue to Stop Ascap Fees

One hundred thirty seven independent theatre owners, members of four exhibitor units comprising the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, on the Pacific Coast, launched, on Tuesday, from Los Angeles, a long-heralded federal court litigation against ASCAP, demanding approximately $250,000 damages from the Society and asking an injunction restraining it from collecting annual license fees from theatres.

In a 225-page complaint listing payments made since 1930 on the ASCAP seat tax for their total of 236 houses, the exhibitors alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and sought relief from paying the license fees, declaring ASCAP as monopoly and operating in restraint of interstate commerce.

Named as defendants in addition to the Society itself were 24 members of its board of directors and its officers; 19 music publishing firms and all members of the Society "whose names constitute a group too numerous to include." Representing theatre owners was Albert J. Law, General Counsel of the PCCITO and for 11 years assistant to the U. S. Attorney General in the Anti-trust Division.

8 Months of Research

The document, filed in Los Angeles Federal Court, completes eight months of compiling data from exhibitors from San Diego to Alaska and marks the first concerted federal court move against the Society by exhibitors over annual licenses required of theatres by ASCAP for playing films using Society-controlled music.

Acting as individuals, exhibitors outlined motion picture industry as pertaining to interstate commerce and its effect on interstate commerce, described the history of ASCAP and charged the Society with coercion and intimidation of them in paying annual fees for use of its catalogue via sound films.

The complaint recited, "agents of ASCAP have solicited applications for licenses by threats of filing suits for infringements of copyright laws from all unlicensed persons, firms or corporations operating theatres, that ASCAP has hired agents that have gone from place to place threatening any and all who used music commercially with such infringement suits and by said threats have compelled users of music to pay exorbitant sums to purchase performing rights of all music under control of said defendant and its members; that no theatre operator has used in any one year more than 2,500 musical compositions controlled by ASCAP, but in order to perform those 2,500 musical compositions each of said theatre operators has been required and compelled to purchase performing rights to at least 25,000 musical works controlled by said defendant; therefore plaintiff has been compelled to pay ASCAP for performing rights for approximately ten times more musical compositions than he has or could possibly have used."

In addition, the suit said, ASCAP and its members have entered into contracts with producers for use of its music in films, knowing that the films would be leased or rented to exhibitors, yet compelled theatre operators to pay per seat tax for performing rights to its controlled music.

Murder and Mystery

Here is a murder-mystery the unity and impact of which place it near the all-time top of its class. Sol C. Siegel, producer, Joseph Sistrom, associate producer, and William Clemens, director, have concocted a story certain to please all lovers of this type of drama, from presidents up and down. From its arresting beginning to its climax, the story runs along smoothly, without cheap, melodramatic tricks, until, in synthesis, the parts fit as neatly as a jig-saw puzzle.

The three characters around whom the picture revolves are 'Bjorn Faulkner" (Nils Asther), who has to explain a missing $20,000,000 to his board of directors; 'Kit Lane" (Ellen Drew), who has a secretarial and personal interest in "Faulkner," and "Steve Van Ruyle" (Robert Preston), a sailor, who has inherited a position on "Faulkner's" board of directors. "Faulkner" is presumably murdered, "Kit Lane" is falsely accused of the murder, and "Van Ruyle" assumes the responsibility of solving the mystery, clearing "Kit Lane" of the murder charge, and then giving her his own name.

The cast is uniformly excellent. Nils Asther makes a most attractive villain-tycoon; never did a man explain away a missing $20,000,000 more gracefully. Miss Drew is a very pretty secretary-heroine and Robert Preston turns in a neat performance as the sailor-sleuth. There are also some excellent comedy sequences by a drunk and a gasoline station proprietor.

The sets throughout the picture are lavish, elaborate and ahead of their time in decor.

Previewed at the Normandie Theatre in New York, where a trade-press audience responded appreciatively to the humorous sequences and applauded spontaneously at the end.—IRENE SMOLEN

Holt to Coast for RKO

Charles W. Koerner, general manager of RKO Theatres, announced in New York, Wednesday, that he had appointed Nat Holt division manager of RKO's west coast theatres, effective October 1st.

"Selznick-U A" May be Name

Selznick-United Artists may be the name by which the United Artists distributing company may be known henceforth, according to word this week from Hollywood, where negotiations were completed for entrance of the independent producer into a UA partnership with Mary Pickford, Alexander Korda, and Charles Chaplin. Arthur W. Kelly, UA vice-president in charge of sales, and Edward C. Raftery, general counsel, arrived in Hollywood Tuesday to participate in the Selznick negotiations, which have been in process for months, and which until recently included Frank Capra, another independent producer.

Mr. Selznick, the information is, will produce two or three pictures yearly and he may introduce important changes; although what these will be, has not been disclosed.

Meanwhile, Maurice Silverstone, who resigned some months ago as UA executive head to produce, is to leave New York for Hollywood next week, to establish his own production unit. Miss Pickford also is an associate in the Silverstone venture.

Gabriel Pascal, will remain a UA producer, a spokesman said in New York, adding Mr. Pascal probably would produce "Captain Brassbound's Conversion" and "Arms and the Man."

Reopening of the San Francisco United Artists Theatre, a step in the formation of the heralded UA circuit of "quality" houses, was expected this week after some delay in the deal by which the distributing company will operate the house in association with Joseph Blumenfeld and D. J. McNerney.

Exhibitors Complain On Selling Policies

Independent exhibitors in two widely scattered sections complained this week of product policies and procedures of the majors.

In Des Moines, exhibitors, led by Leo Wolcott, head of the Iowa-Nebraska theatre owners organization, declared, "If the decree was entered as stated 'for the purpose of relieving the pressure on the small exhibitor' it was a complete failure in this territory because of unreasonable prices and terms now being demanded."

Exhibitors in the Philadelphia territory are being circularized by the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, with the suggestion they sign no 1941-42 contracts for certain pictures asserted due from distributors under 1940-41 contracts; and a suit is expected in that territory's Federal Court by the unit against Paramount, RKO and Twentieth Century Fox, for failure to deliver, on the 1940-41 contracts "Nothing But the Truth," "Citizen Kane," "Sun Valley Serenade" and others.

Paramount Dividends

The Paramount board of directors, in New York, Wednesday, declared dividends on all outstanding issues of company stock, to the amount of 25 cents per share on common stock, $1.50 per share on first preferred issues and 15 cents per share on second preferred stock.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Motion picture theatre operators in and around Truro, up in Nova Scotia, got unexpected relief from the competition of traveling carnivals, in a manner most unusual.

Seems that when one of the Frank Elliott Carnival shows recently visited Truro, which is temporarily housing hundreds of Canadian soldiers, one soldier was shot while watching a money game. He was an innocent bystander to an argument between the game concessionaire and a civilian player who claimed he was entitled to $5 won at the game. Frank Elliott is said to have produced a revolver during the altercation and fired a shot which hit the soldier.

When the dust settled from the retaliatory antics of some 500 raiding 'buddies' of the soldier, everything on the carnival lot was a heap of wreckage—booths, rides, tents, merry-go-round, all save the big ferris-wheel, were torn apart. The wheel would have gone, too, but for the arrival of 200 military police and the local constabulary.

Motion picture exhibitors were said to have been among the most interested spectators to the soldiers' dismantling.

Mortimer Lahm and Harold Stone, owners of M. H. Lamston, metropolitan dime-store chain, insist on carrying the traditions of their former theatrical producing to their five-and-ten counters. They even employ ex-chorus girls as clerks, and when Warners recently brought out "Million Dollar Baby," based on the old song: "I Found a Million Dollar Baby in a Five-and-Ten-Cent Store," the Lamston pair flooded their windows with tie-ups on both picture and song.

The Lamston ex-chorus girl clerks are of the anti, or non-sugar-daddy variety.

The only newscaster granted permission by Hitler's High Command and Ministry of Propaganda to broadcast the French-German armistice proceedings at Compiegne, in the Spring of 1940, has gone Hollywood.

William L. Shirer, known at the moment as the author of "Berlin Diary," will prepare special material based on his World War II impressions, for RKO Radio's "Passage from Bordeaux," and for Erich Pommer, who will produce, and who engaged him. The story, by the way, written by Budd Schulberg, B. P.'s son, deals with a group of Americans caught in the convulsive events of the ten crucial days between the French Government's removal from its capital at Paris to Vichy, and the fateful armistice at Compiegne.

It was Shirer's newscasts that brought to American listeners the hour-by-hour accounts of the successive German invasions, right up to Compiegne. He is to add to those incidents in the new production which depicts Americans whirling in the maelstrom of French ruin, while millions of refugees clogged all the southbound roads from Paris to Marseilles and Bordeaux, the while stories were being spread by Nazi agents to create panic and hysteria among the fleeing hordes of homeless.

Thousands of commercial establishments in the United States have air-cooling installations, but one never hears of their continuing operation after business hours for the relief of the community during a hot spell, such as the heat-wave relief frequently arranged by motion picture theatre owners who make their air-cooled auditoriums available to the public at the close of day.

Typical is the recent community contribution to atmospheric relief arranged for Mendota, Illinois, by Jules Landfield, managing the Alger Circuit's State Theatre, during a particularly hot session, as described in the following report in the Mendota newspaper:

> The manager of the State Theatre hit upon an idea last Sunday which caused much talk and also many to take advantage of the fact that the air cooled show house was kept open from and after the close of the last show that night, which was approximately 11:30 o'clock, until way early in the morning of Monday.
> Mr. Landfield invited the people of Mendota and this section of the tri-counties to come to the theatre on Sunday night and remain just as long as they desired or until seven o'clock in the morning. No pictures would be shown, but the show house would be kept cool and the people could thus get away from the heat in their homes.
> It is reported that at least 60 persons took advantage of the idea and remained in the show house until about 1:45 A.M., when the temperature outside cooled and the folks left for their homes, thanking Mr. Landfield for allowing them to remain in the show house and get cooled, for it really was a treat.
> Many people have phoned the show house since then to see if there would be another "openhouse," and the management stated that in case there should be another heated spell he would make an announcement of when the show house would be open all night.

'Tanney' Tannebaum was flabbergasted, the other day, when his S.O.S. Cinema Supply Company, in New York, received a hurry-call from G. Jennson, owner, and oldtime exhibitor, from his headquarters at the Hlutafjelagio NYJA BIO Theatre at Reykjavik, ICELAND, for an AIR CONDITIONING equipment. American soldiers newly stationed at Reykjavik had told Mr. Jennson that his theatre was minus the atmospheric conditioning to which they are accustomed.

The outdoor temperature at Reykjavik in mid-summer—during the warmest period—runs between 45 and 50 degrees fahrenheit. And, so, Mr. Jennson must heat his auditorium. But the body heat of a filled house—and its plenty filled since the U. S. soldiers arrived—raises the wet-bulb temperature to an extent that is uncomfortable. The soldiers told Mr. Jennson that his air needs conditioning, needs changing.

Didn't some Eskimos once send down an order for refrigerators, Mr. Tannebaum?

Train Wreck

Bustle of porters, passengers hurrying with luggage, noise of shunting locomotives—a railway station in the '80's plastered with advertisements for such commodities as Day & Martin's boot-polish for men of the world—and other commodities, once household words, now completely forgotten. This was the scene shot this week by Lance Comfort for the new Paramount British production "Hatter's Castle."

On Stage 6 at Denham, James Carter built part of the Tay Bridge before the disaster that wrecked it and also the railway station of "Levensford"—last stopping place before the train starts its fateful journey along the single-track line over the bridge. As a result of extensive research in Scottish railway museums and with guidance from railway engineering experts, Carter was able to build a flawless period reconstruction of the station at "Levensford." The 140′ setting is complete with platform, "Levensford" signal-box and a life-size replica of one of the now-defunct North British Railway Company's locomotives with its coaches.

Evans' co-stars in the film are Tommy Trinder, in his first character role, and Constance Cummings, in the role of an American girl who accompanies the Foreman on his adventurous journey.

"The Foreman Went to France" which Charles Frend is directing will be released throughout the world by United Artists.

Michael Balcon's new film about the blockade, previously known as "The Big Blockade", has been retitled "Siege."

Robert Donat, absent from the screen since "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" returns to Shepherd's Bush Studios where he made his first British success, "The 39 Steps." As William Pitt the Younger, he plays one of the longest and most exacting roles of his career, portraying the vigorous politician who became Prime Minister at 23.

Robert Morley plays Charles James Fox, Pitt's political enemy throughout his career and Phyllis Calvert will have the role of Eleanor.

That women are fast and widely replacing men in key technical positions in British Studios, and making a good job of it, is an established fact. Gainsborough Studios at Islington, where Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, and Vic Oliver are reaching the final stages on "Hi Gang", offers notable evidence for the thesis.

Casting has been passed to Iside Head, Norah Bentley has replaced a mere male and is now in charge of the hairdressing of the artistes, and Hilda Collins has been given charge of the wardrobe at the Studios, in territory which has hitherto been the exclusive prerogative of the male sex. Even in welding a paint brush and balancing a pot of pigment on a high cradle women are not far behind. Olga Lehmann artist and mural expert, is at work in Poole Street. She is at other times an official war artist and an A.R.P. worker in one of London's most blitzed areas.

Marcel Varnel directs the film which has been titled "Double Trouble" and in which Formby has as his leading lady Linden Travers. Production manager of the Hillcrest unit is Ernest Gartside, who for many years was associated with Fox in a secretarial and directorial capacity.

Journalism in War

Something of Paul Soskin's thunder seems to have been stolen by Two Cities Films who—for distribution by Columbia—have gone into production at Denham on "Story Unpublished" a film dealing with the role and outlook of the newspaperman in Britain during the darker days of last August and September. An exact replica of the "Daily Express" newsroom has been built up at Denham to cast a prophetic shadow before Soskin's "Fate Knocks the Door." The original whence the film is devised was by Alan MacKinnon.

Harold French who made an eminently successful job of the recently shown "Jeannie", is directing, and Bernard Knowles is in charge of cameras and lighting. The cast is headed by Richard Greene and Valerie Hobson, whilst other names therein include Miles Malleson, Renee Gadd and Claude Bailey.

Fifth Column machinations are said to feature high on the list of the films' incidents, and more spectacular passages include the docks fire during last September's Blitz.

Columbia will distribute.

One of British National's most ambitious efforts to date "One of Our Aircraft Failed to Return" has now been launched, with Michael Powell directing. A unit has already gone out on locations of which there will be very many in the film.

Powell has decided to create two units for the film, one to concentrate on locations and trick work and the other under his personal eye to deal with interiors—at Denham. Trick work may be dealt with elsewhere. Powell made a previous British success for British National "Contraband."

102 Documentaries

Six years of continuous production of documentaries is the record claimed by Strand Films Ltd., one of the leading organizations in the British field. In that time the company has made one hundred and two films all in the short subject category. During the last eighteen months alone, and mainly as a result of the wartime stimulus to documentary, Strand have produced over thirty, all contributions to Britain's propaganda effort. The subjects covered in this recent group include: evacuation, war-time education, industrial speed-up, the war effort in Scotland and Northern Ireland, shipping, life in the blitz, and Home Guard, civil defence, British Restaurants, and many aspects of the cultural life of this country.

Strand directors and cameramen are now either filming or preparing ten more pictures on subjects including Imperial communications, the Navy, Army training, factory canteen services, religious tolerance under the British flag, the war-effort in Wales and the scenic beauties of England.

A younger company, Rotha Films, headed by author-producer-director Paul Rotha, which likewise is concentrating on documentaries, mainly under M.O.I. sponsorship, has a record no less notable. In six months Rotha Films have made and shown six films, and have seven either in active production or in the final stages of preparation. Believing in the ethical and commercial propriety of a production policy Rotha Films claim they are: "producing films that show the British people not only fighting for their lives but at the same time making a constructive and creative effort to build something new out of the ruins.

Rotha Films are, however, not made, generally speaking, for commercial distribution, but for dissemination through the Central Film Library of the M.O.I., purpose and operations of which have been exhaustively dealt with in Motion Picture Herald.

Among the films already made and shown are "Five and Under", "Defeat Diptheria" and "The Children See it Thru" (for U. S. showing exclusively.)

In production are "Local Government" in which Arthur Mann, Mutual Broadcasting's British war correspondent supplies the commentary and actually plays the principal part in a study of local administration in a Devon village, "A Few Ounces a Day", in which the Isotype symbolts method is used to deal with salvage and shipping losses: "Blood Transfusion", by Hans Nieter with Isotype designs by Dr. Otto Neurath: "Science and War", which will cover the role of the scientist in pre-war days and today, dietetics, architecture, medicine, agriculture, etcetera; "Books and the War", dealing with the growth and role of reading in wartime: "Road Safety for Children", by Yvonne Fletcher, and "Changing Village",

A recent broadcast by U. S. newspaperman Quentin Reynolds in which he addressed an ironic moral homily to "Dear Doctor" Goebbels is being made into a film by the M.O.I. It will be Reynolds' third film with the M.O.I. for he did commentaries for "Britain Can Take It" and "Christmas Under Fire."

BRITISH INDUSTRY IN UNITED FRONT AGAINST GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE

Exhibitors, Distributors Hold to Line of Strong Criticism of Official "Mistakes" in Handling Draft, Propaganda

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Behind its Government one hundred per cent in aiding the national war effort the motion picture industry here is, nevertheless, still critical of the operation and administration of the State machine. During the present week the two major sections, distributors and exhibitors, have made notable onslaughts on Whitehall for its functioning, and the injustices which, it is claimed, have been done the trade.

The united industry criticism of the Board of Trade for its handling of the quota situation, and of the Ministry of Labour for its adamantine attitude to industry personnel are already well known. This week from the two above sections broadsides have been fired into the Ministry of Information, the Board of Trade, the War Office, and the Government's entertainment group N.A.A.F.I.

M.O.I. Attacked

The Ministry of Information has been attacked by both the C.E.A. and the K.R.S. for its handling of the "Target For Tonight" situation and for its peremptory attitude to the industry. The Board of Trade has been told, politely but bluntly, that its suggestions for conservation of film stock are, for the time being, impractical. The War Office, despite its galaxy of "brass hats" and high staff officers, has met with a virtual rebuke from the K.R.S. over the appointment of a cinematograph expert without consultation with the distributors. The manner in which N.A.A.F.I. has treated the industry, notably the distributors whose films it uses, has provoked stringent and emphatic criticisms from the K.R.S.

The same week, in the course of which so much artillery has been turned on the State departments, has been notable for the final turning down of a proposal to set up an all-trade body to facilitate the industry's dealings with the Government on matters provoked by the war emergency. Resultingly, industry affairs will still continue to be discussed departmentally by the various industry sections instead of, as it was hoped, by an all-trade cabinet or council.

Comments made by members of the K.R.S. at this week's meeting to some extent synthesize the trade feeling that it has not been given a fair and square deal by some Government departments, in fact by the Government itself, as might reasonably be expected by an industry which has contributed a great deal voluntarily to the war effort.

"We have been treated throughout with impolite contempt," said one distributor executive, speaking specifically of the Government's handling of film entertainment, but obliquely referring to the Government's wartime attitude to the industry. "We have been kicked about like a football."

These comments were made in reference particularly to N.A.A.F.I., which is the Government official entertainment body charged with the entertainment, recreation and refreshment of the Forces. Criticism was directed in this particular instance to the fact that films which had been supplied to N.A.A.F.I. by the K.R.S. members had been disseminated and shown throughout the country in various R.A.F. centres without any record being supplied to the distributors, without the elementary courtesy of consultation. 162 R.A.F. cinemas had been supplied by N.A.A.F.I. with films supplied by the K.R.S. without the K.R.S., or its members, being informed.

Films have already been supplied to the Army Council for the entertainment of the military in camps and lone outposts. The question now arises as to why films should be supplied through two or three different channels, one of which, N.A.A.F.I., has apparently placed no limit upon the centres to which they are supplied—irrespective of the terms on which they are hired from the K.R.S.; "They have been supplied," to quote a K.R.S. member, "to N.A.A.F.I. to do what they like with." Most of these films have been shown on mobile units and are over and above the mobile unit shows given by the War Office exclusively to military camps.

Specific Terms Demanded

Net result of the K.R.S. discussion was a decision that the time had come to put a firm foot down, to refuse to be pushed about and to demand that all films supplied to, or through the Government's entertainment body should be on specific terms; that a contractual agreement be drawn up which would safeguard the renters by specifying exactly where the films would be shown and under what terms.

The competitive nature of this snowball entertainment by means of mobile units is causing grave concern to both exhibitors and renters. It would appear, from informed statistics, that a "circuit" of virtually 600 mobile cinemas is being planned by the War Office, whose aim is to supply film entertainment to the Forces by means of mobile units.

The proposed appointment of Mr. Paul Kimberley to be director of cinematography for the War Office to organise and operate this scheme which would, its critics claim, "establish the largest circuit in the country, has also provoked the vigorous critical opposition of the renters. It was so provoked by the Army Council's decision to appoint Kimberley without consulting the K.R.S., whose films obviously could be used for the 600 mobile cinemas, whose films are already being rented to the Army Council at special rates. It was felt that the nomination of Kimberley to the post was with the advice of another section of the industry and certainly without any consultation or advice from the renters. A letter, which was virtually a rebuke to the Army Council for its arbitrary action and suggestion that had the K.R.S. been consulted other and more suitable names might have been supplied, was ultimately sent to Whitehall.

The target most peppered with discharged ammunition from both exhibitor and renter this week has been the Ministry of Information, whose handling of the "Target For Tonight" situation, and the threat of whose chief, Mr. Brendon Bracken, that he might one day feel moved to impose compulsory showings on exhibitors, has provoked the ire of both sections.

Distribution Attacked

The K.R.S. dissatisfaction is general, rather than specific dissatisfaction, with the way in which the Ministry has been handling the distribution of its films. The "Target For Tonight" incident has provoked the present expression of discontent rather than been the cause of it. The K.R.S., subsequently to the pother over the film in question, were invited to meet the Director of the Films Division and to discuss with him the equitable distribution and disposition of the Ministry of Information films. That suggestion has provoked some derisive laughter in the K.R.S. circles, laughter which has found an immediate echo in the exhibitor group, over the fact that many months ago a committee was set up, representing both C.E.A. and K.R.S., to handle all matters involving the trade and the Ministry of Information, but, so far as can be discovered, has never been called to Malet Street.

Dissatisfaction in the exhibitor Association has been, in the main, against the Ministry's incursion into the realm of distribution. Annoyance was first provoked by the fact that the film was booked exclusively to the Gaumont Circuit. It was subsequently stimulated, however, when the Gaumont group had waived certain rights accorded them, by the terms, claimed excessive, which were being asked for the film.

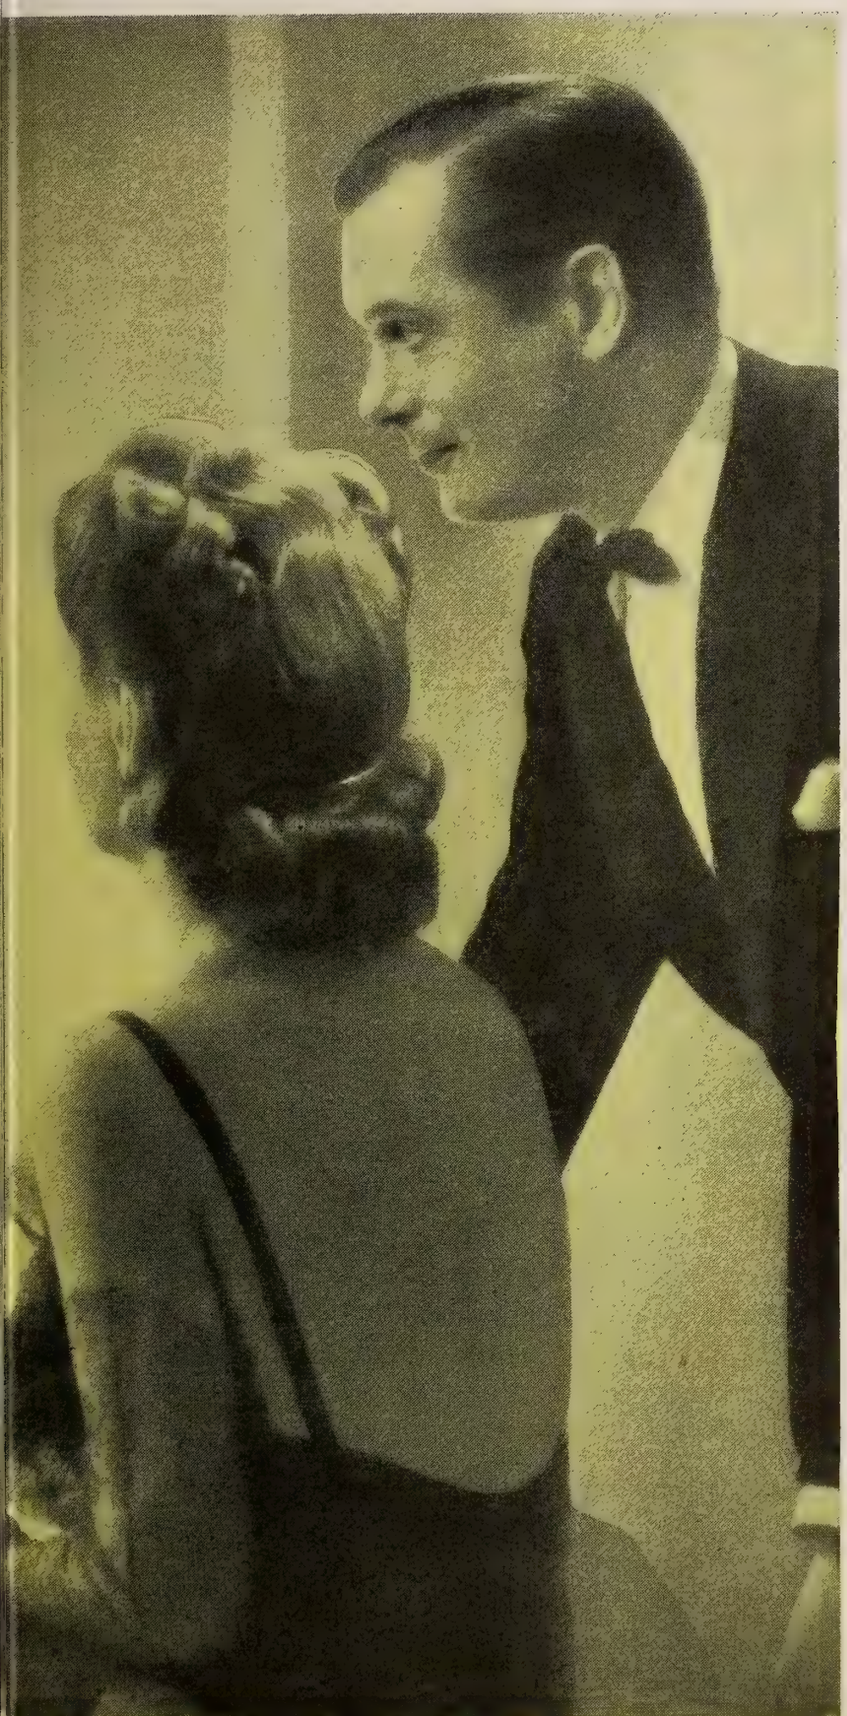
At this week's General Council a rebuke was administered to the Ministry, when formal expression was given to the extreme dissatisfaction with the manner in which the film had been handled from within the Ministry and the virtual exclusion of the independents from the early runs. Exhibitors were recommended not to book the film except on a reasonable flat rate.

The talks between the Ministry, C.E.A. and K.R.S., which may result in a revival of the apparently stillborn committee, will probably clear up the trouble over the film and oil the machinery for the future.

Meanwhile, the proposal to set up a joint industry council, to deal with trade matters arising out of the war and to provide a solid trade front from which the industry could negotiate with the Government, has been killed almost at the moment of birth. The scheme was first proposed by Councillor H. P. E. Mears and backed by various branches of the C.E.A. It is a fact that both the producer and renter groups were in favour of it, but were waiting for the initial move to be made by the Association, one of whose members sponsored the idea. The C.E.A. rejection this week finally killed it.

BRITISH ARMY WILL EXPAND FILM UNITS

The British Army Council today appointed Paul Kimberley director of cinematography. Mr. Kimberley represents National Screen Service here. The appointment followed a nomination by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, and was opposed by the Kinematograph Renters Society, whose advice was not requested.



The War Office has created an Army Cinema Service as a military organization, adapting trade procedure and experience to military requirements. Mr. Kimberley will be responsible for the technicalities of distribution, exhibition and the like. A committee to include industry representatives, will advise. Various Army commands will have cinema sections, with trained personnel.

CRESCENT DECISION PUT OFF TO DECEMBER 1st

December Set for Final Crescent Hearings; R. E. Baulch Dismissed in Nashville Trial

Climaxing last week's testimony offered by the defense in the seven-week anti-trust case brought by the United States Government against the Crescent Amusement Company and affiliates, Judge Elmer D. Davies, in Nashville federal court, reached a tentative agreement last Friday with counsel for both sides to delay final arguments until Monday, December 1st. Judge Davies indicated that his decision could be expected shortly after that date. The reason for the three-month postponement is the court's crowded calendar, with only the first week in December available for final hearings in the case.

Agreement between the court and counsels provides that defendants have until November 15th to file their briefs. Counsel for both sides have until October 15th to file proposed findings of fact based on the testimony of the last seven weeks. By December 1st, the Government will file its answering briefs and final argument from both sides will ensue.

Dismissal Granted

Highlight of last Friday was the motion introduced by the defense to dismiss the suit against R. E. Baulch, an official of Crescent and other corporations, which Judge Davies granted, stating that the Government had offered no evidence incriminating Mr. Baulch as an individual. George H. Armistead, Jr., defense counsel, proposed renewal of motions for dismissal of other defendants denied by the Judge on August 8th. When Judge Davies indicated he was not prepared to consider such motions, Mr. Armistead withdrew his proposition, probably on the ground that an outright denial in the record would tend to prejudice to some degree the entire suit.

Dismissal of Universal as one of the defendants is pending, resulting from the Court's decision that he must have a brief from counsel on "findings of facts" before acting on the motion. Edward H. Raftery and J. D. Mosby, Universal's counsel, withdrew the dismissal motion but will submit the "findings of fact" and a brief for the court's consideration. It was admitted that Universal remained in the suit only because of the "isolated instance" of the rejected J. D. Henry contract at Union City, as reported in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of August 30th, Page 46.

Of utmost significance to the defendants in the suit, indicating Judge Davies ultimate decision in the case, was his statement last Friday, "The distributor has a right to sell his product to any individual or to any circuit and in order for the distributor to make the best possible contract, he has a perfect right to play one prospect against the other."

Kermit C. Stengel, president of Rockwood Amusements, Inc., a Crescent affiliate, was recalled to the stand early on Friday by William Waller, Crescent counsel, to introduce the newly-prepared exhibits concerning the proportionate income from popcorn and screen advertising sales and from Saturday revenue from Westerns in small town houses. Mr. Stengel testified that popcorn and screen advertising returned 29 per cent of Rockwood's net profit in 1939. Mr. Waller followed this testimony with introduction of numerous additional "playoff" sheets and contracts.

Joe Wiley, of Hickman, Ky., was the only rebuttal witness on that day. He was questioned by Robert L. Wright, Government counsel, and by Judge Davies. Mr. Wiley's testimony concerned the Universal contract applications of J. D. Henry, his uncle. The witness said he had accompanied Mr. Henry to Memphis in December, 1938, and that Mr. Henry was told by J. A. Prichard, Universal branch manager, that his contracts were there but that Prichard had received instructions from Harry Graham, Southern district manager at Atlanta, not to deliver them. All Universal witnesses previously had testified that the Henry applications never were approved, and that they were finally rejected the last week of December, 1938.

Agnew to Testify

Neil F. Agnew, vice president of Paramount Pictures, was added to the list of top-ranking distributor officials to testify in the Crescent case, when he appeared last week. Mr. Agnew emphatically denied as others had before him that Paramount Pictures had had any arrangement or understanding with Crescent or any of its affiliates to suppress competition among local exhibitors. Mr. Agnew declared that Paramount considers it to his advantage to have local exhibitor competition of a substantial sort. He also said that there were "certain exceptional circumstances" in the making of Paramount's five-year franchise with Crescent in 1937 and added that it is Paramount's policy now to make new franchises for longer periods than one year. The Paramount executive upheld the longer Crescent franchise, however, as "assuring the distributor company a steady, full revenue from situations where no steady revenue had been received in the past."

Harry L. Gold, vice president and Eastern sales manager for United Artists, also appeared as a defense witness, describing UA's distributing system and the unique setup of the corporation. He was examined by Mr. Raftery, who queried him in detail concerning negotiations in 1939 with Louis Rosenbaum, operator of Muscle Shoals Theatres, and with Max Buchanan, independent exhibitor in competition with Rosenbaum in Athens, Ala. Mr. Gold testified that United Artists prefers percentage deals, with blanket deals next in preference. Evidence already had been introduced as to UA's "61-situation" and "71-situation" blanket deals with Crescent in 1938-39 and 1940-41, respectively. Mr. Raftery introduced additional exhibits to show that UA had many blanket deals throughout the country.

Others who appeared to testify on the same situations were: Lynn Dunn, Atlanta, United Artists' film salesman; Hugh Owen, Dallas, until recently Dallas branch manager for UA; T. L. Davis, Atlanta branch manager for UA; and R. J. Barnes, UA film salesman.

At conclusion of this testimony, it appeared to some court observers that Robert L. Wright, Government counsel, who had contended that the United Artists-Crescent "61-situation" deal was illegal because it involved subsidiaries not entirely owned by Crescent, had lost his point, judging from the reactions of the court.

Rubinsky Promotes Poorman

Charles Poorman has been promoted to road manager for the Mark Rubinsky houses in upstate eastern Pennsylvania. He was formerly manager of the independent circuit's Hollywood Theatre in St. Clair and the Lyric in Newmanstown. The circuit also includes the Lyric in New Philadelphia and the Lyric in Williamstown.

Urges Sponsored News for South American Radio

Axis propaganda in South America via newsreels, radio and the press "is on the run", according to John F. Royal, vice president in charge of international affairs for the National Broadcasting Company who returned on Monday from a seven-week plane trip to Latin America. Mr. Royal told reporters that one of the best ways to combat Axis propaganda activities and win over the majority of South American countries which, in his opinion, "now show increasing tendency toward the democracy's point of view", is for "American business men to sponsor shortwave news broadcasts" to the republics below the Rio Grande.

"The United States", he said, "must find a way to get more objective news without further delay to South America, on a sponsorship basis. Axis powers are spending money for their own purposes. The United States must also spend money to combat this propaganda." Urged by reporters to reveal, whether in his opinion, American business men, the Government, or semi-Government agencies such as the Nelson Rockefeller committee, should spend the money, Mr. Royal refused to commit himself, saying, "At this time, it doesn't matter to me who sponsors such programs. All I'm interested in right now is that somebody should do it."

Signed Stations

Mr. Royal visited Cuba, Puerto Rico, Trinidad, Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, Panama and Costa Rica, for the purpose of signing up in gentlemen's agreements 92 South American radio stations on an NBC Pan-American network. The NBC project followed closely upon the heels of Columbia Broadcasting System's contracts with more than 100 South American radio stations.

As outlined by Mr. Royal, the "gentlemen's agreements," in effect, provide for NBC to sell time on the 92 South American stations, either on an independent or network basis, to American business firms, with certain "financial" specifications. The Latin American stations, in turn, will provide NBC with the necessary time. The agreement also provides that NBC will "deduct from the station's 'card' rate, 15 per cent for agency commission and an additional 15 per cent for NBC's overhead and operating expenses, which would give the stations a net of 70 per cent of whatever revenue accrued as a result of a commercial tie-up through NBC."

Mr. Royal indicated that the agreements would operate to decrease Axis propaganda, pointing out, however, that while there is no stipulation specifically worded to this effect, that American business firms will not broadcast programs on those stations using Axis news services or disseminating Axis propaganda or having any alleged connection with Axis countries. He added that NBC would "do business only with those stations which refuse Axis business."

The first Pan-American Network program, scheduled for this Sunday, September 7th, will dedicate the Brazilian network affiliation with NBC on a special show celebrating the Brazilian nation's independence. On September 18th, the Mexican network will be dedicated and the third NBC-South American radio tieup is slated for October 12th, Columbus Day, when the combined Central and South American networks will be dedicated.

SPIRITED BIDDING FOR HANDLING OF FORTY U.S. GOVERNMENT PICTURES

Advertising and Sponsored Film Companies Scramble for New Contract to Distribute Films; New "Institute" Is Organized

The United States Government has aroused the advertising and sponsored film business to a competitive state of unprecedented proportions over a large Government film contract, with bidding, described as "furious," which was climaxed last Thursday, August 28th, in Washington, with the opening of offers from more than 50 producers or distributors of advertising, educational, industrial and documentary pictures.

The bids were submitted on the invitation of the Procurement Division of the U. S. Treasury Department, to furnish prints, and to physically distribute, some 40 Government pictures, 20 of which are understood to have already been produced. Many of the subjects are to deal with defense, others are on various U. S. Government departmental activities, but, principally, the subject matter has to do with manual and industrial training for distribution to trade schools, vocational institution and industries with large apprentice schools.

Rentals are not involved, but the contract requires outright purchase by those intending exhibition, with transportation F.O.B.

One Company Specified

The contract provides a more than ordinary Government film "plum," because it is specified that the award shall be placed with one company. No estimate of the award in terms of dollars and cents could be gleaned from trade circles but the extent of the job is indicated by the fact that some Government officials intimated about 300 prints for each production were needed, making a total of 12,000 prints involved in the transaction. It represents the largest, single deal ever given out by the Government which formerly contracted for not more than five films to one company.

One of the bidders, it was reported on Monday, was the newly formed Institute for the Advancement of Visual Education and Vocational Training, Inc., an organization inaugurated some two months ago, alleged in some quarters, for the purpose of acting as a unit in bidding for this large Government contract, in an attempt to "drive out the small, independent distributors and producers."

Under provisions of the print award, as stipulated by the Procurement Division of the Treasury, "the bidder, at the time the bid is submitted may plan to sublet portions of the services and products that may be required in the fulfillment of any contract that may result from the invitation to bid." Distributors and producers in the field pointed out this week that such provision meant the contract would be awarded to one company not only on the basis of developing and printing the films but also on the distribution and attending promotion and advertising.

The four firms which constitute members of the Institute are all competitive producing companies in the non-theatrical field. They are, Jam Handy Productions, Detroit; Ray-Bell Films, Minneapolis; Loucks and Norling Studios, New York, and Caravel Films, Inc., New York.

Dr. Herbert S. Houston, former director of the Motion Picture Research Council, is head of the Institute. He was one time city editor of the Sioux City Journal and later served with the Chicago Tribune. He was founder and president of the Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate and president of the Cosmos Broadcasting Company. The Institute was organized purportedly to instigate better understanding of the functions of visual education and vocational training through the medium of films; to standardize activities in these fields with respect to equipment, and to supply information on skilled and responsible sources of supply to channels seeking commercial, instructional and industrial film productions.

One New York independent distributor of theatrical and non-theatrical films, when asked whether his company was invited to membership in the Institute, pointed out that in his opinion, the organization "was formed solely for the purpose of blocking competitors in bidding for the current Government contract." He added, "They have a good chance of getting it, for you know how much Washington likes the sound of 'institutes' or 'councils' or 'research committees.'" Another distributor in the field refused to comment on what he considered the real intent of the Institute, saying that "only results in the next few weeks will bear out whether their purpose was sincere." Others expressed doubt that the Institute is "getting off on the right foot" as far as the non-theatrical field generally is concerned. A representative of a company in the West was reported to have said that the membership of only four firms indicated that the organization is "a closed game of bridge."

Explains Small Membership

The Institute explained the reason for its small current membership by the fact that it wants to determine how the organization will operate and function.

Meanwhile, the trade generally agrees that the Government is interested in watching the development of the Institute because many Washington department officials have felt the need for a long time of some central bureau to coordinate activities dealing with the supply to the Government of film productions and the printing, distribution and promotion of such productions.

Some of the larger companies in the trade who were understood to have submitted bids for the current Government contract, although names of the 50-odd firms were not released by Washington officials, are: Wilding Picture Productions, Inc., Audio Productions, Inc., formerly a subsidiary of the Electrical Research Products, Inc.; Alexander Film Company; Modern Talking Pictures, Inc.; Green's Advertising Agency; Screen Adettes; Screenad Exchange; Tad Screen Advertising, Inc.; Motion Picture Advertising Service Company; Film Advertising Corporation; United Film Ad Service; A. V. Cauger Service, Inc.; Al M. Smith Film Service; Motion Picture Productions, Inc.; Pathe Laboratories, Inc.; Commerce Picture Corp.; Producers Laboratories, Inc.; General Film Laboratories, Inc.; Rapid Film Technique, Inc.; De Luxe Laboratories, Inc.; Castle Films and Kin-O-Lux, Inc.

According to one observer in the field of theatricals and non-theatricals, one of the first Government films released for distribution, "Aluminum," produced for the Office for Emergency Management of OPM, was received with mixed feelings, by the trade and lay press. The OEM unit in New York recently circularized throw-aways about the film, printed in the Government Printing Office, and carrying "raves" from some trade magazines. This observer declared, "It strikes me as peculiar that the British can sell their pictures in this market and command top-prices, while we are not nearly as successful, giving our pictures away. It will cost the Government about $10,000 each production to obtain circulation free to theatres. This is an estimate, based on their claim of $3,000 for production and the obvious cost of the necessary prints and exploitation material. Even the production cost might have been saved as a matter of Government expense, because there is existing film of better quality than was used in this single reel issue and it could have been had for the asking. But that would have cramped the style of experts in production who may take credit for the 9-minute film."

"PROGRESS NOTED" ON ONE EXHIBITOR UNIT

A new, single national exhibitor organization still is being pushed by Harry Brandt and his Independent Theatre Owners in New York, the ITOA Independent reporting progress this week to the most recent suggestion advocating a group to include all types of exhibitors so that theatre men "can be unified and organized into a powerful and effective group".

Reports have been received from 60 exhibitors in 32 states, it was said, although admittedly not all were in favor. The Brandt interests envision at the head of the organization a "type of man . . . worth $100,000 a year", with a staff of public relations men, research experts and lawyers.

Ohio Censor Report

The Ohio censors reviewed a total of 681 reels in July, the largest number since January, 1938, from which 40 eliminations were ordered. Eleven reels were rejected. This compares with 562 reels reviewed, 34 eliminations in June, 1941.

BOOK REVIEW

WORDS, Their Spelling, Pronunciation, Definition, and Application. Third Edition. Compiled by Rupert P. Sorelle and Charles W. Kitt. 215 pages, indexed. The Gregg Publishing Company, New York.

The Third Edition of "Words" takes cognizance not only of the general language accruals since 1929, when it was last revised, but also of the terms which individual industries have added to spoken and written English. Authorities in each of the 21 specialized fields, including the Editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, have co-operated in the preparation of "lessons" devoted to technical terms, spelled, pronounced and defined. Compact and adequately indexed, it should be a handy reference for newcomers to the industry, as well as to veterans who still have difficulty in spelling "silhouette."

'Decree Offers New Opening,' Skouras

Addressing 75 managers at the Fox intermountain convention in Denver, Colo., last Thursday, August 28th, Spyros Skouras, president of National Theatres, told those in attendance not to be critics but to stimulate the desire of patrons to see the picture.

"The consent decree offers greater opportunity for individual effort than ever before and gives theatre managers more responsibility and opportunity," he said at the closing session of the three-day meeting.

Mr. Skouras said that under the decree method, with an unprecedented opportunity to exercise their showmanship ability, enthusiasm would be called for an the part of the managers instead of a critical attitude.

An address also was made by Ned E. Depinet, RKO vice president and distribution head, who arrived from Hollywood with Mr. Skouras for the convention. There was also a talk on advertising and publicity by Harold Rice, manager of the Fox Paramount, Denver, who was convention chairman. Charles Skouras, head of Fox West Coast, was unable to attend.

Division awards in the business drive were made this morning to Jack Edwards, Marlow Theatre, Helena, Mont., for the Montana district; Virgil O'Dell of the Aladdin, Denver, for the Denver district: Sterling Way, Boulder Theatre, Boulder, Colo., for the Northern district, and W. C. O'Brien, Kiva Theatre, Las Vegas, N. M., for the Southern district. Plaques representing the awards were presented by Rick Ricketson, Fox Intermountain division chief.

Spyros Skouras plans to attend a similar meeting of the Fox Midwest division in Kansas City on September 9th.

Early Territorial Releases

Territorial releases throughout the country will be several weeks ahead of national release dates as a result of the decree selling system, Frank Whitbet, MGM studio advertising and publicity director said on Wednesday, August 27th, addressing the Fox Intermountain convention.

Mr. Whitbeck urged the managers to increase their selling efforts. Asserting that patrons now attend theatres more as an occasion than a habit, he said that it is more essential than ever that exploitation efforts have a "personal touch." Pictures should not be "rubber stamped" by theatre operators and full use should be made of studio aid in their presentation, he urged.

New Color Film Process Claimed

A new method of filming and projecting color motion pictures is being demonstrated by Professor Lucien Henri Roux of Paris, according to a report by the Associated Press from Berlin. The films are black and white, taken, developed and projected on the screen with special lenses.

The camera lens is divided into four equal sections. It takes four pictures, superimposing them on the film, with a slight offset of each image. Each section has a different color filter, red, green, blue and yellow.

For projection a similar four-section, four-colored lens is fitted over the projector. It casts four images on the screen, but the four are superimposed, making a single image.

Bioff, Browne Trial Delayed

Union leaders Willie Bioff and George E. Browne still await trial; ex-union leaders John Nick and Clyde Weston proceed to jail. On Tuesday, the Federal Government's case against Browne and Bioff, for alleged extortion of $550,000 from Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Warners, and Paramount, was again postponed in New York Federal Court, by request of United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa, who said he could not obtain a trial judge. New trial date is September 15th but Mr. Correa thought there would be more postponement for the same reason.

Meanwhile, in St. Louis, a United States Circuit Court of Appeals on Saturday, August 30th, squashed hopes of John P. (Big) Nick, and Clyde Weston, two erstwhile projectionist leaders of that city, that they might avoid jail sentences of five years and fines of $10,000 each. The two were convicted September 18th, 1940, under a Federal anti-racketeering law, and specifically under charge of extorting $6,500 from St. Louis theatre owners in 1937. Nick had been the president, and Weston the business agent, of Projectionists' Local No. 143.

West Virginia Managers End Annual Meeting

The West Virginia Managers Association annual convention which was held at the Greenbrier Hotel in White Sulphur Springs, August 25 and 26, re-elected S. J. Hyman president of the organization. J. C. Shanklin and W. H. Holt were re-elected assistants to the president and convention chairman and secretary-treasurer, respectively. Mr. Shanklin was also elected to the national board of directors of the MPTOA.

Among those who attended were Claude Lee of Paramount, H. M. Richey of Metro Goldwyn Mayer, Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and Charles Palmer, Harris Dedelson, Jack Feinberg, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Watts, Vincent Kramer, M. G. Thomas, Eddie Sontz, A. L. Manheimer, Paul Golden, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Daly, Mr. and Mrs. Lou Lefton, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Burkhart and others.

Coast Exhibitors to Meet

James Hone, executive secretary of Washington Independent Theatre Owners, has announced a meeting of Pacific Coast Conference Trustees of the ITO for the New Washington Hotel in Seattle, September 10th and 11th.

Newsreel Theatre Planned

Aaron Goldberg has begun construction of a $55,000 Newsreel Theatre in the downtown district of Oakland, Cal., to be operated in conjunction with his Newsreel theatre in San Francisco. Bucky Williams will be manager.

Hamrick Changes

Three Hamrick-Evergreen circuit theatres in Seattle have had managerial changes. John Berg replaces Ron Kelley at the Music Box. Mr. Berg is replaced at the Fifth Avenue, by Fax Duncan. Mr. Duncan is replaced at the Paramount, by Jack Hamacker. Mr. Kelley has entered the navy.

Sears Sets Terms On 'York' Showings

Fifty per cent of the gross, a 55-cent minimum evening admission, preferred playing time, these and other conditions were set for exhibitor screening of "Sergeant York", which begins general release September 27th, according to Gradwell L. Sears, Warner Brothers vice-president in charge of distribution, who called trade press reporters into his New York home office Tuesday afternoon to outline the "York" policy after weeks of experimentation in approximately 15 key cities.

Mr. Sears explained that the 50 per cent demanded by the company was not, in his opinion, out of line, because, "At the present moment, nobody in exhibition has contributed to it" and Warners had spent $2,000,000 creating a public demand which now justifies the maintenance of the minimum prices mentioned. Minimum admissions for afternoons will be 40 cents, Mr. Sears added, explaining that children would be admitted at all times for not less than 25 cents.

Mr. Sears referred to the film's unprofitable run at the Astor Theatre, New York, where, he asserted, a picture ordinarily receives an eight-week minimum booking. But circumstances in this instance gave the film only six weeks, so that Warners did not gain from exhibition there, and the cost must be added to other costs the company must gain from the rest of the exhibition field.

No guarantee will be offered the exhibitor playing "Sergeant York," Mr. Sears said, adding that the arrangement was, after all, reciprocal, the exhibitor not guaranteeing the company anything.

Warners will demand one-half of the receipts, regardless of what pictures are shown with "Sergeant York", Mr. Sears said, noting it was not probable other films would need to be shown with it.

Selling of 1941-42 product is slow generally, Mr. Sears admitted. He remarked that he was not using his "complete rights" under the decree, preferring to sell pictures on their merit, and abjuring "forcing" as implied by critics of the blocks of five method of selling under the decree.

Joseph Reed Feted

The New Haven Allied Theatre Owners of Connecticut will sponsor a testimonial dinner in honor of Joseph P. Reed, who started exhibition in that territory more than 30 years ago. The affair will be held at Cerini's on October 7th. Mr. Reed, who now operates theatres in Bantam and Washington Depot, is chairman of the Board of Directors of Allied. Dr. J. B. Fishman and Daniel Pouzzner head the committee in charge.

RKO, Republic Move

The Chicago RKO and Republic exchanges moved on Labor Day to their new quarters in the 1400 South Wabash Avenue Building, which was erected by Irving Mandel, former Republic franchise holder.

ARMY REQUIREMENTS, NEW CIRCUIT BRING LABOR SHORTAGE IN CANADA

Most Urgent Need Seen Now for New Manager Personnel; War Takes Younger Men Normally Due for Promotion in Ranks

by W. M. GLADISH
in Toronto

The labor situation has become a problem for the Canadian exhibitors, particularly the chain systems, and there are strong indications that the employment question will become increasingly acute this fall and, later, as the war proceeds. The creation of a second large circuit in the Dominion has added to the difficulty, more hands are required because of the re-opening of still further theatres, the fighting forces have lured many volunteers and have taken many selectees, more money in circulation because of wartime business has created more and better jobs in commercial establishments and munition industries have put a premium on the labor market.

Famous Players Canadian Corp. has followed the policy of promotion for personnel for some years but the number of assistant managers, head ushers and doormen with qualifications is reaching the exhaustion point. This is due to expansion within the circuit and reorganization of personnel at the time when Odeon Theatres of Canada is rapidly acquiring both theatres and experienced employes for its Coast-to-Coast network. A number of senior employes have "transferred" from one circuit to the other. Because of the existence of two chains, there are many more administrative jobs; in fact, there are many more "posts" in the theatre business in Canada right now than ever before. In discussing the situation, one theatre official declared: "Soon there will be no more experienced head ushers available."

New Circuit Adds Jobs

The establishment of another chain organization in the Dominion has brought a definite duplication of higher jobs with resultant promotions from managerial ranks. There are more supervisors, district managers, advertising and exploitation men, bookers, accountants and other employes and, of course, preference has been given to men of theatre experience.

The independents are not so badly off because many of the unaffiliated theatres are operated by families—father owns the business, mother takes a turn, daughter sells tickets, son is on the door and nephews do whatever ushering is necessary. When the war takes more sons, more daughters will take over the jobs and it will continue to be a family affair.

The supply of projectionists continues steady and there is not much difficulty in this direction even in the matter of wages and conditions because of a principle which is being generally accepted of granting percentage bonuses to take care of the increased cost of living. This angle is being encouraged by the government. With regard to the men in the booth, many of them are beyond military age and quite a number had done their bit in the last war. In Ontario, new ones are coming up because of the projectionists' school which is sponsored by the Provisional Government under the announced policy of providing for public safety by insuring a high standard of qualification.

But the focal point of the theatre labor situation is found in the availability of experienced head ushers of a calibre that makes managers.

"POLIO" EPIDEMIC CLOSES THEATRES

In an effort to check the epidemic of infantile paralysis which is sweeping parts of Canada, authorities at Pine Falls, 75 miles northeast of Winnipeg, closed its borders to outsiders last week-end and suburban Transcona barred children 16 years of age and under from theatres and public gatherings.

The epidemic, threatening to become more widespread than ever in some parts of the prairie provinces, already has struck 422 persons in Manitoba and 24 in Alberta since May. Manitoba health authorities said there were 24 new cases in the province early this week and that 228 already had been reported in Winnipeg.

Reports from New Brunswick said a similar epidemic was moving through that province. Children have not been barred from theatres, but the opening of school has been deferred for two weeks.

School Films Emphasized By Quebec Government

by PAT DONOVAN
in Montreal

The recent publication and release of "The Film Library," catalogue containing titles and serial numbers of educational films, demonstrates the important role of the motion picture in the school syllabus designed by the Quebec Department of Education.

"The Film Library" is a manual published for the guidance of teachers and professors in the providence of Quebec who wish to apply the impressive faculties of the motion picture to lectures on almost any subject in the school program.

Accompanying release of the manual is a statement by W. P. Percival, Director of Protestant Education, in which he expresses the importance and value of the film in school work.

The Department of Education is anxious that increasing use shall be made of the Film Library. Its resources, consisting of over $30,000 worth of films, are now such that a school can obtain three silent or sound motion pictures per week through the school session for four or five years before the complete collection has been shown.

Blackouts in Ontario, Canada, will resume this month, according to preliminary announcement by the Air Raid Precaution authorities. Theatre owners in the section, however, are not enthused over the prospects of a new series of blackouts because of their unprofitable experience in the first tests last June when crowds flocked to the business districts but stood outside theatres to watch the outdoor show. Attorney General Gordon Conant says that the rehearsals next month will take in whole sections.

Meanwhile in Toronto, the increasing restrictions on the use of gasoline for commercial or pleasure purposes which are being imposed by the Fuel Control Board are causing some concern in film trade circles.

The latest is a call to corporations to revise or consolidate motor delivery so that less gasoline will be consumed, firms are being asked to reduce delivery schedules or to make cooperative arrangements for the covering of routes. A large percentage of all film distribution in Ontario is to be motor transport, covering all centers in a large area at least once every 24 hours. If limitations are increased, as intimated, film shipments will be transferred to railway express services in some sections, it is understood.

Nova Scotia Allied Is Opposing War Tax

by VICTOR SERVICE
in St. Johns, N. B.

Allied Exhibitors of Nova Scotia have been circularizing members for collective or individual action on the 20 per cent war levy. W. H. Cuzner, owner-manager of the Strand, Sydney Mines, has been contacting each member on this question, in the light of the sharp reduction in business that has followed the tax. In several cases, exhibitors have cut ten per cent off their prices, which had been lifted 20 per cent to cover the full passage of the tax to the customers. The Allied had decided not to absorb any part of tax when it was imposed. However, the serious reaction from the 20 per cent price boost finds the exhibitors very much concerned, and willing to discuss any means of coping with the downward trend of patronage.

A check has been placed on the exodus of Eastporters to the theatres on the Canadian side of the border at Deer and Campobello islands and St. Andrews, N. B., and Lubec, Me., by the reopening of the Imperial at Eastport, Me. This had been closed while Mrs. Nellie Shea, proprietress, was concentrating on the Acme. After the burning of the latter, the Imperial was reconditioned and reopened. In the meanwhile, Eastport residents motorboated to the Canadian islands and mainland, and across the harbor to Lubec, for their pictorial entertainment. The 20 per cent war tax has been a deterrent to patronage of the Canadian border theatres by people from the U. S. side of the line. The Acme is being reconstructed on the same site, on the waterfront, and with seating capacity of about 600. Indications are that both houses will be functioning but that a new title will be bestowed on the Acme.

Instead of disrupting business for the picture theatres, a situation that prevailed elsewhere, the Halifax, N. S., demonstration in the Canadian Victory Loan campaign, created capacity patronage for every Halifax theatre. T. J. Courtney, manager of the Casino, in Halifax, was the civilian co-ordinator.

In other cities, the demonstrations have been held at night, leaving the theatres practically empty. Mr. Courtney was responsible for Halifax having a celebration in the morning. There were 60,000 spectators and 10,000 marching. Thousands came into the city from outside. After the parade was over, there was a human avalanche on the theatres for the afternoon and night. The stores also did a notable business.

FM SPREADS TO 23 STATES, WITH 53 STATIONS LICENSED, 59 PENDING

New York, Illinois and California Have Heaviest Concentration of Stations; Receiver Sales Are Increasing 15 Percent a Month

Frequency-Modulation, that comparatively new form of aircasting, has grown from a strictly east coast operation, to cover 23 states from cost to coast. Today there are 53 FM radio stations actually licensed and 59 other applications for licenses pending before the Federal Communications Commission in Washington.

Fifteen of the approved FM stations are already on the air with scheduled commercial programs. Program material is about evenly divided between rebroadcasting of standard broadcast programs, with indication that the original FM material is on the increase. Several stations, notably W47A at Schenectady, and W49D, Detroit, are presenting original program material exclusively.

Once existing almost solely in the New York area, concentration of FM interest is now to be seen in a number of far-spaced cities, Chicago, Boston, Detroit, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Los Angeles. In New York state there are now 16 stations that have received approval of the Federal Communications Commission. Another 11 are proposed in applications currently on file at Washington. Illinois has seven approved. In California, four licenses have been granted, with nine applications still pending.

	Stations Approved	Additional Stations Sought

FM receiver distribution continues at a good rate in all sections of the country where FM programs are now available. Latest figures compiled for FM Broadcasters, Inc., the national FM trade organization, show that the number of receivers in use increased almost 15% in a month.

With fifteen FM stations now on the air under a full commercial license, the FM Broadcesters, Inc., reports sponsorship is increasing rapidly and at least a third of the stations are said to be meeting their operating expenses from time sales.

Commercial stations now on the air include:

W39B—Yankee Network, Sergeant's Purchase, atop Mt. Washington, and servicing 31,000 square miles in Vermont, Maine, and New Hampshire.

W43B—Yankee Network, Boston, serving 18,000 square miles in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, East Long Island and Connecticut.

K45LA—Don Lee System, Hollywood, first commercial transmitter on Pacific Coast. Covers entire Los Angeles area.

W45D — Detroit Evening News, Detroit, covers Detroit and suburbs with 3,000 watts. Installing 50,000 watt transmitter.

W45BR—Baton Rouge (Louisiana) Broadcasting Co., first FM station in far south.

W47AA — Capitol Broadcasting Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Began operations at reported profit with 36 sponsors signed.

W47NV—National Life and Accident Co., Nashville, Tenn.

W49D—John Lord Booth, Detroit metropolitan area.

W51C—Zenith Radio Corp., Chicago, first installation.

W51R—Stromberg Carlson Manufacturing Co., Rochester, N. Y.

W55M—Milwaukee Journal, Milwaukee, Wis.

W65H—WDRC Incorporated, Hartford, Conn.

W71NY—Bamberger Broadcasting Service, New York City, first New York commercial FM outlet.

W47P—Walker-Downing Corp., Pittsburgh, began operation August 28th.

W59C, Chicago Tribune (WGN), Chicago, starts operation September 1st.

FCC Tackles FM Congestion

New York City got three additional frequency modulation stations with the announcement by the Federal Communications Commission that commercial FM construction permits were issued to WQXR, Muzak Corporation, and the Municipal Broadcasting System. This makes a total of 11 FM transmitters authorized that may be heard in the New York area.

Details of the new grants are:

Interstate Broadcasting Company (WQXR), New York City Permit for station on 45.9 megacycles, to cover an area of 8,500 square miles.

Muzak Corporation, New York City Permit for station on 4.7 megacycles, to cover an area of 8,500 square miles.

Municipal Broadcasting System, City of New York Permit for station on 43.5 megacycles, to cover an area of 3,900 square miles.

In addition, Washington also approved another FM station for Los Angeles by granting an application from the Standard Broadcasting Company. New York's latest will be known respectively as W59NY, W47NY and W35NY, with an estimated 12,000,000 potential listeners within their 50-mile range.

In addition to the new grants, Washington announced that because applications for FM service in New York City far exceed the number of channels available in that locality, consideration is being given to the establishment of a "North Jersey service area," meanwhile making certain reallocations to enable as many applicants as possible to engage in FM broadcasting.

The Columbia Broadcasting System also extended its FM operations recently when it received approval from the FCC to start construction on a St. Louis station at 45.9 megacycles.

Muzak Corporation, at New York, holder of a 1,000 watt transmitter permit will use it to apply musical programs uninterrupted by commercial announcements to paying subscribers. The company operates a similar service for restaurants and cafes, using telehone wires. The radio service would utilize ordinary receivers with a patent device to eliminate an interference signal which would prevent non-subscribers from tuning to the program.

Eleven Channels Available

Under the present set-up, only 11 channels are available for New York City stations, designated as "Class B" service. (Actually 22 channels have been set aside for "Class B", but adjacent channel operation in a given area is not feasible because of cross-interference. Alternate channels are assigned.)

The FCC may therefore take several "Class A" channels—originally set aside for small towns—and allow their use by large-coverage FM stations in northern New Jersey that will also be heard in New York City. Two applicants—WAAT and WHOM—have been notified that the establishment of a "North Jersey service area" is under consideration.

The new arrangement would allow New Yorkers a greater number of FM stations to choose from when tuning across the FM band. Some 20 applications have been made for permission to construct FM transmitters in the metropolitan area since the green light for commercial FM was announced a year ago.

Among applications still pending are those of the New York Daily News, The Yankee Network, WMCA, WBNX, WNEW, WAAT, WHOM, FM Radio Broadcasting Company, and WEVD. Throughout the nation a roster of 59 applications now await action by Washington, but about a quarter of them—from newspapers or newspaper-affiliated groups—are temporarily shelved until after the FCC has conducted an investigation of newspaper-controlled radio.

NEW USES FOR FM BROADCASTING

Many uses of staticless frequency modulation radio, aside from regular entertainment broadcasting, are reported by the FM Broadcasters, Inc., and equipment manufacturers. Police, military forces, air lines, trolley lines, public utilities, and many other agencies in need of communication service are installing FM equipment.

Columbia Broadcasting System at New York plans to use FM relays to send programs to its shortwave station at Brentwood, L. I., instead of on telephone lines. The Cleveland Railway Company has set up a 250-watt FM station, with ten 25-watt portables in cars to keep its trolleys moving around traffic jams, fires, or other tieups. Similarly, the Pennsylvania Turnpike highway patron is directed by FM. Several dozen public utilities are setting up FM communication with repair crews and substations. An impressive number of police departments report installation of FM equipment.

CBS ADVISES PUBLIC TO "TAKE IT EASY" IN BUYING TELEVISION SETS

Tells Audience Programs Are Not "Inducement" to Buy Receivers; Possible Curtailment of Equipment Materials Seen

Prospective purchasers of television receivers are being warned to take their time about buying new sets by the Columbia Broadcasting System, operator of telecaster WCBW at New York.

Asserting that it is not interested in merchandising equipment, CBS, through a "Statement of Some Television Facts," tells the public that experimental broadcasts are not inducements to buy television sets. It cites possible curtailment of commercial television operation and warns that present equipment may be outmoded by subsequent changes in standards.

"Conditions Beyond Control"

At the beginning of each broadcast period WCBW offers a free copy of the booklet and announces:

"We hope you will enjoy our programs. The Columbia Broadcasting System, however is not engaged in the manufacture of television receiving sets and does not want you to consider these broadcasts as inducements to purchase television sets at this time. Because of a number of conditions which are not within our control, we cannot foresee how long this television broadcasting schedule will continue."

Conditions which may alter the television status quo include, CBS says, curtailment of television broadcasting equipment because of defense needs, the scarcity of technicians, uncertainty of television set manufacture and possible replacement of black and white television by color.

It is quite possible, the bulletin asserts, that television broadcasting may be curtailed or suspended, or so altered that present sets will not receive it.

Although only a rapid expansion of the number of set owners will make television profitable, CBS writes, it adds "We hope that set purchases at this time will be made only by people who can afford to take certain risks." The principal risks, as enumerated above, are discussed in detail by the booklet.

Priorities, it notes, have held up construction of the CBS portable equipment for a year. Further restriction of supplies may make it impossible to replace short-lived cathode ray camera tubes and other equipment.

Television Obstacles

"If receiving sets cannot be made and sold, the television audience may remain too restricted to justify continued large expenditures in television broadcasting" the booklet announces. Furthermore, technicians are being recruited from television studios in large numbers for national defense work it states. Lastly the possibility of replacement of black and white television with color is cited. The FCC is to consider color data and recommendations for color standards on January 1, 1942.

WCBW on September 1st, with another extension from the FCC of its experimental permit, started its third month of a full 15-hour a week schedule of test programs from its Grand Central Terminal studios.

Moving into its third month of commercial operation on September 1st television showed signs of shaking free from the routine doldrums that followed the first burst of commercialization in July.

TELEVISION USED FOR EXPLOITATION

Television will be adapted to theatre exploitation at Chicago beginning September 8th when Balaban & Katz start inviting audiences to inspect a television circuit installed in their Chicago theatre. A wired unit, consisting of camera and receiver borrowed from W9XBK have been installed in the theatre mezzanine and patrons will be invited to participate in demonstrations.

Theatre patrons will have an opportunity to appear before the television cameras, in daily operation from 11 A.M. to 11 P.M., while their friends and others see and hear them on receivers installed in the lobby. William C. Eddy, engineer of the B. & K. television station due for completion in several months, arranged the theatre setup. Public curiosity and interest in advance announcements was reported to be very favorable to the new medium.

The National Broadcasting Company at New York reported new sponsorship contracts, one for blanket sports coverage, and new program plans. The Columbia Broadcasting System, also at New York, continued to operate for at least another month on an extension of the test program experimental license with which it has broadcast through July and August. Adjustment of receivers by the manufacturers to the WCBW channel still lags however. DuMont television at New York, on Tuesday was still on an experimental basis, broadcasting test patterns and some film, but expected early approval by Washington of its application for full commercial license.

Sports Contract Signed

WNBT, the NBC television station in New York, recently announced that the Adam Hat Company had signed a long term contract to sponsor all available sports programs. Initial programs will include fights and wrestling matches now on the NBC schedule, and other sporting events as racing, baseball, tennis, professional and perhaps college football and any other events to which the broadcast company can secure television rights.

The agreement covers outlets not only in New York but also future network links with stations under construction in Philadelphia and Washington.

Philadelphia this week boasted its first commercial television as Philco's W3XE took the air Monday under a 60-day license from the FCC. Although no mention was made of sponsorship, the first commercial program, Philco said, will include variety shows, playlets, artists from the studio, and a special local newsreel. Additionally Philadelphia sports events, parades and public events will be picked up by a mobile unit.

Power of the station is being stepped from 3,000 to 10,000 watts according to David Grimes, chief engineer. W3XE will operate on Channel 3, on 6.6 to 7.2 megacycles. After 60 days Philco will seek a long term license. There are between 300 and 400 receivers in Philadelphia.

At New York WNBT programs listed eight commercial sponsors and on September 4th television was to make its first attempt at merchandising women's wear on a series of fashion broadcasts arranged by the Norman D. Waters advertising agency. A similar program for men, "Men's Wear Highlights of Television" is to be launched by the same agency in behalf of John David, Inc., men's clothing retailers.

NBC has ventured into the operatic field for television material, launching on August 21st an "Opera Workshop" featuring condensed versions of popular operas. Singers have been recruited from the Colony Opera Guild, summer opera repertory group, and present the operas in concert form.

DuMont's New York station still awaits delivery of antenna equipment, and continues to broadcast test patterns and a few films on an experimental basis. The company also, through Mortimer J. Loewi, vice president, is seeking from the government a modified priority status which will permit manufacture of enough sets to keep the New York market active. Work on changing outstanding sets so that they can pick up programs on new channels and revised standards has been underway at the DuMont shops in Passaic for three weeks, Mr. Loewi said. The work is progressing at the rate of about ten sets a day.

Radio Corporation of America reported at New York that its dealers and factory technicians have changed about 1,000 of the RCA television receivers now in use to meet the new standards. The work, they indicated, is progressing satisfactorily, but predicted that it will be several months before all sets have been altered.

Coast Station Ready Soon

Equipment for Paramount's station at Los Angeles has been shipped from the DuMont laboratory in the East and the station expects to be on the air soon with an experimental transmitter. Permanent installation, however, will not be completed for some time. Louis Buddy, in charge of the Paramount-DuMont coast outlet said that he expected trial program material would be on the air by November.

Permits for Channel One operation were issued recently by the FCC to California and midwest stations. Don Lee in Hollywood and Zenith Radio Corporation at Chicago are now changing their equipment in preparation for an authorized switch from experimental to full time commercial programs.

Earle C. Anthony, Inc., of Los Angeles, has petitioned the FCC for a television permit on Channel 6, for a 9.6 to 10.2 megacycle television transmitter.

Commercial television will not be a reality in Chicago for at least four months according to present indications. Sponsored telecasts were further delayed this week by the application of Balaban & Katz to the FCC for an extension on their construction permit for station W9-XBK. Work has been retarded by the shortage of priority materials.

The Zenith Radio Corporation recently granted a permit by the FCC, is not expected to be ready for commercial operation for six months.

From the B. & K. station reports indicate that engineers, led by William C. Eddy, are using much ingenuity to devise substitutes for unobtainable equipment. Shortage of materials, Mr. Eddy said, has forced a simplification of equipment and methods, which he feels, will do much to further technical progress. Among devices developed to date are an electro micrometer drop, which allows accurate preselection and pickup of any portion of a transcription. It is being used for television sound effects.

Cubans to Protest Free Air Programs

by RAMON PEON
in Havana

The National Union of Exhibitors plans formal protest against the free broadcasts conducted by Cuban radio stations, which are described as unfair competition in a circular to members. In addition, recently radio stations have received Government permits to conduct free broadcasts in parks. Chief counter attractions to theatres are Alberto Gomez and Hugo del Carril, Argentine stars appearing on rival radio stations.

Cuban exhibitors in an effort to counteract losses have decided to eliminate all theatre passes. The Exhibitors Union also has ordered the elimination of all five-cent admissions in subsequent run houses. Ten cents will be the minimum scale of admission hereafter.

Edelberto de Carrera is expected to be reelected president of the National Union of Exhibitors with Jose Valcarce vice-president and Enrique Vasquez treasurer. Mr. Carrera owns four theatres and Mr. Valcarce runs the Payret, first-run house for Spanish pictures; America, Havana's elite house; the Rialto, and Radio Cine.

Conventions Set

Two U. S. distributors held Havana conventions this week. R. E. Hawkinson, RKO Radio sales manager for Latin America presided at his company's meeting in Havana September 1st to 3rd. Mike Hoffay, publicity, attended from the home office. Managers from Puerto Rico, Mexico, Venezuela, Panama, Trinidad and South American territories attended the meeting at the Nacional Hotel.

Columbia managers were to meet September 4th at the Sevilla Hotel.

Joseph A. McConville, foreign manager for Columbia, was to preside. The program for the three-day Havana convention will be a complete analysis of each territory's business during the past year, plans for the new season's product and special screenings of Columbia's latest production, "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" and "Our Wife."

Headed by J. A. McConville, Jack Segal, Arnold Picker and Charles Roberts, who left Wednesday, September 3d, by plane, from the home office, the delegates attending will include Ernesto P. Smith, Pedro Martinez, Carlos Perez, from Cuba; Michael Bergher, Jorge Oller, from Puerto Rico; Christiaan Van der Ree, from Venezuela; Enrique Davila, from Colombia; Harry Prosdocimi, from Panama; Ed Kerner, from British West Indies, and Rafael Sevilla, from Mexico.

Cuban restrictions on film trade which distributors feel should be corrected in the supplemental trade treaty soon to be negotiated between that country and the U. S. will be outlined by Carl E. Milliken, MPPDA executive, before the government committee on reciprocity at Washington on September 10th.

The committee Wednesday published a list of persons who had asked to appear at the hearings which start September 8th, but did not indicate whether Mr. Milliken would bring with him company representatives familiar with Cuban conditions. At past hearings on reciprocal trade agreements with Latin America such a procedure has been followed.

Majors Report Circuit Deals

A continued selling spurt in new season contracts was reported from the field this week.

RKO reported it had closed several circuit deals this week for its first five, to the Kincey Circuit, Charlotte, with 86 theatres, the Kallett Circuit, 25 houses in New York State Century Circuit, 40 houses, and Randforce, 42 theatres, both in New York City, and to the Schine Circuit, operating 149 theatres in New York, Ohio, Kentucky, Maryland and Delaware, and with the Sparks Circuit of Florida, with 102 houses.

Fox West Coast closed with Warner Brothers for "Sergeant York," "The Smiling Ghost," "Navy Blues" and "International Squadron," buying each individually. FWC also made a deal with United Artists for some of its product in 1941-42, and announced that it also had MGM and Columbia product under franchise, FWC negotiations are under way with Universal.

Universal closed with H. C. McBride of the Granada in Spokane, for Universal product for three years.

Producers Releasing closed in Boston with the E. M. Loew circuit for 24 situations. Other PRC deals were with Warner Theatres and Black Diamond Theatre Circuit in Pittsburgh, and the Long Circuit for Dallas.

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., has announced the signing of a new 12-year contract with Electrical Research Products, Inc., under the terms of which Paramount is assured immediate and complete modernization of all of its sound recording and reproducing equipment throughout the period governed by the agreement.

The new pact will go into effect immediately but will extend until 1954 the company's present agreement.

Variety Benefits Feature 'Derbies'

The Dallas Variety Club on Labor Day staged its "Mammoth Outdoor Fun Festival and Carnival" in the Dallas city park. On the program were dozens of acts, a Turtle Derby, dancing and food. An estimated 75,000 attended.

The Oklahoma City tent held its Turtle Derby and Picnic last week, at Belle Isle Park, in that city. Delegations from Dallas and Kansas City attended. W. W. Smith of the Park-Inn Theatres, Camden, New Jersey, won first prize in the Derby, of $525. Second prize, $275, went to Charles Edwin Lamka, of Pampa, Texas. Other winners were Kenneth Taylor, Sam Tannebaum, Dewey Gibbs, James Burge, Eugene McKenna, W. G. Wortham, Horace Falls, C. H. Schweinle.

Proceeds, as with virtually all such Variety affairs, went to charity; in this instance, to the tent's Charity Fund, which supports the Variety Health Center, a clinic for the under-privileged. The affair will be annual, the tent has decided.

Tournament in Philadelphia

The Philadelphia Variety Club will hold its annual golf tournament September 19th, at the Philmont Country Club. The date was selected so as to jibe with the holding, in Philadelphia, of National Allied States Association's all-industry convention, September 16th through 18th.

Milton Rogasner is chairman of the event. Others, assisting, are Harry Ball, David Milgram, Oscar Neufeld, Clint Weyer, Harry Weiner, Lester Kreiger, Elmer O. Wilschke, Henry Friedman, David Supowitz, Frank McNamee, Paul Greenhalgh, and Jay Emanuel.

The Philadelphia tent has designated Tuesday evenings as "men's nights" at the club quarters. Thrillers and westerns will be shown.

The officers' induction banquet and charter presentation of the newly formed Variety Club of Southern California, at Los Angeles, will be held September 29th at the Ambassador Hotel. National Variety officers to be present will be John H. Harris, Bob O'Donnell, James Balmer, and Charles Lewis.

The Indianapolis Variety Club's annual golf tournament will be held September 15th, at the Broadmoor Country Club, nearby.

The golf tournament of the Cincinnati club will be held September 29th, at the Summit Hills Country Club.

The Houston tent, newly created, and headed by Al Lever, has sent 75 boys on a two-weeks' vacation. It was the tent's first charity project.

The eighth annual banquet of the Washington tent will occur November 15th. Carter Barron, first assistant chief barker, is in charge of arrangements.

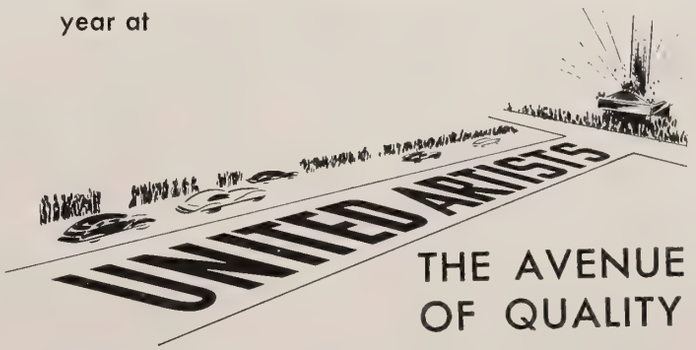
"Navy Blues" Sextet Starts Tour

The nationwide personal appearance tour of Warner Brothers' "Navy Blues" Sextet got underway Wednesday when the six girls boarded a Southern Pacific train for Dallas, first stop on their itinerary. Arrival in Dallas was scheduled for Friday afternoon with Mayor Woodall J. Rodgers heading a reception committee which includes the City Council, local Naval Reserve and entire student body of Woodrow Wilson High School. Georgia Carroll, one of the Sextet members, is a graduate of the Texas school.

There doesn't have to be a loser!

When business is good, there's enough for everybody. Good pictures are what make business good. The producer of good pictures deserves an investment return that the exhibitor should be glad to pay.

The partnership trust between the man who makes hits and the man who shows them should preclude the desire on the part of either to prosper at the expense of the other.



The exhibitor who underpays for fine pictures that bring him good profit is committing a business folly against his own theatre. If he wants to stay in business next month he'll need worthy product as badly as he needs it today.

But where will he get it, if he stifles creative incentive at its source? No producer who is human is going to continue to make great pictures at the cost of financial disaster to himself.

The producer who conscientiously holds up his end of the partnership with exhibitors, doesn't hastily whip up mediocre ingredients with the wishful thought that by some miracle a "sleeper" will be born.

The producer who is worth dealing with at all gets the best value money can buy in script, stars and finished production. He gives the exhibitor a saleable commodity and when that commodity is sold at a profit, he is entitled to a price high enough to be awarded on his investment and to obtain capital for future pictures.

We both can win . . . without stealing from the pockets of the other. Great attractions make heroes of both distributors and exhibitors. Great attractions sold on terms fair to those who produce them and fair to those who buy them will be found this year at

by PRIVATE HARRY BLAKE
at Camp Wheeler, Ga.

Motion pictures, like foodstuffs, are reaching Camp Wheeler, Georgia, on the field ration plan and everybody's happy.

Trainees, between two and three thousand of them, are crowding Wheeler's four theatres nightly, enjoying movies without having to travel any further than walking distance from their barracks. And Major Carlos A. Ross, Theatre Officer, is able to give the men five feature changes every week.

Subjects are received from a district office at Atlanta, Georgia, the Army equivalent of a main exchange, Major Ross explains. This office books films for Army camps throughout the Southeast and has yet to miss a delivery, according to the Major. He points out, however, that since Army policy opposes competition with private enterprise, the soldiers get their pictures only after first runs in the nearby city of Macon.

Getting Choice Pictures

"But at that, we're giving the men movies at about the same rate they would get to see them in the smaller chain theatres of any big city," he says. "And what's more important, we're getting the choice pictures."

He adds, "From my own personal experience, I cannot praise too highly the cooperative attitude displayed by the motion picture industry in giving us the best of its product."

One feature, a newsreel, and short subjects make up four of the five programs presented every week. Double features, mildly favored by some soldiers, are shown on Saturday nights.

Two types of admission are sold. A soldier can pay cash and see a movie for twenty cents, or he can purchase a book of coupons for $1.40, deductable from his pay, and see ten shows at an average cost of 14 cents. The coupon-book plan is responsible for most of the paid admissions.

Camp Wheeler's first movie house opened its doors on April 10th, shortly after the first Selective Service men arrived here to begin thirteen weeks of basic infantry training. Demands for easily accessible entertainment soon influenced the building of three additional theatres.

One of the four great infantry replacement centers in the country, Camp Wheeler houses a potential movie audience of 17,000 when all of its battalions are fully activated.

BROADWAY STAGE AT 20-YEAR LOW

THE main artery of the American stage, Broadway, continues to show a steady decline annually in the total amount of productions offered to the public. During the past season, 1940-41, a total of 81 productions—61 dramatic plays and 20 musical shows—hit the low mark for a 20-year period. These figures are from The Billboard's annual survey of the Broadway theatre which began in 1920. In that year 242 total productions were accounted. The peak years were 1926-27 and 1927-28, before the "crash", with a top of 302 total production hits for both seasons.

The most encouraging note in the 1940-41 figures was the 12 per cent drop of failures—63 per cent, as compared with 75 for the previous season. This represents the lowest percentage of failures on Broadway since 1920-21, fully 20 years ago. Actual number of failures, computed as shows with runs of less than 100 performances, was 40, less than two-third's of 1939-40's 61. Percentage of failure in dramatic shows dropped 9 points, from 78 per cent in 1939-40 to 69 per cent for last season. This is another low record, with lowest percentage of failures in the dramatic division since the 1922-23 season.

14 Nontheatrical Films for India

The Film Advisory Board of India is engaged in the production of 14 Government films at the present time, according to a report from the Industrial Reference Service of the United States Department of Commerce in Washington, D. C. The board is said to have the cooperation of the five major film studios, some of which are also engaged in production work independently for the board.

Three of the 14 films which are ready for release are "Sappers and Miners," "Cavalry of the Clouds" and "Here Comes the Letter." The first two are topicals relating to the land and air forces of the Indian Army, while the third gives an account of the Indian postal service. Over 600 theatres in all parts of India have agreed to exhibit the educational and propaganda films released by the board.

A documentary film entitled "A Kerosene Tin," which shows how many ways the container enters the villagers' life, was recently released by an Indian oil company. Commentaries are in English and Hindustani with an Indian musical background, the report says. This film is being distributed for public exhibition in cinemas throughout India, and it is understood that the sponsor intends to make a number of such films a year.

STUDIOS ACQUIRE 49 PROPERTIES FOR NEW SEASON PRODUCTION

Three Plays, 27 Original Stories and 18 Books Purchased During July and August; "No More Gas" Bought by RKO

During the past two months of July and August, Hollywood motion picture producers further preparing for the new selling season under the consent decree purchased a total of 49 properties, half the amount purchased during the previous two months when a total of 98 stories were acquired.

Highlight of the July purchases was the acquisition of the Charles Nordhoff and Names Norman Hall novel and Saturday Evening Post magazine story, "No More Gas," the screen rights of which have been owned by Warner Brothers since their acquisition in December, 1939, when it was brought as a story for Errol Flynn. However, RKO saw the possibility of using the story for Charles Laughton in a role as the father of the shiftless half-caste Tahitian family, and paid Warners a reported $55,000 for the screen rights.

Eric Knight's latest novel, "This Above All," a story of a disillusioned survivor of the Battle of Dunkerque, has been purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox for $35,000, the studio announced. Though the work is a best seller, studio bidding for it before Twentieth Century-Fox's purchase was restrained, because of the alleged pacifist elements in the book and its censorable love story, which would complicate its transposition to the screen.

MGM Gets "North"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which financed the production of "Mr. and Mrs. North," the Owen Davis stage dramatization of the Frances and Richard Lockridge mystery stories, finally acquired the screen rights for $30,000, it was confirmed from the company's home office in New York. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., was the nominal producer of the play, which ran for 162 performances on Broadway during the past season. Meanwhile, Mr. de Liarge is planning a tour of the play provided he can get two outstanding players to fill the title roles which were originated in the New York presentation by Peggy Conklin and Albert Hackett.

William A. Scully, Universal general sales manager, announced late in July that the company had purchased the newspaper comic strip, "Winslow of the Navy," a topical and timely serial to replace "Head Hunters of the Amazon" as one of the four chapter plays of the 1941-2 season.

The decision was made following an eight-week tour of the country by Bernard B. Kreisler, Universal's short subject manager, in which he conferred with independent exhibitors, theatre circuit executives, chief bookers and publicity directors.

Written by Lieutenant Commander Frank V. Martinek, U. S. N. R., "Winslow of the Navy" appears as a comic strip in over 200 newspapers throughout the country, is an NBC Ret Network radio serial, and is the subject of a series of books of which the two new editions are to be issued shortly. It is estimated by the company that approximately 12,000,000 people are followers of the adventures of the fictional naval officer.

August Purchases

During August, RKO acquired the screen rights to two unpublished novels and one stage show of several years ago. "There Goes Lona Henry," a new novel by Polan Banks to be published shortly by William Morrow company was acquired by the company for a reported price of $30,000 as a possible vehicle for Ginger Rogers. Mr. Banks, author of "The Great Lie," in which Bette Davis starred for Warner Brothers during the past season, has also been signed to work on the screen play of the novel and is currently at the studio.

The locale of the story is present-day Washington and Virginia, and presents the story of a young woman and her sacrifices to permit her husband to continue his brilliant public career.

"Keeper of the Flame," latest unpublished novel by I.A.R. Wylie, has also been purchased by RKO for production by Harry Edington. Termed a romantic mystery story, "Keeper of the Flame" describes the advantages and strange discoveries of a newspaperman assigned to write the life story of a slain governor. In the course of his research for material, the reporter uncovers a trail of evil in the dead man's otherwise brilliant career which, if brought to light, would ruin the lives of many trusting people.

A fourth screen version of the venerable stage property "Shore Leave," by R. P. Weston and Bert Lee, will be filmed shortly by RKO under the title "Hit the Deck," with Ray Bolger in the starring role. David Butler will produce and direct the film.

The play was staged first in 1922 by David Belasco at the Lyceum theatre in New York and was purchased by First National and produced as a silent picture in 1925 with Richard Barthelmess starring. The title "Hit the Deck" was given to the piece later when Herbert Fields rewrote it as a musical comedy with a score by Vincent Youmans for Broadway production.

RKO acquired the screen rights and filmed it with Polly Walker, Jack Oakie and June Clyde in 1930. The story appeared on the screen for a third time as the basis of RKO's "Follow the Fleet" with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in 1936. A new score will be prepared for the new production, but a number of Vincent Youman's songs, including "Halleluja," will be retained.

Vera Zorina and Ray Milland are scheduled to star in a Paramount screen version of a new novel as yet untitled, by W. Somerset Maugham, which the studio purchased during August for $65,000. The story concerns the life of an Austrian girl married to an Englishman and living in wartime London. It will be published within a few months. Edward H. Griffith is slated to produce and direct the screen adaptation of the book.

Burnett Novel Bought

"Nobody Lives Forever," a forthcoming novel by W. R. Burnett, which Warners purchased for $20,000 early in August, will go before the cameras with Ann Sheridan and Humphrey Bogart in the co-starring roles. Robert Lord will produce the picture, which concerns a New York night club owner and his singer-wife, who go to Hollywood to pursue their careers. "Nobody Lives Forever" will follow "All Through the Night" on Mr. Bogart's schedule.

One of the biggest deals to come from the film center in recent months was that made by Samuel Bronston for the screen rights of all Jack London writings including 90 novels and some 300 magazine stories. The deal was negotiated by Mr. Bronston and the widow of the writer, Charmian London.

Mr. Bronston has a contract with Columbia for the production of "Martin Eden," after which he will make "Valley of the Moon" independently.

In an effort to boost the youthful writers and directors as well as actors, the MGM studio is launching a plan to utilize all of its new talent. For this venture the studio has purchased the radio skit, "Now We Are 21," written by Jerry Schwartz for the Junior Workshop program on the Columbia Broadcasting System. This idea has been turned over to every young writer and director on the studio lot. Each writer will work on a sequence, as will each director. The various parts, telling an adventure or problem of young Americans, then will be modeled into a cavalcade of youth.

Sam Marx, currently producing "Unholy Partners," with Edward G. Robinson, Edward Arnold and Laraine Day, will produce this new picture. No cast has yet been announced, but it is expected that virtually every young player on the Metro Lot will participate.

'Pittsburgh Kid,' Monogram Have Field Premieres

Monogram's world premiere of "Saddle Mountain Roundup," and Republic's opening in Pittsburgh of Billy Conn in "The Pittsburgh Kid," held the spotlight as the premieres of the week.

"Saddle Mountain Roundup" was to open at the Odeon and Casino theatres in Marshalltown, Iowa, on Friday, September 6th. The premiere was tied up with a three-day celebration starting September 4th, and ushering in the retail merchants' fall season. Assisting in plans were the Marshalltown Chamber of Commerce, the Greater Marshalltown Association and the Retail Merchants Bureau.

Promotion activities start with a street dance for the USO, sponsored by the American Legion. A parade with 77 floats for the merchants' fall opening and selection of a "Queen" for the event will highlight the second day's activities. The premiere will start at noon Friday, and continue during the day and evening with intermission for stage shows, four at each theatre. Dusty King and Max Terhune, stars of the picture, and George Weeks, company executive, will be present from the studio.

"Pittsburgh Kid" Opens

The world premiere on Saturday, August 30th, of Republic's "The Pittsburgh Kid," starring Billy Conn, at the Fulton theatre in Pittsburgh, was accompanied by the usual fanfare and excitement.

Mayor Cornelius Scully, of Pittsburgh, proclaimed the day as "Billy Conn Day," and declared a legal holiday.

William Saal, Republic's home office representative, who had been in Pittsburgh for the week prior to the opening set the stage for the premiere.

Neil Agnew, general sales manager of Paramount, headed a delegation of executives who left for Chicago to attend the premiere of first "Quiz Kid" short subject in that city Wednesday evening. The group includes Oscar A. Morgan, Monroe Goodman, Richard F. Murray and Leslie Roush.

The opening ceremonies Wednesday night were broadcast over 48 stations of the National Broadcasting Company, Mayor Edward P. Kelly of Chicago was guest of honor at the premiere.

The Navy Department aided Warner Brothers in the production of the film.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

DURANGO KID, THE: Charles Starrett, Luana Walters. Better than average western by Starrett. Running time, 60 minutes.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

HER FIRST BEAU: Jane Withers, Jackie Cooper—This did exceptionally good on Foto Nites. Everybody liked it. Got the S. R. O. sign out.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LADY IN QUESTION, THE: Brian Aherne, Rita Hayworth, Glenn Ford—A good feature enjoyed by all.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

PRAIRIE SCHOONERS: Bill Elliott, Evelyn Young—This report is on Bill Elliott. He is the nearest approach to William S. Hart we have ever had and deserves better stories. We predict a great future for him if Columbia will give him better support and better stories. Elliott has the goods. His crowds continue to grow.—John Leveck, P. T. A. Picture Show, Benoit, Miss. Country patronage.

SO YOU WON'T TALK: Joe E. Brown—A good comedy feature. Worth showing. Would make an excellent second, which I did.—George S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Neighborhood patronage.

THEY DARE NOT LOVE: George Brent, Martha Scott, Paul Lukas—A very fine picture; worth playing. Played three days at the Centre Theatre, Chatham, in opposition to "Men of Boys Town."—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

First National

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—An excellent picture that pleased the old folks as well as the young. Cagney and de Havilland were superb in their reenactment of the Gay Nineties. Business above average. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 14.—O. L. Redfern, Star Theatre, Parrish, Ala. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—Let us tell the truth. This feature started out to be a pippin for a small town with those old songs that please so well and the old time band so much enjoyed, but what a flop at the finish. This could have been rounded out to a lot of good harmony singing in the last reel, instead of the rough and tumble with Cagney cleaning up about thirty men in a fight, and send our patrons home humming the tunes for the rest of the evening. Played August 16th.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

STRAWBERRY BLONDE, THE: James Cagney, Olivia de Havilland, Rita Hayworth—Cagney is surefire with us here and this is no exception. Our folks enjoyed it a lot. Play it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THREE SONS O' GUNS: Wayne Morris, Tom Brown—A very good comedy that stood up well on a dual bill at Centre Theatre, Chatham.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—Play this one on your bargain night. Why can't we have more of Joan Leslie and less of some of the others? Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 24-25.—Woodrow Proffer, Star Theatre, Fort Branch, Ind. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Virginia Weidler—Good picture and good business. Not the best Beery has made, but it pleased. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 13-14.—E M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

NEW MOON: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—It's a long time since we have reported to this department as we feel our comments are of little value to other exhibitors since we usually play old features. But if any other showmen are in the same boat as us and have not yet played this feature, we advise you to stay off it. The singing was fine but anyone can turn on a radio for that. As for the acting and story, plenty of walkouts will give an idea of what they are like. Running time, 103 minutes. Played August 21-22.—A. R. Dakin, Rice Lake Theatre, Bissett, Manitoba, Can. Mining community patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

WHO TO ENCOURAGE

Renewed emphasis on this page, for some weeks back, has been on profit-sharing for managers. Values of such procedure are pointed out by leading circuits who find in it a definite and permanent means to a box-office end.

We continue these observations now in treating with distributor statements that stress the need of extended exhibitor cooperation in putting over the new product. But, as always, this cooperation will come about only if there is sufficient follow-through in the field. And again, as always, "the field" means the manager—the able manager.

In short, that extra something the talented showman digs up by himself, over and above any considerations of advertising expenditure, would largely have to do with that "extended cooperation" the distributors have in mind.

From time to time, distributors offer special contest awards to managers for these "extra somethings". As far as it goes, that is always helpful. But any sustained week-to-week effort on behalf of all worthy attractions, regardless of what brand they bear, can come about completely only when the exhibitor is won over to the extra profits to be had for himself, as well, in giving a piece of the extra to the lad talented enough to earn it.

Profit-sharing for managers must be good business. Else, why would such leading theatre organizations as Famous Players Canadian, Interstate, Griffith and Schine Brothers, among others, get behind the plan so solidly? Certainly, it pays off. How can it miss?

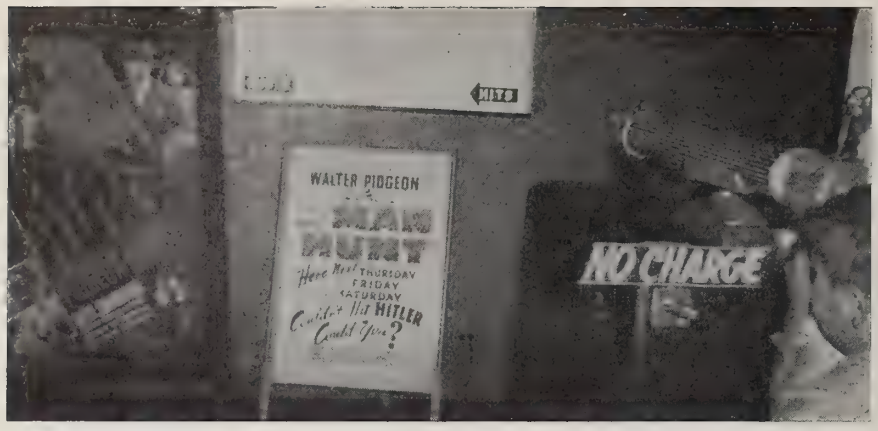
There are two important classifications of theatre manager: the showman who works at it all the time, and the showman able enough to do a sustained job but somehow just won't. It's a cinch that the fast-pacers in Class One will be stimulated by profit-sharing to find still more extra speed. And an opportunity for extra earnings will come pretty near solving the problem of stepping up the efforts of the Class Two boys to maintain a higher box-office average.

Of course, managerial remuneration is well outside the province of the distributor. But, since it may concern the lack of exhibition-cooperation of which the distributor complains, the latter might do worse than lend his support to the extension of the sharing plan as a means of increasing profits for all.

Those vexing problems of seat-cutting and the chewing gum menace evidently can be solved, and it is J. Harvey Phillips, manager of the Mervis circuit's Paramount, in Pittsburgh, who tells about it. On completion of a recent seat-repair and covering job, Phillips made daily talks from the stage, first welcoming his patrons, then dwelling upon the new repair job, beseeching cooperation of the customers in keeping the seats in the same condition they would expect to treat their furniture at home. The gum thing was handled by announcing that the ushers were supplied with pieces of paper especially for the purpose and that patrons were requested to make use of this service.

Over a three-week period the Round Tabler reports no cut seats and the gum menace becomes almost non-existent. It does seem that folks will listen to reason.

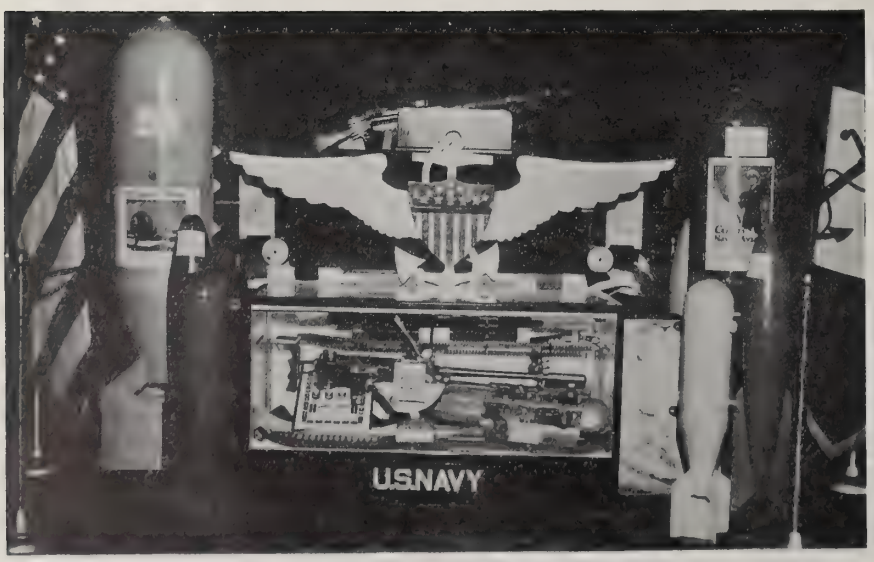


SECURING THE THEATRE

The situation does not exist universally for the same reason, but that there is feeling against theatres in some spots because of circuit affiliations is long known. Currently, one of the members so situated writes in about it, as follows:

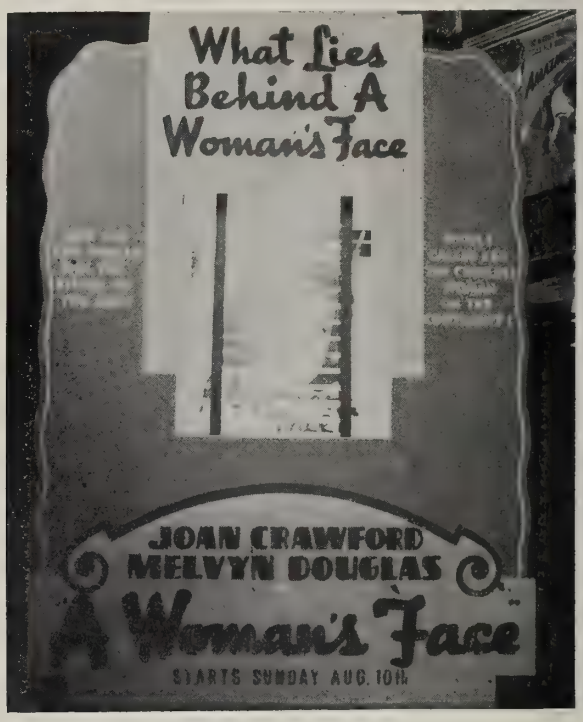
"In a town of this size in this particular section of the country, I find the greatest problem that I have is overcoming the fact that the theatre is a unit of a chain organization. So a great part of my time is spent trying to overcome this damaging vein of public thought. I find institutional goodwill builders very effective."

It is to be noted that stories in Motion Picture Herald on circuit conventions include mention of the new season's operational plans having to do with emphasis upon service, encouraging managers to join the activities of lunch clubs and civic movements, displaying a quicker willingness to inaugurate, and to participate in, goodwill and institutional endeavors. This is all a commendable species of long-range planning to secure for the theatre the solid place it rates in the public consciousness.



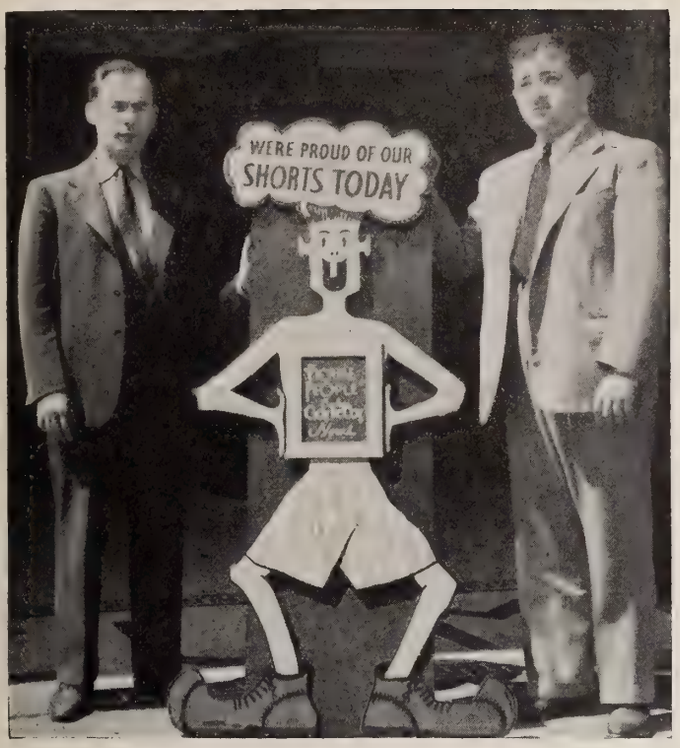
A-Mike Vogel

Tying in on the current craze that the public has for manipulating machine gun devices, Julius Lamm for his date on "Man Hunt" at Warners' Uptown, in Cleveland, rigged up a sock lobby stunt. Moving figure of Hitler descending on a parachute was moved across a screen. For guest tickets, patrons were invited to try their luck at hitting the target with electric gun.



For the reissue of "Sweetheart of the Navy" and "23½ Hours Leave" at the Colonial Theatre, in Detroit, truck display was promoted through courtesy of the U. S. Navy Recruiting Service. Appropriately bannered and with navy guns, ammunition and equipment atop, the truck covered downtown during peak hours.

Preceding the New York premiere of "Dive Bomber" at the Strand Theatre, an exhibit of naval and aeronautical paraphernalia was placed in the mezzanine. Naval authorities assigned a chief radioman to answer queries regarding the machine guns, bombs, gun belts and other gear on display.



Round Table In Pictures

Attractor was Bob Busch's venetian blind lobby stunt arranged ahead of "A Woman's Face" at Warners' Jeffery, in Chicago. By means of small concealed motor, blind opened at intervals to reveal regular three-sheet head of Crawford.

Since street ballys are not permitted in Pittsfield, Mass., Round Tabler E. M. Dowling at the Capitol Theatre, ahead of his engagement of "Charley's Aunt", dressed lad in woman's attire and planted him on bench in outer lobby reading copy of press-book.

At practically no cost are the "home-made" lobby displays constructed by Mrs. B. W. Dickinson at the Hamlet Theatre, in Hamlet, N. C. Below is one of her latest, for "The Bride Came C.O.D.", with the church painted on cardboard, windows also painted to represent stained glass. Couple was five-and-dime dolls.

Window tieup which is reported to have been highly satisfactory to both store and theatre was that promoted by J. E. Lederer for date on "Caught in the Draft" at the Armour, in North Kansas City, Mo. Cutout of Hope in bed alongside pup tent was labeled as his new summer estate.

Lad, dressed as bearded farmer, wearing exaggerated sombrero, led two lads inside prop cow outfit through the streets of Billings, Mont., as part of Stewart North's exploitation on "Barnyard Follies" at the Rio Theatre.

A display that stopped 'em was Francis Deering's lobby ahead of "Blossoms in the Dust" at Loew's, in Houston, Tex. Promoted from local florist, in exchange for credit, were gladiolas, center featuring cutout of Greer Garson.

Street Stunts Found Effective By Feldman on "Dollar Baby"

At the Paramount, in Syracuse, Dick Feldman for "Million Dollar Baby" had a pretty gal tour downtown streets distributing promoted candy kisses. Daily ran a two-column scene cut of Priscilla Lane and Jeffrey Lynn gratis and gave a good plug to the picture in their personal "Man About Town" column. In exchange for permission to place a 40 x 80 ad on Nash cars in his lobby with sign "This is a Million Dollar Baby too," theatre received 250 gratis announcements on their telephone time service mentioning picture, playdates, and cast.

Orchestrations were placed with hotel bands, music store gave over window display to Decca banners advertising the song "Million Dollar Baby," flanked by actual records along with tiein copy, and five and dime music counter displayed title pages of song hits.

Dunn Holds "Face" Preview For Beauty Shop Owners

Sunday morning preview of "A Woman's Face" was held by Eddie Dunn at the Paramount, in Des Moines to which two members of every beauty shop in town were invited. This brought special window card representation in 172 shops, operators plugging the picture to patrons in addition. Stores also featured a Joan Crawford hairdo. Through tieup with nearby tea room, a special theatre-dinner arrangement was made wherein for one price customers could attend show and have dinner. Theatre and store plugged the tiein.

Advance teaser trailer used three weeks ahead carried the line "Female Scarface Headed for Des Moines, Watch Out." This was followed with a longer trailer two weeks in advance with a continuation of the Scarface angle. Week ahead special cross-plug trailer was made up and run on the screens of the other nine Tri-States theatres there. Numerous window displays were promoted and display stands landed in leading hotels.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Contests Aid Edwards On "Tom, Dick and Harry"

Novel contests highlighted Dave Edwards' "Tom, Dick and Harry" campaign at the Rialto in Salt Lake City, one of which was tied to local jeweler who offered a diamond ring and wrist watch for the two best letters received on "Which Boy Would You Have Married?" Store used large space in local dailies during the contest with cuts of Rogers, Murphy, Marshall and Meredith along with a sales talk on the film. Window displays were also featured.

Another phase of the campaign was a jingle contest arranged with Station KUTA in which tickets were offered as daily prizes. Newspaper advertising was started week ahead of opening with dailies using a generous allotment of stories and art.

Rosy Ties Contest To Hose Shortage

What women are to wear instead of silk hose was seized upon by Morris Rosenthal for the benefit of "Wild Geese Calling" at Loew's Poli Majestic, Bridgeport, the Loewman planting a newspaper contest with prizes of nylon hose for the best answers. Idea was hooked directly to the date with a two-column stocking cut of Joan Bennett from the picture, tied to the plant in the accompanying contest publicly which read: "When stockings of the mesh type, such as Joan Bennett wears in 'Wild Geese Calling,' opening at the Majestic, on Thursday, become extinct, what will women wear?"

For giveaway, small envelopes imprinted with "There's Gold in Here, Pardner," were distributed. These were stuffed with gold-flittered feathers attached to cards with picture copy and carrying the top tiein line, "It's 24-karat solid gold entertainment." Street bally took form of a three-foot compo goose, lettered with theatre credits. Man carrying the figure stopped at street corners and blew a wild-goose call on a hunting whistle.

Fight slants on "Ringside Maisie" used by Rosy featured a newspaper yarn about women managers and handlers in ring history, the story written by a local sports authority and conductor of a leading health school, planted on the sports page. Another break had to do with Maxie Rosenbloom, who appears in the picture, and is acquainted in the Bridgeport sector. Both stories of course identified by the picture by title and date.

Novelty giveaway was a numbered imitation fight admission ticket tied to a "lucky number" offer, with some of the corresponding numbers listed in the lobby good for guest tickets.

Shannon Hosts Draftees At "Blackout" Opening

Special letters over the signature of Chuck Shannon, Warners' Whitehall, Pittsburgh, were mailed to inducted boys extending invitation for them to attend the opening of "Blackout" as guests of the management. Shannon played host to a contingent of men with local prominents on hand to greet the boys and award promoted gifts. High school band was secured, advance stories planted on front page of local papers and station KQV plugged the event which included picture comment.

To attract his kid patronage, Chuck distributed special tinted heralds calling attention to his regular selected Saturday program of hits, plus the fact that each child attending would receive a comic book.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Excuse It, Please

Through an inadvertance, photo run in issue of August 23 showing lobby auxiliary headquarters of the local USO was credited to Dick Feldman, Schine's Paramount, in Syracuse. T. J. Cary at the Capitol in Waverly, N. Y. was responsible for the tieup.

"Blossoms" Babies Allow Ace Hookup

The set of appealing baby-head ads included in the M-G-M pressbook for "Blossoms in the Dust" has been put to immediate exploitation uses on the date, Jimmie Redmond, at the Bonham, Fairbury, Nebr., for instance, reporting a contest wherein those bringing the entire six to the theatre were admitted free of charge when accompanied by one regular adult admission.

Made up in card form, carrying theatre credits, the baby-heads were numbered, from one to six. Each issue of the numbered cards was distributed in one of six leading stores for insertion in all outgoing packages. In addition, they were passed out at the theatre and house-to-house in the residential districts, so that in advance most every family in town possessed at least three of the set. Result was that many calls were had at the theatre asking where the rest of the set could be obtained, writes Redmond. Newspaper support was had with cuts of the babies run in both papers.

Hammit Asks Name for Baby

On the date at the Strand, Crawfordsville, Ind., Guy D. Hammitt executed a "name-the-baby" competition, hooked up to one of the local dailies. Accompanying one of the pressbook cuts, the paper ran stories inviting readers to name the infant for cash prizes and guest tickets, girl in nurse's uniform distributed the baby cards. In addition, Hammitt landed a stirring lead editorial on the picture which aided immeasurably in calling attention to the date.

Radio plugs for "Blossoms" plus mention in three of the daily columns was the net announced for the date by Arnold Gates, at Loew's Park, Cleveland, by reason of a tiein with a leading maternity hospital wherein each child born during the engagement was presented with a baby rattle.

Fitzpatrick Hosts Mayor

Tying up with leading photographers, Ed Fitzpatrick, at Loew's Poli, in Waterbury, Conn., for date on "Blossoms in the Dust," staged a search for the city's most beautiful red head. Two photographic studios cooperation with announcements promoted on Stations WATR and WBRY. For further publicity, a gold engraved five-foot compo pass was carried through the streets by two attractive redheads and presented to Mayor Scully at the City Hall, his honor being guest of Fitz opening night.

Theatre attendant using small mimeograph machine went to work on downtown street corners running off special messages on "Blossoms," which were distributed to passersby. Highlight of campaign was the six-chapter serialization which was planted week ahead with theatre underline.

Ahead of "Moon Over Miami," Fitz promoted two popular local girls to teach the specialty conga number in theatre lobby for two hours each night week before opening. Dressed in brilliant red and lame costumes, the gals who were also used for street bally, brought considerable attention. Another lobby attractor featured 24-sheet cut-out figure of Betty Grable in reclining position against a blue corrugated background, models in bright terry cloth robes, beach furniture, display cards, etc., completed the atmospheric setpiece.

Hometown Paper for Selectees Promoted by Hart on "Draft"

Setting up Bob Hope as a sponsor for the idea, Lou Hart wangled some extra publicity for "Caught in the Draft" at Schine's Hippodrome, Gloversville, N. Y., by getting the local Montgomery Ward branch manager to donate subscriptions to the home-town papers to a contingent of local selectees. Presentation was made to the boys on the stage of the Hipp, on the eve of their departure for camp, the leave-taking being coincident with the opening of the picture. In addition, the selectees were also given utility kits as prescribed by Army regulations.

Hart hit on the subscription idea as a sound builder-upper, and in discussing the plan with Frank L. Rogers, the publisher of both papers, found that the publisher had arranged for subscription to soldiers at half the regular rate. The Schiner then convinced Mr. Rogers that the offer should be stressed in publicity and brought in the name of Bob Hope to help it along. Getting the publicity-conscious Montgomery Ward head to go along then was the next step, and then the publisher took over.

The day ahead the papers broke with a half-column story, crediting all concerned. The day after the opening was capped with a three-column cut and caption of the stage presentation, the picture and theatre of course prominently mentioned.

Street Ballys Utilized By Burke on "Carolina"

To acquaint folks with his opening on "My Life With Caroline" at the Paramount, in Glens Falls, Bill Burke had a man leading a horse around town with banner reading: "Just another plug for," etc. Second bally consisted of bales of hay which were spotted on street corners and in front of theatre with copy: "Hay, don't miss the year's funniest picture," etc. Imprinted bags were distributed at local market and five and dime stores, numerous window displays landed and stills of Anna Lee spotted on cosmetic counters of coperating stores.

Contacting Chamber of Commerce, Burke secured the short "Defense for America" in addition to 100 one-sheets which were spotted strategically around town, in recruiting offices and post offices, factories, etc. The Aviation Defense School plugged the short to all classes and a letter was sent to all Chamber of Commerce members at their expense calling attention to the short. Highlight was the appearance of the Mayor who made a brief address at the opening night show.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"John Doe" Impersonator Sought by Localites

Running for seven days in local daily was the "John Doe" search instigated by city manager H. H. Chakeres and manager Oliver Nicklas for that picture at the Regent Theatre, in Springfield, Ohio. Cooperating daily gave front page stories each day stressing the twenty-five dollar offer to the person capturing John Doe. Checks made out to bearer and signed by Doe with picture tiein copy on reverse side were pasted at various spots throughout the city while the bally was on the streets and fleet of trucks was appropriately bannered with copy.

Much was also made locally over the annual Marble Tourney for boys and girls and sponsored by paper. Rules and entry blanks were run and valuable prizes promoted for winners who were eligible for the national finals.

Mayor Endorsement Aids Moore on "Flames" Date

Stressing the modern history value of "World in Flames," E. L. Moore for that picture's opening at the Grand, in Sudbury, Ontario personally contacted heads of local church, veteran and civic groups and invited them to attend a special screening. Through cooperation of school heads, announcements were made urging all classes to see the picture, pupils dismissed early to enable children to attend the show. Mayor Beaton endorsed the picture, this together with endorsements of other local prominents good for publicity breaks.

For "The Invisible Woman," Hannah created a gag lobby display consisting of large tank in which was placed seaweed, sand, shells etc., sign over all read: "The world's only invisible goldfish, loaned by the Invisible Woman." Another stunt was planting artificial model legs dressed with shoes and stockings, white gloves wired and stuffed and large hat suspended midair. Appropriate tiein copy was used here too.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Sanders Reports on Recent Activities

Numerous window displays were promoted by Johnny Sanders at the Junction, in Grand Junction, Colo., for "Blood and Sand." In addition a hand-painted 16-sheet was planted in the heart of the downtown district with copy reading: "See the actual bull fight filmed in the arena at Mexico City," etc. Public address system was used on advertising truck appropriately bannered with cast, title and playdates, loud speaker plugging the picture with catch lines from the pressbook. Special lobby was constructed for the date and heralds distributed in advance in entire trade territory.

For "She Knew All the Answers," Sanders planted window cards in recreation center, mess halls, etc., of Fort Riley and adjacent army camps. Posters were tacked on light poles in the city and surrounding area and Johnny secured free reader and scene mat in both daily and weekly paper three days ahead.

Reaching 50 miles for players to appear in a radio dramatization of "Underground" over Station WABY in Albany, Jules Curley publicized the date at the Warner Strand by getting members of the famed Berkshire Playhouse Acting Company to travel the distance for the air show. It went over so well, that the Warnerman repeated following week on "Man Power."

The two 100-mile "jumps" were publicized in the Albany papers with cuts and stories. The radio time was promoted.

A Letter To The 'Million Dollar Baby'

Thanks for the compliments. I'm sure the boys at the camp will get a kick out of our post card shower.

Lets see what you can do, Baby ! !

(Signed) Clark Gable

Law of the Tropics

(Warner Brothers, 1941-42)

South American Romance

In its transposition from the printed pages of the novel by Alice Tisdale Hobart to the motion picture screen "Law of the Tropics" has lost none of its romantic intrigue. With the locale of a South American branch of an American rubber company this story of a marriage for convenience, under the directorial guidance of Ray Enright proceeds at a steady if not swift, pace.

It concerns an ambitious company employe, Jeffrey Lynn, and a honky-tonk entertainer, Constance Bennett, who enter into a left-handed romance—he to save face after promising to bring a wife back to the branch office, and she to evade the long arm of the law which has tracked her from Jersey City. With the stipulation that they remain married for only three months love blossoms forth and it is not until the officer of the law catches up with her that their true love is tested successfully.

Previewed in the Warner projection room in New York at a screening for the trade press, all of whom watched the story with little comment.—GEORGE SPIRES.

Nine Lives Are Not Enough

(Warner Brothers, 1941-42)

Newspaper Adventure

Ronald Reagan, who held fifth position in the exhibitors' voting of the "Stars of Tomorrow" poll conducted by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, herein returns to the screen in his first picture since the tabulation was announced, in a role that won him his place in the listing. He is seen as the flippant and imaginative reporter of a metropolitan newspaper demoted to the position of legman who stumbles upon, investigates and finally solves a series of murders which have baffled a big city police force—all done in true movie reporter style.

Supporting the star are Joan Perry, as the daughter of one of the murder victims who lends romance to the picture while aiding the reporter, James Gleason and Edward Brophy as the sergeant and dumb cop, respectively, assigned to the case, and Howard da Sylva in a comedy role as the usual movie style bellowing city editor who'd fire a man at the drop of a copy pencil.

The picture's theme and treatment have served many times since "Front Page" and "Five Star Final" which set the style for this type melodrama. Nevertheless, for audiences who enjoy good newspaper melodramas spiced throughout with romance, adventure and comedy, the film offers satisfying value.

Previewed in the Warner Brothers' projection room in New York at a screening attended by the trade press. Those in attendance audibly enjoyed the antics and adventures of the screen reporter and were generally pleased with the production.—GEORGE SPIRES.

Prairie Stranger

(Columbia—1940-'41 Release)

"The Medico" Wins Again

Rebounding from a decline following the striking opener of the series, Columbia's "Medico" sequence of Westerns starring Charles Starrett levels off in this number to a pitch of entertainment promising sustained popularity.

This time the Medico and his associate set up office in a strange town and find themselves involved in a cattle-poisoning episode culminating in murder, the doctor being accused of same and escaping custody but returning to prove, by means of microscopic inspection of bullets, his own innocence and the villain's guilt.

Don't let the presence of laboratory operations deceive you, however, for there is a plentitude of fisticuffs, riding, shooting and a related action in the enterprise.

Music, handled by Cliff Edwards and by Lew Preston and His Ranch Hands, is of better order than common and fitted into the running time more adroitly.

William Berke and Lambert Hillyer handled production and direction respectively.

Previewed for the trade press in studio projection room, consensus holding the film one of the better sort in its bracket.—W.R.W.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Producer, William Berke. Director, Lambert Hillyer. Based on a book by James L. Rubel. Photographed by Benjamin Kline. Edited by James Sweeney. The Outlaw Trail

(RKD Radio Pictures, 1941-42)

Western

Good production values plus a few ingenuities in plot form the nucleus of "The Outlaw Trail," making it an above-the-average western saga.

Shooting starts almost before the picture does. "Red Haggerty," (Morris Ankrum) who hates banks almost as much as Jesse James hated railroads, prevails upon "Steve Haggerty," (Tim Holt) his nephew, to join him in a bank robbery to avenge the death of and injustices done to "Steve's" father, a rancher. Against "Steve's" will, the robbery is committed, and the money deposited in a bank in another town, with the view to a further robbery.

Tim Holt, as the hero, gives a restrained performance and manages not to appear too noble. Morris Ankrum turns in a good performance as Tim's uncle, Ray Whitley sings a song, and Lee (Lasses) White provides the brand of humor indigenous to western epics.

Authentic scenery, magnificent horse-riding and an abundance of shooting, always dear to western fans, are very much in evidence.

Previewed at the company projection room for a small trade press audience.—IRENE SMOLEN

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Produced by Bert Gilroy. Directed by Edward Killy. Cameraman, Harry Wild. Art director, Van Nest Polglase. Associate, Walter Keller. Recorded by Jack Grubb. The Pittsburgh Kid

Fight Picture

This is a fight picture molded to the formula of its predecessors but lifted above the ordinary, for showmen, by the personality of Billy Conn and the extraordinary public attention which has been focussed on him since his fight with Joe Louis. Its only fault is occasional overemphasis on acting rather than fighting. Its novelty is a competent bit of acting by Jean Parker who recently received favorable mention in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Stars of Tomorrow poll. Miss Parker plays a fight manager and makes the character not incongruous in a typical fighters' training camp.

The plot is complete with a ruthless promoter opposed to an honest and ethical one who dies and is succeeded by his daughter, gangsters who nearly succeed in having the fearless challenger indicted for murder, a designing female, and, for climax, a properly satisfying fight from which the hero emerges winner and new champion.

Names familiar to the sports world, in addition to Conn, include Arthur Donovan, Henry Armstrong, Freddie Steele, Jack Roper, Sam Balter and Dan Tobey, all of whom appear briefly. Conn and Miss Parker are supported capably by Veda Ann Borg, Dick Purcell and Alan Baxter. Production and direction are by Armand Schaefer and Jack Townley.

Previewed in a projection room, a trade press audience found no fault with the fighting, some with the acting.—JAMES D. IVERS.

Dude Cowboy

Duding for Uncle Sam

In the second of the new Tim Holt series he tries a Nevada dude ranch, but only in the service of the United States Government. He's after a slick group of counterfeiters who have kidnapped a man from the Bureau of Engraving, forcing him to print the money handed over the gambling tables.

Produced by Bert Gilroy and directed by David Howard, the film is well-paced, a nice balance of riding and shooting, humor and song. Ray Whitley's ballads are quite in order in the setting and pleasantly sung, while "Lasses" White's antics almost attach him permanently to the schoolmarm, but not quite.

Riding the Wind

Western

Tim Holt as "Clay," Ray Whitley as "Smokey," and Lee (Lasses) White as "Whopper," form the triumvirate again in this western, produced along familiar lines.

The villain in this instance is one "Henry Dodge," (Eddie Dew) who wants to deprive the ranchers of water unless they agree to his terms, and the hero is, naturally, Tim Holt ("Clay") who champions the cause of justice. While waiting for a new decision to be handed down from the Territorial Court at Albuquerque, the ranchers decide to have a well sunk and the water pumped by a windmill. Enter the windmill builder, his equipment and his daughter, "Joan," (Mary Douglas) who are, in turn, attacked by "Dodge's" henchmen. After a moderate degree of action, shooting and a good fight at the finish, the favorable decision from Albuquerque arrives, and all's well that ends well.

The Forgotten Village

(Arthur Mayer-Joseph Burstyn)

Steinbeck and Mexico

This is another protest from the vigorous pen of John Steinbeck. In "The Forgotten Village," which is a documentary of remote village life in Mexico, Steinbeck inveighs against the superstition and ignorance which burdens the inhabitants of a rude and ancient settlement. In the vein of his familiar sociological views he argues for the blessings of a better life for the peasants of Mexico.

The subject is laden with controversial aspects. It already has run afoul of the New York State Board of Censors, which institution has refused a permit for its theatrical exhibition. On re-consideration it seems likely that the exhibition of the picture will be permitted because a childbirth incident, which was objected to, while calculated to give anguish to an audience, seems hardly to fit tightly under the classification of indecency.

The film in its over-all argument affords many suggestions of an anti-religious attitude and as such becomes classified with a well-known school of criticism of Mexico and Mexican affairs. Damaged church buildings with barricaded doors creep in as apparently innocent background shots. There is, if only accidentally, a confusion of religion and superstition, especially in symbols and in depictions of rites and customs.

"The Forgotten Village" is a sociological study of the people of the little pueblo of Santiago, in the mountains of Mexico, who have not yet caught up with modern civilization, reflected in the life of the boy Juan Diego and his family.

The film is well done, the photography is noteworthy and the narration by Burgess Meredith calls for special mention.

Previewed at the Preview Theatre, New York, where a mixed audience of professional reviewers reacted to the few humorous incidents, and applauded sponstaneously at the finish.—IRENE SMOLEN.

Lady Be Good

Musical Comedy

When "Lady Be Good" is good it's very, very good—which is when it's musical. When it isn't musical it's engaged in telling, with more deliberation and less humor than the rules of entertainment require, a story about a song writing team whose romances and rhythms don't jibe.

Eleanor Powell sets a new high in her dancing career in a timed routine performed with a dog who cooperates as if trained for no other purpose and in one of the longest single-take tap routines on record, a production number as big as MGM's biggest stage and packed with audience value. Another highlight is a song by Virginia O'Brien, the "Dead Pan" singer of "Meet the People."

Comment following the tradeshowing at the Victoria Theatre, Los Angeles, was in favor of eliminating 20 or 30 minutes of the narrative portion of the picture if practicable.

Directed by Norman Z. McLeod. Produced by Arthur Freed. Music and lyrics by George Gershwin. Lyrics by Ira Gershwin. P. C. A. No. 7297. Running time, 110 minutes. Release date, September, 1941. General audience classification.

Franz Schubert's Life and Music

Here is the music of Franz Schubert, climaxed by the St. Luke's choristers' singing of his Ave Maria, brilliantly recorded in terms of narrative.

Here is the life of Franz Schubert, its tragic shadows relieved by patches of accompanying humor, fascinatingly blended with his compositions.

On account of its subject matter and the quality of its music, the film offers special advantages to showmen who take steps to interest schools, churches, civic and cultural groups in its presentation.

Love Against Skyscrapers

Exhibitors should experience no great difficulty in exploiting a picture like this bearing a title, exciting in itself, and featuring a cast including Fred MacMurray, Mary Martin, Robert Preston, Akim Tamiroff, Lynne Overman, Eric Blore and Fuzzy Knight.

The plot is comparatively simple and offers no apprehensions as to its eventual outcome. Yet, with the story unfolding against the great backdrop of New York itself, with its ceaseless flow of comedy, tragedy, drama, smiles and heartbreak, the illusion of substance is achieved. The performances are all good.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde

Spencer Tracy Version

Showmen who exploit this version of Robert Louis Stevenson's shocker as surpassing the John Barrymore and Fredric March filmings of the subject will be well within bounds.

As produced and directed by Victor Fleming, who appears to have proceeded without budgetary limitation, the picture strikes and holds a deliberate pace piling detail upon detail, horror upon horror, in a manner to keep an audience squirming between gasps. Dialogue is expertly handled to intensify the striking power of these incidents in the plot which have always gripped spectators. Closeups are employed steadily for sustaining tension in some of the most extensive uses of the fear motivation on record.

In point of performance, production and direction the picture rates high. In point of box office it makes good on all the promises it may imply to persons who like the star and persons who like the Jekyll-Hyde story. On all points it rank as "strong meat" for the adult market.

Previewed in a studio projection room to trade press representatives who indicated plainly by their behaviour during the screening and expressions afterward, unanimity of esteem for the workmanship displayed.

Lady Scarface

(RKO)

Metropolitan Melodrama

Reportedly filmed at less cost than any of the four other pictures in RKO-Radio's first block-of-five, this melodrama of gangsters and detectives rates on a par with contemporary films in its classification. It is something with which to fill an hour of program time, making no claim to distinction but furnishing, nevertheless, pastime.

Opening in Chicago, the story moves to New York, shooting and death occurring at both ends. The title refers to a gang chief known to the police as 'Slade" and assumed to be a man, though made known to the audience as a woman. Efforts of a Chicago detective and a girl photographer in employ of a picture magazine to track down the criminal are ultimately successful, humor as well as suspense marking the proceedings.

Henry Aldrich for President

(Paramount)

Comedy Leavening

This is a spritely, bright comedy having marked distinction as exceptional family entertainment. Third in the series of the "Aldrich Family" group, the film involves "Henry's" candidacy for the presidency of the high school student body. He wins the race but not until after outwitting the skullduggery of his rival and piloting an airplane to carry back the man who could reveal the plot against him.

The studio's new "Henry"—Jimmy Lydon—makes of the characterization a fully believable youngster who is not overly bright and who manages, sometimes not through his own fault, to tangle himself up effectively at the wrong times. Supporting him are Charles Smith as "Dizzy," June Preisser, Mary Anderson, John Litel, Dorothy Peterson, Martha O'Driscoll, Vaughan Glaser, Lucien Littlefield and others.

Trade shown in the Los Angeles Ambassador Theatre where some 50 persons of the exhibition and trade press fields gave audible evidence that they were heartily enjoying it.

Three Cockeyed Sailors

(United Artists)

British Humor

At the preview several hundred exhibitors of the Los Angeles territory found this British-made picture conducive to laughter, ranging from chuckles and guffaws.

Most comparable to the American team of Abbott and Costello is the British trio featured here, comprising Tommy Trinder, Michael Wilding and Claude Hulbert. As British sailors, they quite inadvertently find themselves on the German pocket battleship which their own English battleship has been assigned to hunt down. They manage to turn the vessel over to their own captain, after a series of incidents patterned wholly for laughter and successful in their design.

Citizen Kane

(RKO Radio)

Psychological Adventure

The screen's most curious adventure in narration is revealed in Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane," a picaresque tale of a mythical American beset by accidental wealth, overwhelming ego, selfish ambition and a hunger for power and display. It is a tale, not a drama, a collection of greater and lesser character studies.

The story is exceedingly simple. Once upon a time a willful boy, born in the rude West, became an heir to what was to be a vast fortune. Among his heritages was a moribund newspaper. He made the newspaper and the publishing business his toy and tool—became a magnate of farflung enterprises. He was a collector of objets d'art of all sorts, built palaces for homes, had, but did not enjoy, some changes of wives, and in time died. The last word from his lip was "Rosebud." That word supplies all the suspense of the tale.

The camera action and scenes run backwards and forwards and sideways to pick up the story. The photographic treatment is magnificently competent in the doing of what Mr. Welles was trying to do.

The picture was seen with a press preview audience at the Broadway theatre in New York. That audience, in which there was a considerable sprinkling of publishers and newspaper executives, gave the picture sincere applause at the final curtain.

Dressed to Kill

Crime and Comedy

Third in the 20th-Fox series based on the "Michael Shayne, Private Detective" character, "Dressed to Kill" again presents Lloyd Nolan as the leading character, whose contemplated marital status never matures due to the fact that the lure of solving murders for a living intervenes. In this picture, which deals with a bizarre double murder, and whose background is show business, Nolan is supported by Mary Beth Hughes, Sheila Ryan, William Demarest, Ben Carter, Virginia Brissac, Henry Daniel, and others.

The film is a compactly made melodrama, neatly paced by director Eugene Forde, who leavened tragedy with comedy. One of the lower budgeted offerings in 20th-Fox's first block, this Sol. M. Wurtzel production is ample supporting fare in the situations for which it is aimed.

Produced and released by Twentieth Century-Fox. Sol. M. Wurtzel, executive producer. Eugene Forde, director. P. C. A. No. 7368. Running time, 74 minutes. Release date, August 8, 1941. General audience classification.

Navy Blues

(Warner Brothers)

Musical Comedy

The Warner Brothers have gone back to the musical comedy format which they pioneered, for this entry in the service-comedy sweepstakes of the period. When the picture goes musical, which is often, it measures up to this rich Warner precedent.

When it goes comic, which is in between these all-out splurges of eye and ear entertainment, the production invites comparison with some service-comedies now in exhibition and pays a stiff price for following them.

Jack Oakie and Jack Haley are in and all over the picture as two sailors whose troubles on shipboard and ashore provide the incitements to laughter. The boys work hard and it is neither their fault nor Warners' that two other comedians portraying two other sailors have just completed convincing the nation that no other pair ever was or will be so funny in that particular variety of enterprise.

Ann Sheridan and Martha Raye are in the picture somewhat less constantly as night club employees whose interests are entangled with those of the sailors, both girls dominating the singing and dancing numbers more successfully than the intervals between.

Produced and released by Warner Brothers. Hal B. Wallis, executive producer. Associate producers, Jerry Wald and Jack Saper. Director, Lloyd Bacon. P. C. A. No. 7328. Running time, 108 minutes. Release date, Sept. 13, '41. General audience classification.

The Prime Minister

(Warner Brothers)

Story of Disraeli

Warners, for a second time, has explored and dramatized the rise of Benjamin Disraeli to power and fame in Victorian England. The first one, starring George Arliss and released in 1930, was made in Hollywood, this one was produced and edited at Teddington, England, during the height of the Nazi aerial bombardment on nearby London in 1940. The picture had its initial premiere in Ottawa, Canada, on Wednesday, August 13th, before an appreciative audience including some of the province's most distinguished officials and prominent citizens. At the finish of the film the audience rose to cheer in expression of its enthusiasm.

Painted on a broad canvas, the plot deals with Disraeli's attempts to lead the British nation through the turbulent stage of world-moving events which led up to the Berlin Conference in 1878. The whole panorama of the ambitions, intrigues, jealousies, hatreds and prejudices of individuals and nations behind the scenes of European history of the '70's, is brought into realistic focus, sharply reminiscent of the treachery and double-dealing of our own times.

Produced and released by Warner Brothers. Thorold Dickinson, director. P. C. A. No. 7454. Release date not set. General audience classification.

Wild Geese Calling

Wanderlust in the Nineties

Life, love, sin and adventure as they prevailed in the great Northwest in the Nineties, a variety of fiction recalling the era of "The Spoilers," are dealt with bluntly and with realistic and impressive result in this melodrama co-starring Harry Fonda and Joan Bennett. It is a tale told with candor and power and with the elemental emotions, both good and bad, ranged in opposition plausibly, birth of a child furnishing the climax which puts everybody's affairs to rights.

The spirit of the period, as familiarized by books and legends which have been popular since the turn of the century, is preserved with fidelity and no trimmings. A high degree of realism is obtained without cost to logic or the essential values of the story.

The nature and treatment of the material suggests discouragement of juvenile attendance.

Parachute Battalion

(RKO)

Service Comedy-Drama

To the extent that use of parachute troops in modern war may be said to have kindled special interest in this branch of the military, this service film dealing with the training of American parachutists stands out from its contemporaries. It is not in other particulars different from its predecessors in the groove of partiotic interest.

The story departs from the pattern of service picture plots in minor details, but includes the soldier gripped by fear—in fact, two of them—the braggart who turns out to be solid soldier at bottom, the officer's daughter wooed by squad rivals, some fisticuffs, a yokel for comedy relief, some near-accidents and some rescues, everybody coming through with chin up at the finish.

Tradeshown at the Victoria Theatre, Los Angeles, to some 50 exhibitors and the trade press. Interest in the parachute sequences was manifested by a ripple of comment and some of the doughboy humor clicked.

Produced and released by RKO-Radio. Producer, Howard Benedict. Director, Leslie Goodwins. P. C. A No. 7241. Running time, 75 minutes. Release date, Sept. 12, '41. General audience classification.

Hurricane Smith

(Republic)

New Wrinkle on a Western

This is an action film based on "reclamation of the land" idea which was argued some years ago in "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." Sandwiched in the plot for greater suspense-builders are a murder and bank theft. Ray Middleton, who came to Republic via "Lady from Louisiana" and "Gangs from Chicago," plays the lead, opposite Jane Wyatt, former Broadway actress who was last seen in "Lost Horizon" and Republic's "Girl from God's Country." Mr. Middleton is not much on histrionics but his charming smile, good looks and he-man physique should make him a favorite with the ladies.

Produced and released by Republic. Associate producer, Robert North. Director, Bernard Vorhaus. P. C. A. No. 7446. Running time, 69 minutes. Release date, July 20, 1941. General audience classification.

Arizona Bound

(Monogram)

New Western Series

Monogram herewith introduces a new series of westerns, feature of which is the return to the screen of Buck Jones and Col. Tim McCoy, two of the most popular of western stars of yore. Under the general label of "The Rough Riders," the series will present them, teamed with Raymond Hatton, another screen veteran, as three retired United States marshals who are periodically called from retirement to restore law and order in various parts of the west.

"Arizona Bound" gives promise of a group in which action and other elements will find ready customers among western fans. However, the series' debut film is marked by irregular pacing, trite dialogue, and unsteady direction.

Monogram release of a Scott R. Dunlap production. Produced by Scott R. Dunlap. Directed by Spencer Bennet. P. C. A. Certificate No. 7516. Running time, 57 minutes. Release date, July 19, 1941. General audience classification.

Sergeant York

(Warner Brothers)

World War I Heroism

Gary Cooper's new starring vehicle dramatizes the exploits of Sergeant Alvin C. York, the Tennessee mountaineer who, as a young doughboy during the first World War was responsible for the capture of 132 German prisoners. As transmitted faithfully to the screen it is a yarn loaded with local color and simple, home-spun philosophy. The film develops the character of a rugged Tennessee farmer whose chief problem devolved on wresting a living from rocky pastures. Egged on by his mother, the local pastor and influenced by the girl he loves, the hero "gets religion," after undergoing an enlightening experience during an electric storm.

Gary Cooper provides a performance showmen can herald as equal to his best, and his, of course, is the top name for marquee exploitation. Joan Leslie, as the heart interest, warrants building of her status as a new star. Others of the cast, including Walter Brennan as Pastor Pile, as an exhorting preacher, and Margaret Wycherly, as York's mother, do fine acting in a few noteworthy scenes.

The film has definite audience appeal of the type engendered by "The Fighting 69th," to which it may be compared without guaranteeing that repetition will bring the same returns.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Produced by Jesse L. Lasky and Hal B. Wallis. Based upon the Diary of Sergeant York. A Howard Hawks Production. P. C. A. Certificate No. 7090. Running time, 134 minutes. Release date, Sept. 27, '41. General audience classification.

Down in San Diego

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Young America Adventuring

There's a lot of zip in the action of this adventure of young Americans, a heap of suspense as it nears the finish line and a sock in the ending.

The film has to do with the efforts of a band of adolescents to make good a young man's escape from the influence of gangsters who seek to continue their control of him after he has joined the Marine Corps. Believing he has committed a murder, he promises to take orders from a man whom he does not know is a foreign agent. The youngsters follow him to San Diego, obtain employment in the town, track down the foreign agent, prove to the marine that he is innocent of the murder, and are in at the roundup of the would-be saboteurs. The marine is killed in the finale, an episode in which Navy planes sink a ship by bombing, this tragic incident adding power and integrity to the story.

Produced and released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Robert B. Sinclair, director. Frederick Stephani, producer. P. C. A. No. 7500. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, after Sept. 1, '41. General audience classification.

Belle Starr

(20th Century-Fox)

Reconstruction Drama

There are good, solid entertainment values in this story of a young woman who carries on for the Confederate cause in Missouri following the official conclusion of the Civil War, only to be killed, just after she learns that many of those fighting with her are not soldiers, but bandits, and while she was attempting to put an end to the strife for the good of the country.

Gene Tierney, playing the heroine, gives a performance that should do much towards raising her up among the most popular stars. Randolph Scott, as Captain Sam Starr, the leader of the guerilla band, is convincing. The supporting roles are also very well played.

The color in "Belle Star" ranks with the best produced thus far. Suspense and actions of the characters are relied on more than the shooting type of action to hold the audience's attention. There is but little comic relief.

The preview audience of clubwomen reviewers seemed to be impressed with the film and the performance of Gene Tierney.

Produced and released by Twentieth Century Fox. Irving Cummings, director. Associate producer, Kenneth Macgowan. P. C. A. Certificate No. 7275. Running time, 87 minutes. Release date, September 12th, 1941. General audience classification.

Nothing but the Truth

(Paramount)

Hope-Goddard Collaboration

Showmen who like to document their promises to customers can background their exploitation of this third collaboration of Bob Hope and Paulette Goddard by references to "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Ghost Breakers" as other stage successes which the pair have brought to the screen without loss of point or sparkle, with respect to this number, they can also remind their trade that the play itself has a triple past, having entertained not only as stage play and novel, but also, on two occasions, as a motion picture.

This story, it will be remembered, is about a young man who wagers that he can tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, for 24 hours. The scene is Miami, the people are millionaires or reasonable facsimilies, and the complications are mainly conversational, although there is one sequence in which slapstick gets an outing. The humor is of the saying rather than the doing variety, however.

Trade shown at the Ambassador Hotel Theatre, Los Angeles, to an exhibitor representation, augmented by wives and families, which laughed heartily at the picture and were overheard by your eavesdropping correspondent on the way out of the auditorium expressing enthusiastic approval of the project.

Private Nurse

Vocational Trivia

Top name in this picture is Jane Darwell, portraying a nurse who takes into her matronly custody a younger member of her profession who has been left at the altar by her betrothed. The story generates no suspense or interest as it pertains to the lives of these principals, coming to a climax, instead, when the child of a racketeer, crippled in a skating accident, finds out that a mother believed dead is still living and prevails upon her father to reunite them. Ann Todd, single-handedly, puts pathos into this section of the picture, making its only claim for attention.

It is a program item of no consequence save as a subject with which to consume an hour of running time in areas where the double feature policy is mandatory by custom.

Produced and released by Twentieth Century-Fox. Sol. M. Wurtzel, executive producer. David Burton, director. P. C. A. No. 7277. Running time, 61 minutes. Release date, Aug. 22, '41. General audience classification.

Tanks a Million

(U. A. - Roach)

Streamlined Feature

Hal Roach's promises of a type of film to cope with the double feature problem were made good when he previewed the first in his series of streamlined features. Long enough to satisfy a public condition to double-decker programs, yet short enough to get the customers home by bedtime, it kept its audience in a state of hilarity throughout its fifty minutes.

This first in the Roach series is timely as to topic and brilliant in the simplicity of its treatment. It presents the adventures of a draftee who, having been something of a quiz kid prior to enlistment, enters the military service with the manual of arms and other source books memorized better than the commandant knows them. His rise, over obstacles set up by his buddies and superior officers, is meteoric and mirthful, side-splittingly funny but within plausibility withal. As the hardboiled sergeant who makes trouble for him, Joe Sawyer is a standout in the humor department. James Gleason adds punch to the enterprise as the commandant and Noah Berry, Jr., also furnishes important support.

Produced and released by United Artists. Hal Roach, producer. P. C. A. Certificate No. 7508. Running time, 50 minutes. Release date not set. General audience classification.

King of Dodge City

(Columbia)

New Western Series

First of a new western series in which Bill Elliot and Tex Ritter will be starred, this film augurs well for the group. It is an excitingly entertaining combination of action and music, with the latter interpolated in such a manner as not to interfere with the former.

The locale of the story is Kansas; the period, 1861, is ruled by a ruthless criminal and his henchmen, who control virtually everything. "Wild Bill Hickok" is commissioned by the chairman of a citizens' committee to round up the gang, and after a misunderstanding with the sheriff, played by Ritter, who jails him for murder and other crimes, exposes the band and brings about its extinction with the aid of the townspeople.

Slick Hicks

Characters fairly new to the screen—the Weavers — somewhat counterbalance an old situation, that of the farm folks suddenly in wealth and living appropriately until reminded that gold will not supplant proletarian friendship.

Production, by Armand Schaefer, is good in this apparently middle budget picture. Direction by Nick Grinde, the photography and sets all give evidence of careful studio work with the money available.

There are several musical numbers, with "Abner" playing the fiddle, "Elviry" singing; others with Betty Jane Rhodes soloing. All are adequate.

Hold Back the Dawn

Paramount)

Love Story

Exhibitors will not have to hold back anything in exploiting "Hold Back the Dawn," for here is a picture that has all the ingredients of entertainment, almost of life itself. It is an exciting and dramatic story, with love as its motif; it has enough action to please even western fans and enough intelligent dialogue to attract those who wear their foreheads high. The cast is star-studded—Charles Boyer, Paulette Goddard, Olivia de Havilland, Walter Abel.

The very beginning of the picture is different and out of the beaten path. "George Iscovescu" (Charles Boyer) enters the Paramount Studio main entrance and crashes the set where Mitchell Leisen (the director of "Hold Back the Dawn") is directing Veronica Lake in a scene from "I Wanted Wings." He contrives to get the director into conversation and attempts to sell him a story, his own story.

"Iscovescu" is a triple-threat man, a dancer, lover and scoundrel, and because he is true to character some situations confine the picture to adult entertainment. The theme concerns "Iscovescu's" attempt to enter the U. S. through Mexico.

Boyer's performance is a distinguished one, executed with skill and sophistication. There should be no difficulty in getting the women to come to the theatre.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Produced by Arthur Hornblow. Directed by Mitchell Leisen. P. C. A. No. 7139. Running time, 116 minutes. Release date, not set. Adult audience classification.

All That Money Can Buy

(RKO Radio)

"The Devil and Daniel Webster"

Originally titled "The Devil and Daniel Webster," then "Here Is a Man," and now "All That Money Can Buy," this melodrama of old New England presents Walter Huston as the Devil and Edward Arnold as Daniel Webster in competition for the soul of a farmer.

In common with other pictures which have dealt with the supernatural, this one faces the hazard of being proclaimed an artistic triumph while faring in the field of commerce according to the state of the public's appetite for fantasy, allegory and symbolism at the moment and point of exhibition.

Apart from whatever risk to success may or may not turn out to have been incurred in the presentation of the supernatural as the natural, the handling of the miraculous as routine, the production abounds in entertainment value. Produced and directed by William Dieterle at the peak of his proficiency, it ranks with the finest product Hollywood has made in point of artistic quality.

On account of the nature and treatment of the subject matter, requiring a measure of allowance for allegory and the intent of the producer, the film is adult entertainment.

Produced and distributed by RKO. Produced and directed by William Dieterle. Associate producer, Charles L. Glett. P. C. A. Certificate No. 7238. Running time, 107 minutes. Release date, October 17, 1941. Adult audience classification.

Items to rave about include:—

Sonja Henie at the peak of form on skates and skiis, and attaining at last a proficiency as an actress; Glenn Miller and his orchestra in the pink of melodic fettle; Mack Gordon-Harry Warren music, specifically four songs sung by various principals and played by the Miller organization;

Milton Berle and John Davis in comedy roles held within check and profiting from the restraint;

Skating sequences, staged by Hermes Pan, eclipsing all of those in which Miss Henie glided previously into the ranks of the Ten Biggest Money-Making Stars; skiing sequences surpassing any ever filmed.

POSITION DECLARED

IN his forthright outgivings of the week, Mr. Wendell Willkie has spoken poignant words for our industry. And he spoke for both his country and the motion picture industry when he said:

"The motion-picture industry and its executives are opposed to the Hitler regime in Germany. They have watched with horror the destruction of a free life within Germany and the ruthless invasion of other countries by Nazis. On behalf of the motion-picture industry and its personnel, I wish to put on the record this simple truth: We make no pretense of friendliness to Nazi Germany nor to the objectives and goals of this ruthless dictatorship. . . .

"In simple terms the United States stands for the right of an individual to lead a decent life; Hitler and his Nazis stand for the opposite. The motion-picture industry wants no compromise between these two concepts."

POLL EXPEDITION

ATTITUDE is one thing; action is another. Psychologists, salesmen, and poker players long have known that. Just now it is interesting that able Dr. Henry C. Link, vice-president of the American Psychological Association, should point to that phenomenon of divergence in polls.

It is apparent that Dr. Link is fed up with the behaviour of "an eager and gullible public, awaiting poll results like heaven-sent manna".

In a paper presented at the association's recent convention at Northwestern University in Evanston, he cited a test in which 500 persons were asked what brand of tires they used on their motor cars. A check of the cars showed that, while they made glib answers, they were so far in error that the question and answers were thrown into the ash can. That result, however, was, despite the academic disappointment, a test of observation and memory, not an invalidation of inquiry into preferences. The fact is that the customers buy motor cars with no more attention to tires than to brand names of carburetors or instrument-board clocks.

The psychologists might have done the cause of research some good by suggesting that polls can be authentic instruments only when they ask the persons polled questions on subjects that they know something about.

THERE is a broad acceptance in this republic of the notion that everyone is entitled to an opinion, about anything. That is probably an error, since valid, constructive decision can be made only with information. Our technological progress, for instance, has been made by decisions based on researched facts, demonstrated by micrometer, microscope, spectroscope and the like. That progress has outstripped the rest of our civilization wherein decisions in matters social, political and economic are almost invariably made by hunch, assumption, impulse, dictations and new deductions from old deductions, also from ancient wishes traditionalized into semblances of fact.

The consequence of that is, as the state of the world shows, that we know more about making monkey-wrenches than about the monkeys who use them, frequently throwing them into the machinery. Polling them will get no information about wrenches, plenty about their opinion of them.

That "eager and gullible public" which Dr. Link observes is eager because it is hungry for facts to tie to. It probably is not as big as he suspects, and it is probably considerably made up of editors and writers who prefer neat positive packages like election tables, box scores, census figures, pollen grains per cubic mile and such. Such material stands out like monuments in acres of type that are jungles of speculation and opinion. Many a public relations expert knows this and contrives such statistics as he requires. That is why all the social and economic figures extant when laid end to end make a pattern like a second-hand spider web.

WRITING for the radio page of the New York Times, Mr. John K. Hutchens last Sunday had a two-column consideration of radio polls, from which he emerged in the situation of the cormorant which swallowed the same eel three times, and lost. He reports, interestingly, that station WOR finds that only 32 per cent of the homes of New Yorkers have telephones, so that 68 per cent have never been polled. Now WOR will be ringing doorbells for personal interviews.

You will remember when a national weekly committed suicide with a poll based on the telephone books. The poll showed not the state of mind of a nation, but rather the attitude of that minority portion of the public provident and thrifty enough to afford a telephone.

Motion Picture Herald conducts two annual polls: the "Ten Best Money Makers", in which all the showmen of all the box offices of the land, not a mere sample, are asked for facts as explicit as the tape on the cash register, and, beginning this year, the same complete body of showmen is asked for its judgment of the prospects for "The Stars of Tomorrow". That poll asks and gets opinion from persons equipped to have opinion. As a check, the newspaper critics were polled, too. The divergence between the exhibitor and critic polls is what was anticipated of the differences of opinion to be reached by those who watch the screen only and those who watch the box office, too.

The merits of polls depend on who carries the pole and why.

PICTURES BIG ENOUGH

THE Publisher stood at the window tying seagoing knots in the curtain cord and looking down on the Music Hall roof.

"We should be having a piece about that theatre," he remarked, "from the point of view of the attitude of the world's greatest theatre toward the motion picture. You'll be remembering that from way back when the stage shows and presentation acts started, we have commonly heard that when business was good the stage show put it over, and when a

MAIL-ORDER 16 mm. theatres, to be shipped complete to any part of the country for $1,000 down, are planned by William Alexander, veteran showman, he revealed at San Francisco. The former South American exchange agent for William Fox claimed to have the circuit plans ready, awaiting financing.

The idea was prompted by the success of two 16 mm. features distributed by Mr. Alexander, "Kukan" and "Here Is Ireland." They have played more than 25 houses ordinarily equipped only for 35 mm. Mr. Alexander will ask would-be exhibitors to send dimensions of empty stores or buildings, and a pre-fabricated front, projection equipment, seats and turnstile would be forwarded. Total cost would be about $3,000, he estimates, one-third down, the balance on time. Exhibitors would be expected to buy product from Mr. Alexander.

Guarantee Asked

THE Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America on Wednesday asked the Committee for Reciprocity Information, Washington, to include in a pending supplemental trade agreement with Cuba a guarantee that it will not place American film companies in a less favorable position than they enjoyed August 24, 1934, when the present reciprocity treaty was adopted.

bad week came along it was because the picture was bad.

"The Music Hall always has had a stage show—most of them good and a lot of them superlatively good. But it is to be noticed that the Music Hall rather continuously and consistently makes available statistics on attendance and successes uniformly connected with and accredited to the motion picture attraction.

"The stage shows began notably with Roxy, because of a creative urge to be bigger, more important, than the screen. The fact is that the Music Hall was started as a project of super-vaudeville and international Hippodrome, too big for its britches and redeemed by an administration that put its larger faith in the screen and the American motion picture.

"That seems to be good for the house, its customers—and the pictures."

New Line for RCA

RCA PHOTOPHONE is in the theatre supply business—with both feet.

The company, marketing until now its Photophone sound system and its Magic Screen, has taken over the Brenkert line of projectors and lamps, and will sell all equipment through independent supply dealers in all key cities. Homer B. Snook RCA Photophone sales manager, said at Camden headquarters Wednesday that the RCA line "probably would be expanded even further."

It was admitted that a new service is in immediate offing: coating of projection lens, to increase light transmission.

RCA Photophone has six district offices through the country. However, equipment will be sold only through supply dealers. The numerous Photophone salesmen will assist those dealers.

RCA has no financial interest in the dealer outlets, it was emphasized.

Bullish on Exhibition

LOS ANGELES, one of the most heavily "seated" territories, appears slated for more theatre building. Investors with large amounts of idle money have been attracted to motion picture theatres by the usual belief that it will bring a quick return for the money. Theatre operators declare they have been the recipients of numerous proposals to take over the management of theatres which speculators intend to build it they can do so under the sponsorship of established and reputable exhibitors.

Fox West Coast, alone, has reported offers to take over 75 houses presented to it. It has been estimated that more than $5,000,000 for new theatre construction has been sidetracked by the refusal of both chain and independent men to undertake the operation of these houses. FWC has about 65 houses in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, with about 50 in outlying towns, while the entire circuit consists of 210 houses. There are approximately 275 independent houses in southern California.

Shy at Color Ads

THE ST. LOUIS Post-Dispatch is reported to be preparing to make available to its advertisers four color ads, but St. Louis exhibitors are not unduly excited. The new type of ads will be available, it is said, when the Post-Dispatch's new expansion program, now underway is completed. The new plant will be located east of the present Post-Dispatch building.

Advertising directors of St. Louis theatres claim the additional cost of four-color ads will justify its use only on rare occasions. Already, two-color ads have strained budgets without corresponding increase in business.

The exhibitors are concentrating their advertising chiefly in the three dailies, the Post-Dispatch and Star-Times, afternoon, and the Globe-Democrat, morning.

Won't Be Long Now

MOTION picture, music and publicity chiefs were hopeful this week that ASCAP's catalog would be returned to the NBC and CBS networks within two weeks, following action taken on Tuesday by the executive committee of the National Association of Broadcasters at a meeting held in New York. Neville Miller, NAB president, announced NAB's final approval of the ASCAP-NBC contract. At a previous meeting, the executive committee failed to take any action and retired for "further consideration" of the contract terms.

Mr. Miller announced that the committee voted approval of the proposed ASCAP contracts "in their present form which are highly satisfactory and offer broadcasters who desire to use ASCAP music an eminently fair and equitable basis for such use."

Mr. Miller also pointed out that the ASCAP contract would not affect operations of Broadcast Music, Inc., to which both NBC and CBS have pledged continued support on a long term basis.

New Season

CAMPAIGNS on behalf of the various New Movie Season activities already initiated, find theatremen busily engaged in preparing elaborate promotions to announce the coming product to the public. Foremost among these projects is the seven-city Loew-Poli New England theatres drive which features a slogan contest and other advertisings. Highlights of these exploitations will be found in this week's Managers' Round Table starting on page 65 to be followed next week by further reports on similar activities in other circuits.

Fireside Competition

EXHIBITORS the country over, at midweek, were anticipating the President's war-and-defense "fireside chat" of Thursday. Reason: Box office slump. When the President delivers his "fireside chats," he also delivers a mighty blow at theatre receipts.

His May 28th address, heard by an estimated 69,000,000 here (Stephen Early's estimate), and by uncounted millions elsewhere, cut attendance 30 per cent in New York City, heart of the show business. There were similar experiences elsewhere.

The Thursday night message scheduled for 10:00 to 10:15 Eastern Daylight Saving Time, will be heard by at least as large an audience here, and by listeners to 14 languages abroad, according to announcement. Again this week, as in May, circuits such as Loew's, RKO, and others, and many independents, will arrange programs and radio receivers, so that patrons may hear the message in theatres. And on Friday morning, they will again tabulate the receipts.

United States Treasury general license No. 71 authorizes the payment from any blocked account for individual subscriptions to periodicals published in the United States. Under that ruling foreign subscribers or exhibitors desiring to subscribe to Motion Picture Herald are permitted to pay for their subscriptions from blocked funds.

That Boom Booms

WALL STREET wise men estimate that weekly attendance is "running 10 per cent to 18 per cent above what it was a year ago," according to the Wall Street Journal in a special article on amusements, Wednesday.

"More people are spending more money on amusements and recreation, than they ever have before . . . if any additional evidence were needed that free spending was here to stay a while, the Labor Day weekend supplied it," it said. MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week carried figures showing record receipts at New York theatres during the Labor Day weekend, with other sectors reporting similar busness.

The Journal reports better business in film theatres began on the Fourth of July weekend, and has continued. It writes: "A gain of 10 per cent in the movie theatre business is tremendous when it runs over an extended period, as it has done this summer."

Other notes on the boom: In New York, Samuel Goldwyn's "The Little Foxes" on Thursday began its fourth week at the Radio City Music Hall, after 416,405 persons had seen it in 18 days; and there were two other Broadway holdovers, "Dive Bomber" at the Strand, and "Aloma of the South Seas" at the Paramount. In the same city, Universal's "Badlands of Dakota" shattered all records for the past year's openings, at the Rialto. The theatre is remaining open to five o'clock each morning.

First UA Theatre

ACQUIRING Herman Cohen's United Artists theatre in San Francisco, the UA distributing company appears well on its way towards forming that circuit of "quality" houses outlined recently by Arthur Kelly, its vice-president in charge of sales. Harry Buckley, another UA vice-president, and slated to be operating head of the circuit, confirmed in New York, Wednesday that talks were occurring for theatre acquisitions in Detroit and Chicago. Previously it was reported the company was surveying New England opportunities.

UA's purpose is to secure proper playing time and exploitation of its product, Mr. Kelly implied, when he disclosed the project. It will erect or buy a theatre in any area where UA films do not receive a "break." The theatres, he added, will not be large nor gaudy, and will average 1,000 seats each.

UA is operating the San Francisco theatre, its first, in association with D. J. McNerney, its exchange manager, and Joseph Blumenfeld, independent operator.

Meanwhile, it continues to negotiate for the partnership and, perhaps, captaincy of David O. Selznick. Contract papers were completed this week in Hollywood, according to Mr. Kelly.

Leyda Culture

JAY Leyda, formerly of Akron, Ohio, and Moscow, student of Soviet ideologies and systems, until some months ago on the staff of the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art, editorially identified also with the leftist quarterly films, has emerged as a producer of cultural messages.

Mr. Leyda's first opus, now in preliminary stages, is addressed at the Rockefeller-Whitney cultural relations program for the Latin Americas. The working title is "Better Dresses, Fifth Floor." Fifth Avenue public relations offices have indicated that the Bonwit shop and Sak's have not been found "available" for location work.

The director is, or is to be, Victor Stalloff, who made "The Desert Way," an art film.

F.&M. and Competition

MEETING in its own direct manner what was described as "the tremendous competition" currently hitting theatre box offices by news commentators' closely-intermittent radio news reports, Fanchon and Marco in St. Louis, beginning Monday, September 8th, will broadcast five-minute news flashes in its four first-run St. Louis houses, the Ambassador, Fox, Missouri and St. Louis. Special equipment, costing $3,000 and developed by Tom Graham and LeRoy Upton, Fox Theatre sound engineers, has been installed, and arrangements have been made with Radio Station KXOK for news.

FREE SCREEN CHALLENGES THREATS OF INTERFERENCE AS SENATE STARTS INQUIRY

Wendell Willkie, voicing industry demand for freedom of expression, questions motives of investigators and, denied cross-examination, replies in broadsides

The motion picture industry this week moved in alongside the fevered, flaming war on page one of the press. The motion picture had become for the day America's biggest war story at home. It was made so by the opening sessions in Washington of a hearing on the relation of the organized screen to the war, by and before a senatorial committee, inspired by the "isolationist bloc" and its charges of screen propaganda for the "interventionist" cause.

Officially the hearing was self-described as not a trial but "a grand jury" inquiry to discover if an investigation should be made. The first stroke of strategy was a rule that there could be no examination, or cross-examination, of witnesses by counsel—meaning specifically Wendell L. Willkie, representing the motion picture industry.

All issues imaginable, and some not that, were raised in the first session. Mr. Willkie, debarred by rule from direct participation, continued to attend those heated, tense sessions in the Senate caucus room in the Capitol building.

Mr. Willkie proceeded to dominate the show. Up to mid-day Wednesday there were four successive Willkie statements. It became a war of statements, from the witness stand, and from Mr. Willkie. His first statement was a general demurrer, his second was an answer to testimonies by Senator Gerald P. Nye, witness before his own committee, the third was a challenge for proof of administration pressure on screen expression, and the fourth was in answer to Senator Clark, of the committee, in his testimonies of Wednesday. Willkie strategy, Willkie expression, official, written and spoken, direct and casual, dominated the scene.

Company Attorneys Present

The motion picture industry contingent was based at the Hotel Carlton where sat a board of strategy which included J. Robert Rubin, Austin Keough, and Joseph Hazen, chiefs of counsel for M-G-M, Paramount and Warner Brothers, respectively; J. B. L. Lawrence, assistant to Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association of Hollywood, Maurice Benjamin of the Hollywood law firm of Loeb & Loeb, and Harold Gallagher and J. E. Carroll, of the Willkie law offices in New York.

Less conspicuously in the scene were many other figures connected variously with the motion picture and with causes and movements concerned with or related to the issues. This was all super-imposed on a war busy Washington, laden with the hurries and flurries of a state of preparation and multiple national and political concerns. What with interest and activities in New York and Hollywood, for many hours all telephone calls to the capital, from both east and west, were subject to varying delays.

At mid-week there was no indication how long the hearing might last, who all might take the witness stand, or where it might lead. Up to that time the principal issues and debates were over motivations and reasons for the inquiry, not the inquiry.

The inquiry got under way Tuesday morning with hot blast and counter blast between the five Senatorial inquisitors, the industry's counsel and spokesmen, Mr. Willkie, and Senator Nye as first witness.

Senator Nye, North Dakota Republican, was the co-author with Senator Bennett Champ Clark, Missouri Democrat, of a Senate resolution, as yet unpassed, calling for investigation of the screen and radio. The subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee is said to be conducting its present investigation only to determine whether a "full-fledged" investigation should be recommended.

Opening the testimony with a forty-one page statement, Senator Nye detailed the charges of pro-war agitation by the screen which prompted his resolution. His report to the committee was a lengthy indictment of Hollywood practices and motives, frequently interrupted by queries from Senator Ernest W. McFarland, Arizona Democrat, and sole non-isolationist minority member of the committee, and from Mr. Willkie.

At the outset the industry found itself denied the right to question witnesses, or challenge statements before the subcommittee when Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman, ruled that Mr. Willkie, as counsel, could not examine witnesses. He said the committee was in the nature of a grand jury rather than a court. Senator McFarland entered an objection to the ruling.

Senator Clark defended the legality of the hearing by recalling a resolution adopted by the Senate early in the session, and, generally overlooked, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Committee to subpoena witnesses for any hearings it might hold. The chairman announced all witnesses would be sworn and mentioned action for perjury but said nothing said by witnesses could be used against them in "other criminal prosecutions."

Even before Senator Nye was well-started on his 10,000-word statement Mr. Willkie released a reply, declaring the Senator "reveals the purpose behind the introduction of his resolution for the investigation."

Monday, on the eve of the hearings Mr. Willkie had issued a 2,500-word letter which he had sent to the subcommittee chairman, Senator Clark, as a preliminary brief. In it Mr. Willkie specifically denied charges which had been quoted as prompting the Nye-Clark resolution, questioned the sub-committee's authority, but stated that the film industry was ready to appear under protest to "protect the good name and prestige of the motion picture industry," adding "we have little choice."

(The full text of Mr. Willkie's letter to Senator Clark and his subsequent statements are printed on pages 14, 15 and 18.)

Films Called True to Fact

The preliminary Willkie brief was outspoken in its declaration of universal dislike of Hitler and Nazism among film leaders, and said it mirrored the sentiments of the vast majority of the American public. Films about Germany have been true to facts, not propaganda, it continued.

Support of national defense measures, after enactment by Congress and in open cooperation with the government, were cited as examples of the patriotism of the screen. Noting the existence of persons of many racial and religious backgrounds among top industry executives, Mr. Willkie said that the industry "demonstrates that neither race nor creed are necessary to participate in American business . . ." and called Nazi racial discrimination despicable.

To charges of mercenery interest Mr. Willkie replied that more theatres are under Nazi control than British and it would probably be more profitable for the films to deal with the Germans. Referring to 1,100 features made since the start of the war he stated that scarcely 50 have been related to war. Mr. Willkie's letter closed with its challenge to the subcommittee's inquisitorial powers, and a statement that the industry would appear to defend itself, under protest against the committee attack.

Willkie Analyzes Nye Testimony

The purpose behind the investigation, Mr. Willkie said in his statement on the purport of Senator Nye's testimony was, "first, to foster and create public prejudices against the industry, and thus attempt to high pressure it to stop producing accurate and factual pictures on Nazism;

"Second, to influence the industry to alter its policies of portrayal to the American public of accurate and factual pictures on the national defense program, and,

"Third, to divide the American people into discordant racial and religious groups, in order to disunite them over the foreign policy, approved by the Congress and by the people.

"Senator Nye gives not one valid reason for an investigation of the motion picture industry," Mr. Willkie concluded. "He does, however, give every reason why no investigation should be held. He demonstrates, without a bit of doubt why this foolish show should be ended, once necessity for censorship or government control of the industry. Senator Nye has proved himself a star witness for the industry." (Text of the Willkie reply to Senator Nye is on page 18.)

As Senator Nye prepared to deliver his 10,000-word statement, Senator McFarland asked what legislation he had in mind and what he hoped to accomplish.

"It is my hope to accomplish whatever necessary to give the American people defense against what I consider to be the most vicious propaganda ever unloosed on a civilized people," the witness replied. "I hope we may free ourselves without the necessity of resort to legislation—I see some evidence this early that that is possible."

No Suggestions

Asked directly what kind of legislation he had in mind, the Senator said he would not undertake to make any suggestions.

"Do you mean we should conduct this inquiry just for purposes of publicity," he was asked.

"No," Senator Nye retorted. "That is a very unfair suggestion."

Chairman Clark came to the rescue of the witness, pointing out that Congress could reach the point by a number of ways, such as requiring that films show both sides of a question, as is required of broadcasting, or could tighten up on Sherman anti-trust act controls.

From the outset Senator McFarland made it clear that he did not support the stand of the other four committee members appointed by Burton K. Wheeler, isolationist Senator and chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. On the subcommittee with Senators McFarland and Clark, the chairman, are Senators Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican, C. Wayland Brooks, Illinois Republican and Homer T. Bone, Washington Democrat. Senator Bone was absent from the first sessions due to illness.

Senator Nye led off his charges with the contention that a small group of motion picture executives "all born abroad and animated by the persecutions and hatreds of the old world" inject war propaganda into pictures for selfish financial and "non-American reasons."

Claims to Have Evidence

The group of four or five producers, he continued, by their virtual control of movie-making, distribution and exhibition "feed pro-war propaganda to 80,000,000 Americans who enter their theatres weekly, seeking only entertainment." Evidence which he and Senator Bennett Clark have gathered, he added, would show that the charges could be sustained and would determine whether the proposed investigation is justified.

Objective of the testimony and investigation, he declared, in reply to Senator McFarland, would be to "free the American people from the most vicious propaganda I have ever seen." Under further questioning Senator Nye denied that a censorship issue or freedom of speech were involved, points raised in Mr. Willkie's brief, since the courts have held motion pictures not to be part of the press but merely a business.

At the same time he said that he was not asking for any interference with the films and had no sympathy with any idea that the government should take over the industry.

Early in his recital Senator Nye started an attack against "those who have so maliciously been striving to put me in the light of furthering bigotry, race and religious prejudice because of this investigation. . . ."

"A determined effort," he said, " has been put forth to convey to the public that the investigation asked is the result of a desire to serve the un-American, narrow cause of anti-Semitism."

"Those primarily responsible for the propaganda pictures are born abroad," he said, however, "and have a peculiar though natural interest prompting them in their work."

Admits Criticism

He admitted his St. Louis speech on August 1st on film propaganda had brought a storm of criticism, but declared "if I had it to do over and were I determined to name those primarily responsible for propaganda in the moving picture field, I would, in light of what I have since learned, confine myself to four names, each that of one of the Jewish faith, each one foreign born. But I would do that without any spirit of prejudice and without prompting by any cause as foreign to my thinking as is anti-Semitism."

Senator McFarland again interrupted with a demand that the witness state whether he felt that films did not represent the true facts abroad, or whether he felt that they were truthful but should not be made. He noted that Mr. Willkie's brief had said the films were true to the facts.

Senator Nye replied that the pictures were "too one-sided" but did not explain his assertion. Instead he proceeded to castigate critics of his St. Louis speech including Dr. Frank Kingdom, chairman of the Committee to defend America by Aiding the Allies, and editorial criticism from the motion picture trade press.

Turning to World War history he outlined the propaganda uses of motion pictures then and warned "we have not seen all that there is to see in the way of motion picture propaganda." He told the subcommittee that he had information from "inside the moving picture industry" that horror pictures were in the making and "it is high time that we let the facts be known to the end that they might serve as armor against the encroachment of this propaganda."

Again the Senator repeated his charges that control of the industry is "in the hands, for the most part, of four or five individuals, each one of them, I believe, an American citizen, but in the majority born abroad. * * * These four or five men, who I understand your committee will have here as witnesses, control well over 50 per cent of all the moving picture theatre capacity in the 48 states of this Union."

Refers to Suits

He referred to the New York anti-trust suit and to other Governmental actions against the industry to support his contentions of conspiracy and promised to submit further evidence on that point later. He also promised to submit material on the ownership and control of properties in England by the American producers.

Not all producers are putting out propaganda pictures, he asserted, those who are "laying off" being, generally speaking, those "who are operating on their own capital."

"At the same time it is pointed out that those who are producing these pictures are operating largely upon stockholders' money and bank money," he said. "Again I insist that here is a field inviting of most thorough scrutiny. I am told that if you do enter into that particular phase you are going to encounter difficulty in ascertaining the cost of producing a propaganda picture as against a feature picture."

Mr. Willkie interjected the comment that the committee could have the cost sheets for any production under question. Senator Nye replied that he had his information about juggling costs on propaganda pictures from "the best of authority" but refused to reveal any names.

Continuing, the Senator said he had indications that Administration "pressure" might be back of propaganda and suggested that the point be thoroughly probed.

Cites Names

He turned to detailing alleged support of the President's foreign policy by industry figures. Among names cited in the testimony were Darryl F. Zanuck whom he accused of ordering 20th Century-Fox workers to attend an Aid-Britain rally in Hollywood addressed by Mr. Willkie, and of slandering Charles A. Lindbergh and the America First group. He also read another message by William Koenig asking Universal studio workers to attend the Willkie rally.

"There are men (in the industry)," he continued, "who are themselves at heart already in the war and will not accept with any tolerance those who have not toed the mark on every step that would take us nearer war. . . . For instance, Harry Warner is reputed to have given notice that under no condition would he accept the selection of a certain member of Congress in the House of Representatives who was being considered for the place of official censor for the industry . . . since this candi-

WILLKIE ON LEHMAN BOARD

Wendell L. Willkie, senior partner of the law firm of Willkie, Owen, Otis and Bailly on September 5th was nominated for one of six new directorships in the Lehman Corporation, Robert Lehman, president of the investment trust announced. The six directors, to be elected at a stockholders meeting in Wilmington, Del., on October 15th are described as independents, who with two officers, will make a majority of Lehman Corporation directors unaffiliated with the firm of Lehman Brothers which manages Lehman Corporation under a management contract. The disassociation of the two directorates is being made to comply with the Investment Trust Act.

The directorate is the second place on a corporation board accepted by Mr. Willkie since the Presidential campaign. On June 4th he was elected to the board of directors of the Federal Insurance Company. Subsequent to his nomination by the Republican party last year Mr. Willkie resigned business posts which included directorships in Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and subsidiaries, a trusteeship in the Edison Electric Institute, and a post on the board of the First National Bank of New York.

Text of Willkie Statements In Defense of the Industry

Wendell Willkie, special counsel for the motion picture industry, barred from cross-examining witnesses at the Senate sub-committee hearing, presented, up to Wednesday night, four statements in rebuttal to charges voiced in the sub-committee. The statements follow:

Letter to Clark Briefs Defense

My dear Senator Clark:

You are beginning an investigation of the motion picture industry. My firm has been asked to represent it as counsel. We assume the charges against the industry are contained in Resolution 152, introduced in but not yet passed by the United States Senate, and in the speech of Senator Nye, co-author of the resolution, which was delivered by him in St. Louis on the day the resolution was introduced.

After reading the resolution and Senator Nye's speech with care, I have come to the conclusion that your subcommittee intends to inquire whether or not the motion-picture industry, as a whole, and its leading executives, as individuals, are opposed to the Nazi dictatorship in Germany. If this is the case, there need be no investigation.

Opposed to Hitler

The motion-picture industry and its executives are opposed to the Hitler regime in Germany; they have watched with horror the destruction of a free life within Germany and the ruthless invasion of other countries by Nazis. On behalf of the motion-picture industry and its personnel, I wish to put on the record this simple truth; we make no pretense of friendliness to Nazi Germany nor to the objectives and goals of this ruthless dictatorship. We abhor everything which Hitler represents.

In this conviction the motion-picture industry is no different than other average citizens of this country. In truth, I hope this conviction is no different than that shared by the members of your committee. You and I together with the great overwhelming majority of the people of our country share the unalterable belief in a democratic form of government and in the inalienable rights of the individual to freedom of worship, freedom of speech, freedom to choose his government without interference, and freedom to live in economic security.

In simple terms the United States stands for the right of an individual to lead a decent life; Hitler and his Nazis stand for the opposite. The motion-picture industry wants no compromise between these two concepts.

Senator Nye, in his address, has also accused the industry of cooperating with the national administration on matters of national defense. If your subcommittee proposes to investigate this charge, again I say there is no need for an investigation. The motion-picture industry, like other American industries, is composed of sincere, patriotic citizens. The industry gladly, and with great pride, admits that it has done all in its power to present to the American public a picture of our Army, our Navy, our Air Corps, and their equipment. The motion-picture industry is proud, also, that it has co-operated in the sale of defense bonds and has assisted in raising funds for the United Service Organization.

Industry Proud of Work

Again, for the record, on behalf of the motion-picture industry and its personnel may I put this simple truth: We are proud to admit that we have done everything possible to inform the public of the progress of the national defense program.

The motion-picture industry has no wish to flout the authority or the position of your committee. But the industry has instructed me to say that it intends to continue to present to the American people a truthful and accurate portrayal of their defense effort. However, when Senator Nye says that the industry is doing this work on the demand of the Administration, we emphatically and indignantly deny his charge. The Administration has made no such demands and, frankly, the motion-picture industry would be ashamed if it were not doing voluntarily what it is now doing in this patriotic cause.

So much for two of the basic allegations against the motion-picture industry. As I have said, the industry desires to plead guilty to sharing with their fellow citizens a horror of Hitler's Nazis and to plead guilty to doing everything within its power to help the national defense program.

I now turn, with a great deal of hesitation, to another allegation contained in Senator Nye's speech. I write with hesitation because the reasoning is so contrary to the American way of thinking, as it has been expressed since the Bill of Rights and our Constitution were first evolved. In his St. Louis address, after mentioning a list of executives of the industry of non-Nordic names and after stating that "in each of these companies there are a number of production directors, many of whom come from Russia, Hungary, Germany and the Balkan countries," Senator Nye charges that such men in times of world upset are susceptible to riotous and unreasonable national and racial emotions. He argued, therefore, that they are "trying to make America punch drunk with propaganda to push her into war."

Let me point out, however, that nowhere does Senator Nye claim that any of them is an alien or holds allegiance to any country except the United States.

Basic American Principle

If the committee feels that the racial and geographic background of American citizens is a condition to be investigated, there is no need for the investigation. We frankly state that in the motion picture industry there are in positions, both prominent and inconspicuous, both Nordics and non-Nordics, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, native and foreign born. This industry, with many others of our country, demonstrates that neither race, creed nor geographical origin is an essential qualification to participate in American business. This fact illustrates a basic principle of American life as we have known it for over 150 years. The motion picture industry, composed like other industries of loyal and patriotic Americans, despises the racial discriminations of Nazism and is devoted to the cause of human freedom both in this country and abroad.

Senator Nye adds to this charge the explanation that the men who hold the trusteeship of the motion picture industry oppose Nazism and support the British for mercenary reasons.

Senator Nye argues that if Britain should be defeated, the motion picture industry would be deprived of a portion of its revenues, now derived from pictures sold in Great Britain. This charge, of course, assumes that the industry acts on international questions, after weighing its action against the pocketbook. This, obviously, we do not admit.

All pictures by Floyd Stone, Staff Photographer

But, taking Senator Nye's assumption as correct and following his line of reasoning, then the motion picture industry, for its own financial advantage, should at once become the great appeasers of Nazism. As is well known, the advocates of doing business with Hitler and of a negotiated peace, maintain that if the policies they advocated were adopted peace would reign in the world and Nazi Germany and the United States could maintain extensive trade relations. Under such assumed conditions, the motion picture industry would not alone retain its business in Great Britain but would regain the varied large volume of business which it lost in Germany and in Central Europe even before the outbreak of the war as well as since then. The motion picture industry would be against appeasing Hitler even if such a result for it would follow.

I state again, the motion picture industry, as a whole, looks with horror on the Nazi movement and feels deep sorrow at the fate of the countries now under the domination of the Germans.

No Disagreement

While, like other industries, the motion-picture business is composed of men and women of the individual beliefs, there is no disagreement within the industry on this.

The industry has watched the Nazis unfold their revolution in Europe and throughout the world. The industry knows that the Nazi promises and pledges are worth nothing. The industry has grasped the lesson to this country in the fate of Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Holland, Belgium, France and all the other conquered countries. Its leaders know that if Nazism triumphs, their own freedom and the freedom of their country will be endangered, if not destroyed. And the motion-picture industry has no faith in the unrealistic and false thesis that America's trade hopes lie in a world where Nazism survives.

The resolution charges that the motion-picture business is in the hands of groups interested in involving the United States in war. The co-author, Senator Nye, explains this allegation on the basis of the individual opinions of the executives of the business, their racial and geographical backgrounds and their mercenary motives. This charge should be supported by cold facts. We know that your committee will want to discuss only facts, so, in brief, I will present them for your record.

Of the more than 1,100 feature pictures produced since the outbreak of the present war, only some fifty have had anything to do with the issues involved in the war or with the ideological belief of the participants. Some of these fifty, we are glad to admit, do portray Nazism for what it is—a cruel, lustful, ruthless and cynical force. We know that this is an accurate portrayal of Nazism.

However, if the committee will permit, we will offer witnesses, with a first-hand knowledge of Germany—men and women who have actually lived in Germany under Nazism. They will prove to you that the motion picture industry pictures Nazi Germany as it is. Similarly, some of these pictures show England under war conditions.

Asks Industry Witnesses

We ask permission to present witnesses, with first-hand knowledge—again men and women who have lived in England during the war. They will prove to you that the industry's portrayal of the magnificent courage of the English people is correct.

The pictures portraying England and Germany do not purport to tell the American people what they should do about Nazism save as the knowledge of the true facts may, as it always has, influence the judgment of right-thinking men and women. We believe that it is the truth which makes and keeps men free and that it is the suppression of the truth which is a menace to human liberty wherever it occurs.

Let us take a picture from this group, one which Senator Nye argued should not have been shown. Let us take as an example the second picture on his black list, one called "Escape." It is typical of the list, and rather than wishing to conceal it from your committee, I am hopeful the members of your subcommittee have seen it. If you have not, we shall be delighted to arrange a showing of it, just as we will be equally delighted to arrange for the subcommittee to see any of the pictures objected to by Senator Nye and others.

Uses "Escape" as Example

"Escape" is a moving drama of an American of German descent rescuing his mother from a German concentration camp, where she has been condemned to death. The drama illustrates the operation of the German Gestapo; it portrays the concentration camp system; it reveals the incredible cruelties of the Nazis. We are prepared to prove that this is an accurate presentation. "Escape" also dramatizes the deep humanity in decent men and women which will find expression even under threat of death and torture. This we do not need to prove.

Let us look at the history of the motion picture "Escape." It is a dramatization of a novel, first published in The Saturday Evening Post, which certainly is not a war-mongering magazine. It was later published in book form by Little, Brown & Company, an old and responsible publishing house. The book was selected by a distinguished body of literary judges for the Book of the Month Club, with which you are all familiar. The book was widely and favorably reviewed in newspapers and in literary publications. In fact, the book became a "best seller" and more than 310,000 Americans purchased it, and many thousands more than that read it. A motion-picture company purchased the right to produce "Escape," and the picture was so in accord with American public sentiment that it was not only a financial success, it received wide acclaim for its artistic and realistic presentation of the Nazi governmental and social system. That is the history of the picture "Escape" to which Senator Nye objects.

Does Not Fear Inquiry

The motion-picture industry does not fear an investigation of "Escape," or similar pictures. However, if, as it is apparently claimed, this picture is inimical to the safety and security of our nation, is it not logical to examine, in chronological order, the author who wrote the book, the editors of The Saturday Evening Post, who first printed it; the owners of Little, Brown & Co., who published it in book form; the editors of the Book of the Month Club, who recommended it for public reading, and the newspapers and other periodicals which reviewed it favorably in their columns?

The fact is, of course, that the motion-picture industry is not guided by subversive motives. The motion-picture business is guided by nothing more subversive than the hope to satisfy the prevailing taste of the American people. For their aim is twofold: to produce profitable pictures that people will want to see and will enjoy and to build up the prestige and artistic accomplishment of individual companies. The success or failure of individual motion-picture companies depends only on the ability to produce motion pictures that will satisfy the public. It is as simple an American business principle as that.

The motion-picture screen is an instrument of entertainment, education and information. Having been pioneered and developed in our country, it is peculiarly American. Its contribution to the country as a whole and to individual citizens has been enormous. The motion-picture industry has always been permitted freedom of expression. The impression has now arisen, and very naturally, that one of the hoped for results of the pressure of your investigation will be to influence the industry to alter its policies, so that they may accord more directly with the views of such of its critics as Senator Nye. The industry is prepared to resist such pressure with all of the strength at its command.

I cannot let pass this opportunity to warn of the very genuine dangers involved in the type of investigation which you are now proposing to start. The radio business is already included in the original resolution. From the motion picture and radio industries it is just a small step to the newspapers, magazines and other periodicals. And from the freedom of the press it is just a small step to the freedom of the individual to say what he believes. The United States, with England and its allies, remain the bulwark of the rights of the individual in the world today. The rights of the individual mean nothing if freedom of the press and freedom of speech are destroyed. There can be no disunity within the United States on this principle, and I know there is none.

In conclusion, we insist that your committee is proceeding with doubtful legal authority in the conduct of the proposed hearings on the subjects contained in the original resolution and amplified in Senator Nye's speech. Furthermore, the manner of the committee's creation does not establish the impression of impartiality. And, as I have said above, the investigation and harassment of free expression in the United States is a procedure, once accepted, that may be applied to the theatre, to newspapers and magazines, to the radio, to publications of all kinds and finally to the right of public officials and private citizens to speak freely. As American citizens, we protect this as vigorously as possible.

What is our remedy? We have no illusions about this. If your committee, after we have made these answers to the allegations, insists on proceeding, our only legal relief can come after the committee has heard reckless and unwarranted charges repeated and widely publicized throughout the country. We know that after this damage is done, if we are to protect our rights as citizens, one of our witnesses must refuse to testify and run the risk of being prosecuted or cited for contempt by the United States Senate, even though the Senate has not voted upon the resolution.

By that time the unfounded charges will be on the record; the damage will be done; the inference will be then drawn that he who refuses to testify has something to hide, something of which he is ashamed. So we shall appear at your proposed hearings. We shall do so under protest. We are realists and we know that, to protect the good name and prestige of the motion picture industry, we have little choice.

As counsel for the motion picture industry, my first request will be that this letter be placed side by side in the record with the resolution and with Senator Nye's speech amplifying the charges implied in the resolution.

Respectfully yours,

WENDELL L. WILLKIE

Wendell Willkie Answers Nye

The text of Wendell Willkie's statement of Tuesday in reply to Senator Nye's testimony of the same day follows:

"Senator Nye's opening statement pleads with the Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee to recommend a formal investigation of alleged propaganda in the motion picture industry. I am delighted that Senator Nye made his statement in such detail. I have but one request to make—that every citizen of the United States read carefully and in full Senator Nye's arguments.

"I say this with all sincerity. My reason is a very simple one. With his own words, and without the possibility of disagreement, Senator Nye again reveals the purpose behind the introduction of his resolution for an investigation. What we knew all along, from the Senator's previous public addresses, is now part of the official record of the United States Senate.

"Senator Nye's purpose in asking for the investigation is now proved to be as follows:

"First, Senator Nye desires to foster and create public prejudices against the motion-picture industry, and thus attempt to high-pressure it to stop producing accurate and factual pictures on Nazism.

"Second, similarly, Senator Nye is trying to influence the motion-picture industry to alter another of its policies, the portrayal to the American public of accurate and factual pictures on our national-defense program.

"Third, Senator Nye obviously is seeking to divide the American people into discordant racial and religious groups, in order to disunite them over the United States foreign policy, which has been overwhelmingly approved by the Congress and by the people.

"In his whole long and tedious statement, Senator Nye gives not one valid reason for an investigation of the motion-picture industry. He does, however, give every reason why no investigation should be held. He demonstrated, without a bit of doubt, why this foolish show should be ended, once and for all. Even he is convinced there is no necessity for censorship or government control of the industry Senator Nye has proved himself a star witness for the industry."

Wendell Willkie Denies Government Pressure

Wendell Willkie answered charges of government influence over pictures in the following statement Wednesday morning:

"I am extremely reluctant to dignify further the reckless and unsupported charges made by Senator Gerald Nye against the motion picture industry. But Senator Nye made one serious allegation, which I am sure the Senate subcommittee will not want to let stand on the record for even one day.

"According to Senator Nye's fanciful concoction, the Federal Government directs from Washington the motion picture business on what pictures it should or should not make. Of course Senator Nye has no proof of this for the simple reason that the charge is completely untrue.

"But when such a charge is made by any United States Senator, there is great danger that it may be believed by the general public which has no opportunity for personal investigation. Senator Nye obviously had no proof but he did mention Lowell Mellett, director of the Office of Government Reports, in connection with his charge. I now publicly ask the Senate sub-committee to call to the witness stand at once Lowell Mellett.

"I hold no brief for Lowell Mellett. He has no direct or indirect relationship with the motion picture industry. Mellett is, however, directly responsible to the President of the United States. This charge, therefore, is so serious that it should either be proved or disproved immediately.

"The rest of Senator Nye's biased arguments fall of their own weight. They are generally too ludicrous for me to answer. Although Senator Nye is co-author of the resolution to investigate the motion picture industry, he testified that he could remember seeing only two motion pictures of which he so bitterly complains. One of these pictures was 'The Great Dictator,' starring Charles Chaplin. Senator Nye laments that Charlie Chaplin was born in England, and that he rediculed Hitler on the public screen. These complaints are typical of his 47-page statement.

"The hearings hour by hour are proving my point, that there is no justification for an inquiry into the motion picture industry. The closest that anyone has come to a definite suggestion as to what the isolationists want to do about the business was that of the Senate subcommittee's chairman, Senator D. Worth Clark. He suggested that perhaps the industry should be required to produce movies on 'both sides' of the international question. This, I presume, means that since Chaplin made a laughable caricature of Hitler, the industry should be forced to employ Charles Laughton to do the same on Winston Churchill. If the public does not believe that this example is typical of the majority who are running the show, I suggest that they read the record of the hearings.

"But, as I warned in my opening letter, there is a dangerous though concealed threat to freedom of expression inherent in the proceeding. I warned that it was only a small step from an investigation of the movies and the radio to an investigation of the rights of individual citizens to speak their own minds. My prediction has already come true. In yesterday's hearing, Senator Clark 'threatened' to call the president of a college because he had the temerity to criticize those who are opposed to the foreign policy of the United States. That is just a start. I warn again that these hearings will be used not only to attempt to sabotage our foreign policy, but to stifle the right of the individual to speak as he pleases.

"This was made doubly clear when Senator Nye disclosed the terrible fact that certain of the leading motion picture executives are opposed to Nazism. So that there may be no confusion, let me repeat: the motion picture industry is opposed to Hitler and is proud of the fact. The motion picture industry is also opposed to the appeasement of Hitler. This is no secret either.

"Senator Bennett Clark, of Missouri, is the second witness in behalf of an investigation. After those who are bitterly opposed to the foreign policy of this country have had their say, I hope that the committee may be able to get down to the facts in the case.

"If this time ever comes, it will be even more clear that the request of Senators Nye and Bennett Clark for an investigation shields a desire to use the perogatives of a Senate committee to fight a rear-guard action against a foreign policy which the Senate, as a whole, has overwhelmingly approved."

Wendell Willkie Answers Clark

In a fourth statement Wednesday night, Mr. Willkie asserted that neither Mr. Clark nor Mr. Nye had presented "an iota of evidence that would stand up in court" or outlined any legislation to remedy the situation complained of.

He again denied that there were any untruths in the pictures charged with propaganda, and challenged the two Senators to point to any. He urged the sub-committee to view the pictures, then listen to witnesses who could testify from first-hand information on the productions.

Further, he said: "Senator Clark, lacking proof of his original cry of 'propaganda,' has now drawn the usual red herring to cover up. He is now crying 'monopoly'. After this charge falls of its own weight, the isolationists will have another charge, for they are obviously determined to use this opportunity to fight, with whatever weapons they can find, the foreign policy of their country."

Every charge made against the film industry could be made equally against newspapers and other media of information, he asserted. "There is a basic issue involved in this hearing, the right of an industry to freedom of expression, and the right of individuals to think as they please," Mr. Willkie concluded. "I think the time has come to end the sport of United States Senators badgering and threatening unprotected witnesses on the one hand, and refusing to allow those who are being accused from having a hearing."

My Dear Mr. Morgan:

We consider it a privilege to have had the opportunity of holding the Studio Preview of your new Fleischer Studio Technicolor Cartoon, "SUPERMAN", at the Plaza Theatre. The result was most amazing from a box-office standpoint and augers well for the success of this new Series.

On the morning of the preview we placed a one sheet and a Superman standee in front of the Theatre advertising the single showing of the short. We received over 100 phone calls from the public requesting information about the time of screening. All day long our lobby was cluttered with youngsters who asked the doorman the same question. Our evening performance was about 10% over average for that same day and we had more childrens admissions than on the previous Saturday matinee. We definitely attribute these unusual results to the showing of "SUPERMAN". This is a remarkable tribute inasmuch as no Newspaper advertising was used.

Very truly yours,

date had voted against the lease-lend bill."

The Senator also asked an investigation to determine whether there are British agents operating "in any capacity" in the American industry, suggesting that Victor Saville, English-born director, be summoned for interrogation. He alleged that Mr. Saville's visa had been arranged by the British Ministry of Information so he could replace Frank Borzage in directing "The Mortal Storm."

Closing his prepared testimony he said: "I wish that I might feel that such an investigation as is being asked would result in a finding that the great abundance of charges here made might be found unwarranted," he concluded. "But I know that you shall not find the great part of these charges unwarranted, and I know that in your findings you will above all else avoid that charge we all know is here in too great a measure, namely, intolerance, persecution, unfairness and unreasonableness."

The testimony required three and a half hours to deliver. At its end only Senator McFarland of the Committee undertook to question Senator Nye, seeking specific instances of repugnant passages in the alleged war films. The North Dakota witness admitted that he had seen few of the seventeen pictures mentioned earlier and could not remember those he had, leading the Arizonian to give up the examination after a flurry of interchange in which Nye asked how many pictures Mr. McFarland could name.

Answers Nye

Mr. Willkie intervened with a promise that the industry would arrange screenings, in the Caucus Room, if wished, of any picture on which the senators wished to refresh their memory.

In a final suggestion Senator Nye said he would also urge a probe of pro-Fascist and pro-Communist pictures imported and shown in the United States.

Wednesday morning Mr. Willkie branded as "completely untrue" Senator Nye's allegation that the Federal Government dictates what pictures should be made. He warned, however, that such a statement by a U. S. Senator carries public weight and demanded that Lowell Mellett, director of the Office of Government Reports, mentioned in the Nye testimony, be called to the stand to support or deny it.

Other statements in Senator Nye's testimony Mr. Willkie called too ludicrous to answer. The hearings prove, he said, that there is no justification for the inquiry.

"I warn again that these hearings will be used not only to attempt to sabotage our foreign policy, but to stifle the right of the individual to speak as he pleases," Mr. Willkie wrote. Senators Nye and Bennett Clark, he said, desire to use the investigation as a shield "to fight a rear-guard action against a foreign policy which the Senate, as a whole, has overwhelmingly approved," he concluded.

Senator Bennett C. Clark of Missouri, co-author of the resolution, Wednesday on the witness stand, disclosed he had framed the measure to probe films and radio after two similar resolutions for a study of propaganda had been killed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

He selected these agencies because they are "the two most deadly and insidious" of all propaganda agencies but more particularly because they are within the jurisdiction of the more friendly Interstate Commerce Committee, he said.

Charging a "vast and deliberate effort" to becloud the issues, Senator Clark continued, "The real issue that is presented here is something far more important than merely the part that is being played by the motion picture industry in an effort to plunge us into war. There is involved the great problem of free discussion."

A "handful of men," he charged, control the production and distribution of films for 17,000 theatres and "have opened those 17,000 theatres to the idea of war."

"I formally and deliberately charge that a handful of men have gotten possession of both the radio microphone and the motion picture screen, beside which all other forms of discussion are antique and feeble and that men and women in America, discussing the great problems of America, can use these machines or not only by the grace of this small oligarchy," he said.

Willkie Attacked

In a rejoinder to Mr. Willkie's release Wednesday Senator Nye declared the former presidential candidate was "not the attorney for, but the press agent for the movie industry."

"This flow of Willkie words today is an amazing example of an effort to keep alive that creature we killed yesterday, namely race prejudice," he said. "It does not become Mr. Willkie."

"However, knowing the gentleman as we all do since the day when he labeled himself as one not to be taken seriously when he speaks, some day, when this controversy is over, he will doubtless say of what he is saying now, 'It was just a bit of oratory.'

"Willkie will serve his country and cause best if he will help bury bigotry."

[Following a meeting of the sub-committee Chairman Clark disclosed that John T. Flynn, newspaper columnist, would be the main witness Thursday. The committee expects his examination will take the full day.

If George Fisher, radio commentator, could be held over, it was said he would be heard on Monday, together with Jimmy Fidler, but if his commitments make it impossible for him to be in Washington next week, he will be heard at a night session tomorrow. The subcommittee planned to recess over the weekend Thursday.]

Centralized control in the film industry, "is far more serious than any of the other instrumentalities of speech," the witness continued.

Radio, he said, is comparatively free and it is possible for both sides of the war debate to be heard, but while both sides get the same amount of formal time, "The great radio chains keep the air hot with propaganda for war in their sponsored programs, and their sustaining programs almost every hour of the day."

Members of the subcommittee broke in to say the networks have been eminently fair, both Chairman Clark and Senator Tobey saying the fault lay with individual stations.

"But in the motion picture industry we do not get a foot of film or a syllable of sound anywhere," Bennett Clark replied.

As top men "determined to wreak vengeance on Adolph Hitler," he named Nicholas M. Schenck, the Warner Brothers, Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl F. Zanuck, Alexander Korda, Charles Chaplin and Henry Luce of "March of Time." Control of the industry is in the hands of five companies, not eight, he asserted.

Senator Clark quoted at length from the Temporary National Economic Committee monograph on motion pictures to develop his story of monopoly.

Cites President

So long as films were "only entertainment" the control was not so serious, he contended, but it becomes paramount when they go into propaganda.

As proof of propaganda he declared that President Roosevelt "himself thanked them for their great help in passing the Lend-Lease Bill."

"A moment may come when the President may find the moving pictures on the other side of some grave national or international issue," he warned.

"I for one pledge that if the industry does not end this propaganda for war and return to its normal function of entertainment that I shall do everything in my power to bring about at once and forever the utter destruction of the grasp of these men on the screen," Senator Clark concluded.

At the conclusion of Senator Clark's presentation, Senator McFarland requested that Mr. Willkie be permitted to question the witness, but the chairman rejected the proposal, eliciting from the Arizonan the comment, "I believe in fair play."

If Mr. Willkie wishes he will be given opportunity to testify, the chairman said. Mr. Willkie then asked if he would be allowed to question the industry's witnesses to bring out the true picture, and Senator Clark went into a lengthy explanation of Senate procedure, winding up with "the answer is 'no.'"

Senator McFarland questioned Bennett Clark at length regarding the legislation the authors of the resolution had in mind. Senator Clark said he had no specific measure ready.

Senator McFarland warned Senator Clark that his proposal for control of propaganda meant government control, and the Missourian agreed that it might lead to that, although he was not in favor of it.

"I would like to find out what we are trying to do," Senator McFarland said. "If there is no legislation we can pass, if there is nothing we can do, I think we have some very important work that we can be doing and, if there is any propaganda, I think the public recognizes it the same as I do or you do. And if there is nothing we can do about the situation the public will do something about it if there is anything unfair."

WHAT PRICE PARKS FOR LOCATIONS?

Use by motion picture companies of national parks or other United States owned land to film location scenes appeared likely to be the subject soon of another subcommittee inquiry after the Senate on Monday approved a resolution offered by Senator Pat McCarran, Nevada Democrat. Without debate the Senators authorized an appropriation of $10,000 to investigate the scale of fees for motion picture taking established by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, in the spring of 1940.

Mr. Ickes' ruling called for the payment of fees up to $100 a day for the use of parks for locations. The investigation, which was approved a year ago but has just received its appropriation, is to examine disposition of the fees, and the manner in which the Interior Department controls picture making on Federal lands. Senator McCarran will be chairman of the group.

During the interrogation, the chairman admitted he had seen very few of the films which have been cited as propaganda.

Thursday the committee was to begin examination of called witnesses, and Chairman Clark anounced that when the sessions reconvened Monday after recess they would run all day. Previously he estimated the sessions would last four to six weeks.

Hollywood Guilds Offer Willkie Aid

The Screen Writers Guild and Screen Actors Guild Tuesday from Hollywood offered aid to Wendell L. Willkie at the Senate subcommittee, while the Screen Directors Guild named a special committee to watch proceedings.

The Screen Actors Guild sent a wire to Mr. Willkie which said in part: "Issues of freedom of speech and expression are of vital importance to the SAG which represents all motion picture actors. In behalf of its membership and also for the best interests of the industry, our guild had intended to present its position independently. Instead we now wish to assure you of our confidence and cooperation. Please call upon us if any information in our possession will assist you in placing before the Senate committee and the public an accurate and undistorted representation of the facts."

The Screen Writers Guild named Marc Connolly and Ralph Block to attend the hearings and wired Senator Worth Clark to that effect.

"As the recognized organization of writers of American motion pictures, the SWG feels that if your committee intends to study the use of alleged screen influence on public opinion, it is essential that our representatives be heard at the forthcoming inquiry."

NAVY COMMENDS FILM MEN IN DEFENSE

The Navy Department at Washington last week commended members of the motion picture industry, leaders and rank and file, who have suspended their careers to aid the seagoing defense arm. In a formal statement the department noted:

"A number of the Nation's outstanding personalities in the motion picture world, some of them with names and faces known the world over, have turned their services over to their country by volunteering for service with the Navy or have entered the Naval Reserve where they are subject to call to active duty at any time."

Among those on active service, it was declared, are Robert Montgomery, Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve, on duty in London; Gene Markey, writer and producer, a Lieutenant Commander in the reserve, on active duty; and Wayne Morris, Lieutenant junior grade, serving on the Southern California Aviation Cadet Selection Board.

In the Naval Reserve, and subject to call at any time, are Lieutenant Commander Wallace Beery, an aviation volunteer; Lieutenant junior grade, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; Lieutenant Commander Lloyd Bacon; Lieutenant Commander John Ford, and Lieutenant Gregg Toland.

Senator Pepper Calls Probe 'Witch Hunt'

A witch-hunt has been launched in Washington to investigate the motion picture industry, by a committee composed of biased judges, Senator Claude Pepper of Florida told members of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association convention in Jacksonville Wednesday. "You're industry is being subjected to a vicious, unfair and malicious attack but you are not without friends in the Senate," he said.

The Florida Senator commended the motion pictures for their wholehearted co-operation in this period.

"The chief assault is being launched by isolationist, obstructionists and others, against public opinion in an attempt to break down morale and confuse the people," Senator Pepper said. "You in the motion picture industry have been making a great contribution by enabling the public to know the true story, see the dangers and combat them. You are doing much to bring the people of America together in a better understanding."

Anti-Nazi League Hits Foreign War Films

In New York, meanwhile, Professor James H. Sheldon, chairman of the board of directors of the Non-Sectarian Anti-Nazi League, announced that the League was awaiting word from Senator D. Worth Clark designating a day in the hearings to be set aside for the League to submit evidence of Nazi film propaganda activities in the United States. This, Dr. Sheldon believes, is more necessary of investigation by the Senate. Richard Rollins, the League's director of investigation, will accompany Dr. Sheldon to Washington.

The League is preparing "detailed, elaborate exhibits," as part of its testimony, and also is cooperating with counsel for the motion picture and radio industries in connection with the hearings.

Discussions Opened On Frozen Funds

American majors' representatives began conversations in London last week with those of the British Treasury, over a new monetary agreement for the 12 months beginning October 25th, when the present one expires. Under the current year's agreement, the majors have been allowed to withdraw $12,500,000 from Great Britain. The Americans are reported asking that they be permitted to withdraw all revenues obtained during the 12 months covered by the new agreement. "Frozen" American film company revenues, for the past two years, total $35,000,000, it is estimated.

American film companies, facing cessation of Japanese operations because of the Japanese Government's most recent restrictions, and general attitude, have encountered trouble from their employees in that country, who reportedly threatened violence last week, after petitioning the ministries of Finance and the Interior for aid in securing dismissal pay, if such becomes necessary.

Berg, Steinmetz Aide, Dies

Dr. Ernst Julius Berg, mathematician and electro-physicist, died at his home in Schenectady, New York, on Tuesday. He was 70 years old.

A native of Oestersund, Sweden, Dr. Berg was an associate for many years of the late Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz. Much of his research concerned voice transmission for both radio and telephone. He was a consultant engineer for the General Electric Company from 1904 to 1930 and did engineering research for other concerns in this country and Europe.

DISTRIBUTORS CLOSE ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT DEALS FOR NEW SEASON

Sales Activity Mounting; MGM Signs Famous Players Canadian; RKO Closes with Sparks, Schine, Others

Distributors this week announced the closing of numerous additional circuit deals for 1941-42 product, for the first block-of-five or less for the decree-bound Big Five, en bloc for other majors, reflecting the increasing tempo of sales activity.

Leading the week's 1941-42 contract news was word of an agreement reached at New York this week between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Famous Players Canadian circuit. Following conferences between Thomas J. Connors, Metro's east, southern, and Canadian sales manager, and J. J. Fitzgibbons, president of Famous Players, it was reported that the Metro roster of pictures will be purchased by the 200 theatres of the Canadian chain.

Six for RKO

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO, in charge of sales, this week announced that circuit deals had been signed with six major circuits for the company's first block. In the east RKO and the Schine circuit, operator of 149 houses in New York and adjacent states, have closed for the first block.

Robert Mochrie, eastern manager, Charles Boasberg of the east-central district, and Gus Schaefer, northeastern district sales manager represented RKO in the Schine deal.

Sale of the first RKO block to 102 Sparks circuit houses in Florida was concluded by David Prince, southeastern sales chief.

On a midwestern tour Mr. Depinet, Andy Smith, sales manager and Cresson E. Smith, western division manager closed deals with Fox Mid-West Amusement Corp. at Kansas City and the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation. Approximately 100 houses are included in the circuits. At Denver, with Hal Fuller, Rocky Mountain manager and B. J. McCarthy of the Denver exchange the trio closed with Fox Intermountain circuit, represented by Spyros and Charles Skouras, and Rick Ricketson.

In Washington—eastern manager Nat Levy and branch manager R. J. Folliard signed the 41 theatres of the Warner Circuit in the Washington zone.

The Manning and Wink circuit covering 9 theatres in Georgia and Tennessee was closed for RKO by branch manager Hubert Lyons of Atlanta.

The John Servaas circuit covering 9 theatres in Indiana, was closed by eastern central manager Charles Boasberg.

Twentieth Century-Fox this week signed with the Minnesota Amusement Company for its first block-of-five in the circuit's houses in the Dakotas and Wisconsin. Although the deal was concluded at Milwaukee the company's Minnesota houses were omitted from the contract pending litigation on the legality of the state's anti-decree law. Nevertheless Fox held screenings at Minneapolis and M. A. Levy, manager of the exchange, reported excellent sales outside of the state.

Warner Brothers announce that "Sergeant York" sold singly as a special, and its first block-of-five have been purchased by the Schine circuit at Gloversville, N. Y., for 149 theatres and by the RKO circuit in New York. "Sergeant York" is to be shown on single bill at special prices and under stipulated promotion.

In California the Fox West Coast chain has signed with United Artists for the entire season,'s UA product. The deal followed purchase of the first block of RKO and Warner pictures by West Coast. Haskell Masters, western sales manager, and Seymour Poe concluded the agreement for UA. Fox West Coast officials indicated that discussions are continuing with Paramount for its initial block-of-five and with Universal for an entire season's output.

A quartet of major circuit deals, for an entire 1941-42 product list is reported by Republic, through J. R. Grainger, president who returned Monday from a trip west. At Denver he reported selling Fox Intermountain Theatres, completing agreements with all the National Theatres subsidiaries. J. T. Sheffield, northwest franchise holder, and, Gene Gerbaise, Denver manager also represented Republic.

Robb & Rowley Sold

In Texas Mr. Grainger and Lloyd Rust of the Dallas exchange closed with the Robb & Rowley circuit. At Salt Lake City with G. S. Pinnell, manager of the Utah exchange, Mr. Grainger closed with the Lawrence circuit, Salt Lake City chain, and Intermountain Theatres.

Producers Releasing Corporation through sales manager Arthur Greenblatt announces that franchise holders have closed circuit and first run deals in New England, Texas and Georgia. At Boston, Harry Asher, franchise holder closed with the Loew group for season product in 24 theatres and with M and P, Interstate, and Loew's on first run engagements of "Dangerous Cargo."

Milton Lefton, in Pittsburgh, sold the new season program to the Warner and Black Diamond chains. Jack Adams, Sr., Dallas franchise holder closed with the Long circuit and Ike Katz at Atlanta reports circuit deals throughout the south. At New York RKO has booked "South of Panama" and "Paper Bullets" for its circuit.

Purchase of the Producers Releasing franchise in the northwest by Lloyd Lamb was reported at Seattle. The territory includes Washington, Oregon, western Idaho and Alaska.

Monogram reports the Golden State and T&D circuit in San Francisco and the entire Butterfield circuit in Michigan have bought its 1941-42 product in entirety.

WARNERS TO MAKE ONLY "A" FILMS

Warner Brothers have announced a "substantial increase in budgets to eliminate all low bracket films from the company's future schedule and placing of all pictures in 'A' classifications on the basis of cast and production values."

Making the step in adaptation of studio policy to consent decree selling, the announcement said the company had conducted preliminary surveys in the field which indicated advisability of individual selling for all pictures and production of top grade films on a similar individual basis.

"Individual selling and making of pictures is felt by Warners to offer the most flexibility under the present regime, relieving the company of release date pressure and disadvantages of group production," it was said.

Sales Departments, Circuit Chiefs Meet

Swifter moving of the six Columbia features set for release before November 1st occupied the attention of division managers at a meeting in the home office last Friday with Abe Montague, sales manager. A plan to offer the pictures to key first and prerelease run theatres in order to give earlier availability to subsequent houses was reported. Release dates for product on the last half of the 1941-42 schedule, already announced up to December 30th, were also considered.

The pictures on which speedier release will apply are "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," "Our Wife," "You'll Never Get Rich," "Ladies in Retirement," "The Men in Her Life" and "Texas."

Attending the meeting were Phil Dunas, midwestern division manager; Carl Shalit, Central division; Sam Galanty, east, and Nat Cohn, New York. Also participating were Rube Jackter, assistant sales manager; Lou Weinberg and Lou Astor, circuit sales, and Max Weisfeldt.

F. J. A. McCarthy, southern and Canadian manager for Universal last weekend started the first of a series of exchange meetings in Dallas for the Dallas and Oklahoma staffs. Sessions at New Orleans, Atlanta and a Canadian tour follows on his itinerary.

Paramount theatre operators gathered Wednesday in Chicago for a two-day discussion of product and operating problems. Leonard Goldenson, home office chief of theatre operations, presided. He followed the Chicago meeting with conferences at Minneapolis. Among those at Chicago were: Leon Netter and Sam Dembow of the home office; John Balaban, Earl J. Hudson, J. J. Friedl, M. A. Lightman, Jules Rubens, Harry David, Tracy Barham, A. H. Blank, Sam Pinanski and M. J. Mullin, Ralph Branton, J. J. O'Leary and J. J. Nolan.

The annual managers meeting of Commonwealth Amusement Corporation will be held at the Hotel President, Kansas City, September 15th and 16th. Awards will be made on the summer campaign and plans for coming campaigns announced. C. A. Schultz, president, will preside; with O. K. Mason, vice-president.

Evergreen Dinner

At Portland on September 3rd the Evergreen circuit launched its fall season with a pep dinner at the Olympic Hotel presided over by Frank L. Newman, president. Spyros and Charles Skouras, heads of the parent National Theatres were guests of the 75 theatre managers in attendance. Mr. Newman predicted boom business with $500,000,000 in defense spending in the Northwest territory and an influx of thousands of families.

Paramount Personnel Shifts

Changes in the personnel at the Paramount exchange in Seattle have been announced by Morrie Segal, manager of the exchange. Robert Estill returns as head booker, replacing Max Hadfield, who resigned to accept a position with Golden State Theatres in San Francisco. Gordon Waldo, assistant booker, moves to the Portland exchange, and will be succeeded by Edward Lord of Portland.

The Feminine Touch

Rosalind Russell Entertains

Not since in "The Women" has Rosalind Russell entertained with such a display of sparkle, wit and charm as sets this comedy of manners apart and above its contemporaries. Other characteristics distinguishing this film from its fellows in the field of dressed-up comedy are freedom from innuendo, an absence of suggestiveness and an adherence to the line of humor in situations which could have gone overboard under clumsier handling.

Grouped around Miss Russell and affording her plenty of competition for acting honors are Don Ameche, Kay Francis and Van Heflin, the four of these stoutly supported on occasion by a cast of seasoned performers. There are no soft spots in the personnel.

The story, originally titled "The Female of the Species" concerns a college professor, his wife, a book publisher and his secretary, who are drawn together by their interest in a book on the aspects and implications of jealousy which the professor has written. Upshot of a sequence of situations in which the professor conforms to the text of his book while the others, try as they will, continue to act like human beings, is the professor's reversion to form in the happy ending.

A polished production by Joseph L. Mankiewicz, directed with razoredge nicety by W. S. Van Dyke II, the picture is tops in entertainment.

Viewed for purposes of this report at a first-grade theatre in a representative city where an audience attracted by "Hold That Ghost" laughed heartily throughout this politer variety of comedy, a circumstance arguing its success in any setting and in proximity to any other entertainment.—WILLIAM R. Great Guns

Return for Laughs

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy return to the screen with "Great Guns," a Fox all-out drive to see how many laughs can be condensed into 74 minutes of running time. The pantomime and the slapstick which are the trademarks of the pair are given full swing against a background of the newly enlarged United States Army, and the preview showed that they are just as funny as they ever were; that their antics provoke hilarious outbursts from audiences, and that their appeal has not diminished.

Supporting them are newcomer Dick Nelson, Sheila Ryan, Edmund MacDonald, Charles Trowbridge and a host of character players, with Nelson and Miss Ryan providing the romantic interest.

The story has them as servants in a household, the young master of which has been thought ill for years. When he is drafted, they enlist to take care of him. Following them to the Army encampment is a pet raven, which manages to complicate their lives. The climax comes at maneuvers when the bird enables the troops to win a mock combat. The narrative supplies excellent pegs for the Laurel and Hardy antics, and director Montague Banks, in his first American film assignment, gives the pair full play. Their gamut runs from elaborately built gags to simple buffoonery, best sequence being that in which Hardy disgraces his company at inspection when the raven gets in his trousers.

Previewed at the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, to an audience which, having just viewed "Hold That Ghost," laughed itself into near hysterics at this.—V. K.

See the West by Horseback

Mighty pretty country around there, where they made this remake of a Western that made money for showmen when the star of this version wore rompers, and some mighty pretty horseback riding occurs by way of giving the customers a good view of it. The same could have been and was said for the original, which suggests saying it again in advertising for this edition.

George Montgomery, starred also in this block as hero of "Last of the Duanes," demonstrates again in this adventure that he's a right handy man with a six-gun and at home aboard a pony. It may be of special and particular point for showmen to remark to their patrons, additionally, that Mr. Montgomery does not sing.

As directed by James Tinling for executive producer Sol Wurtzel, the picture keeps moving, from start to finish, and the principals keep shooting, generally with lethal effect, these circumstances tending to offset some meandering and confusion as to just what the trouble is all about. Gist of it seems to be that the hero has a bit of avenging to do and doesn't give up easily.

Week-end in Havana

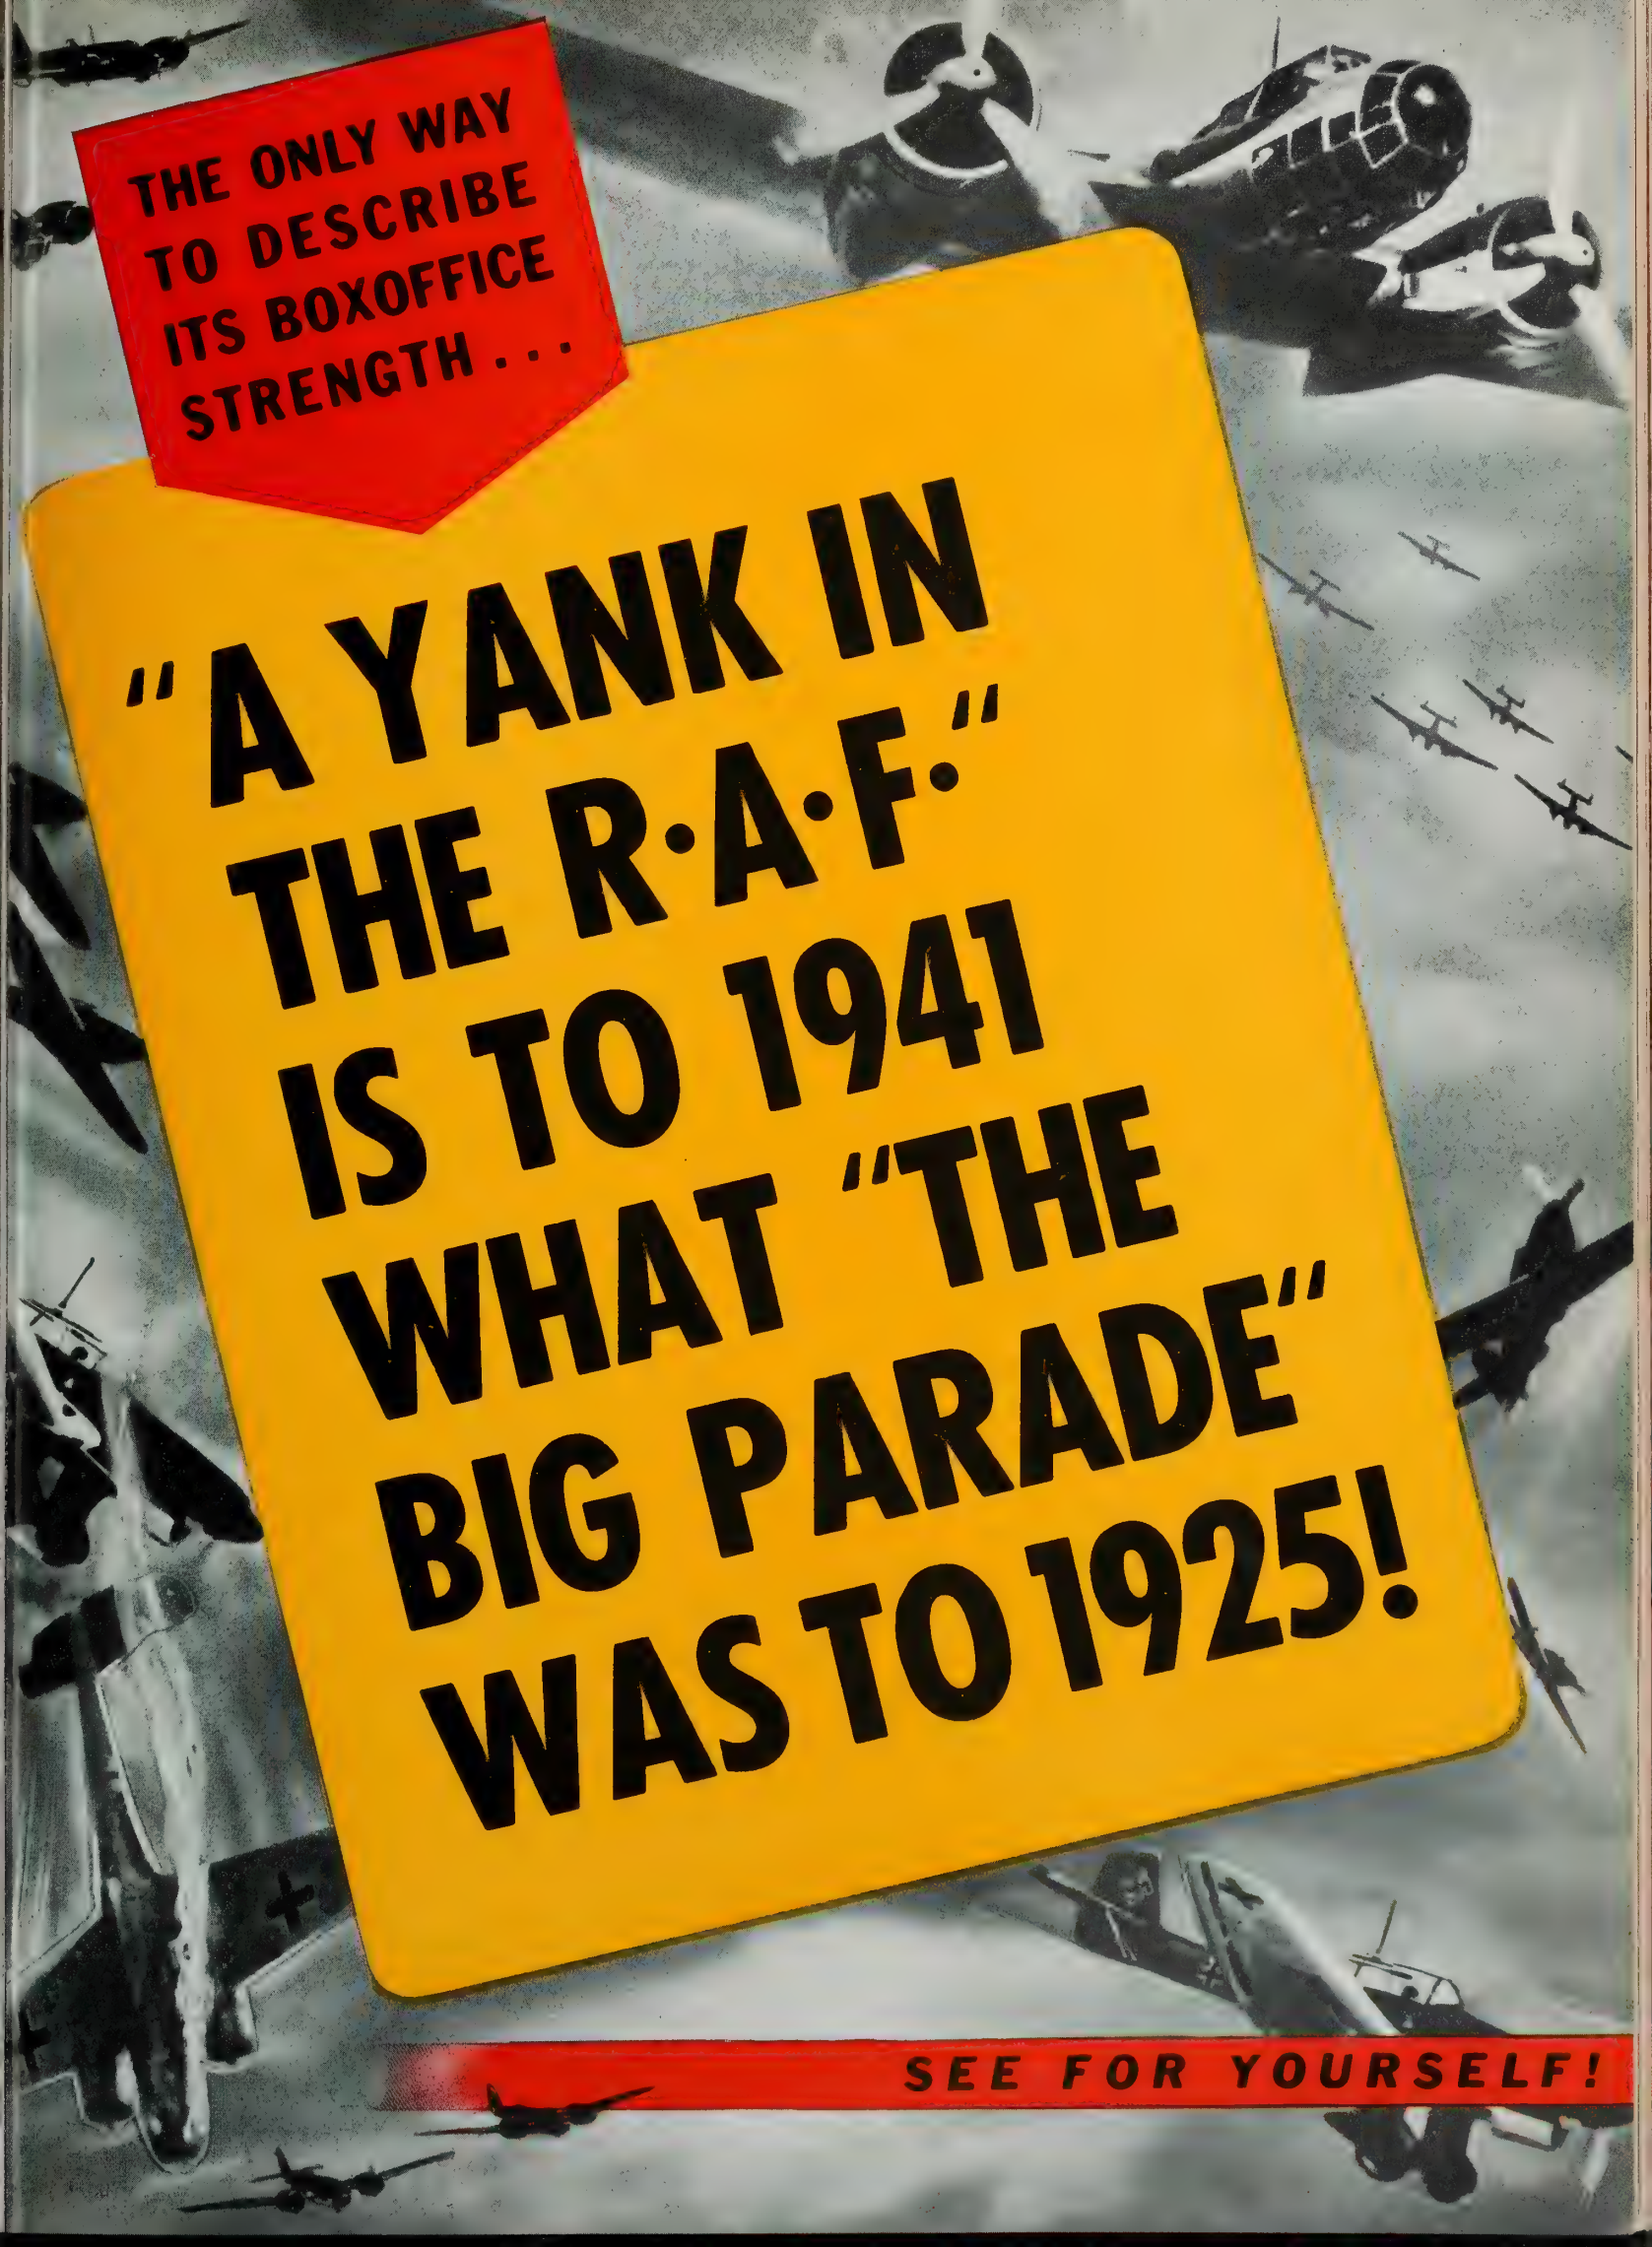
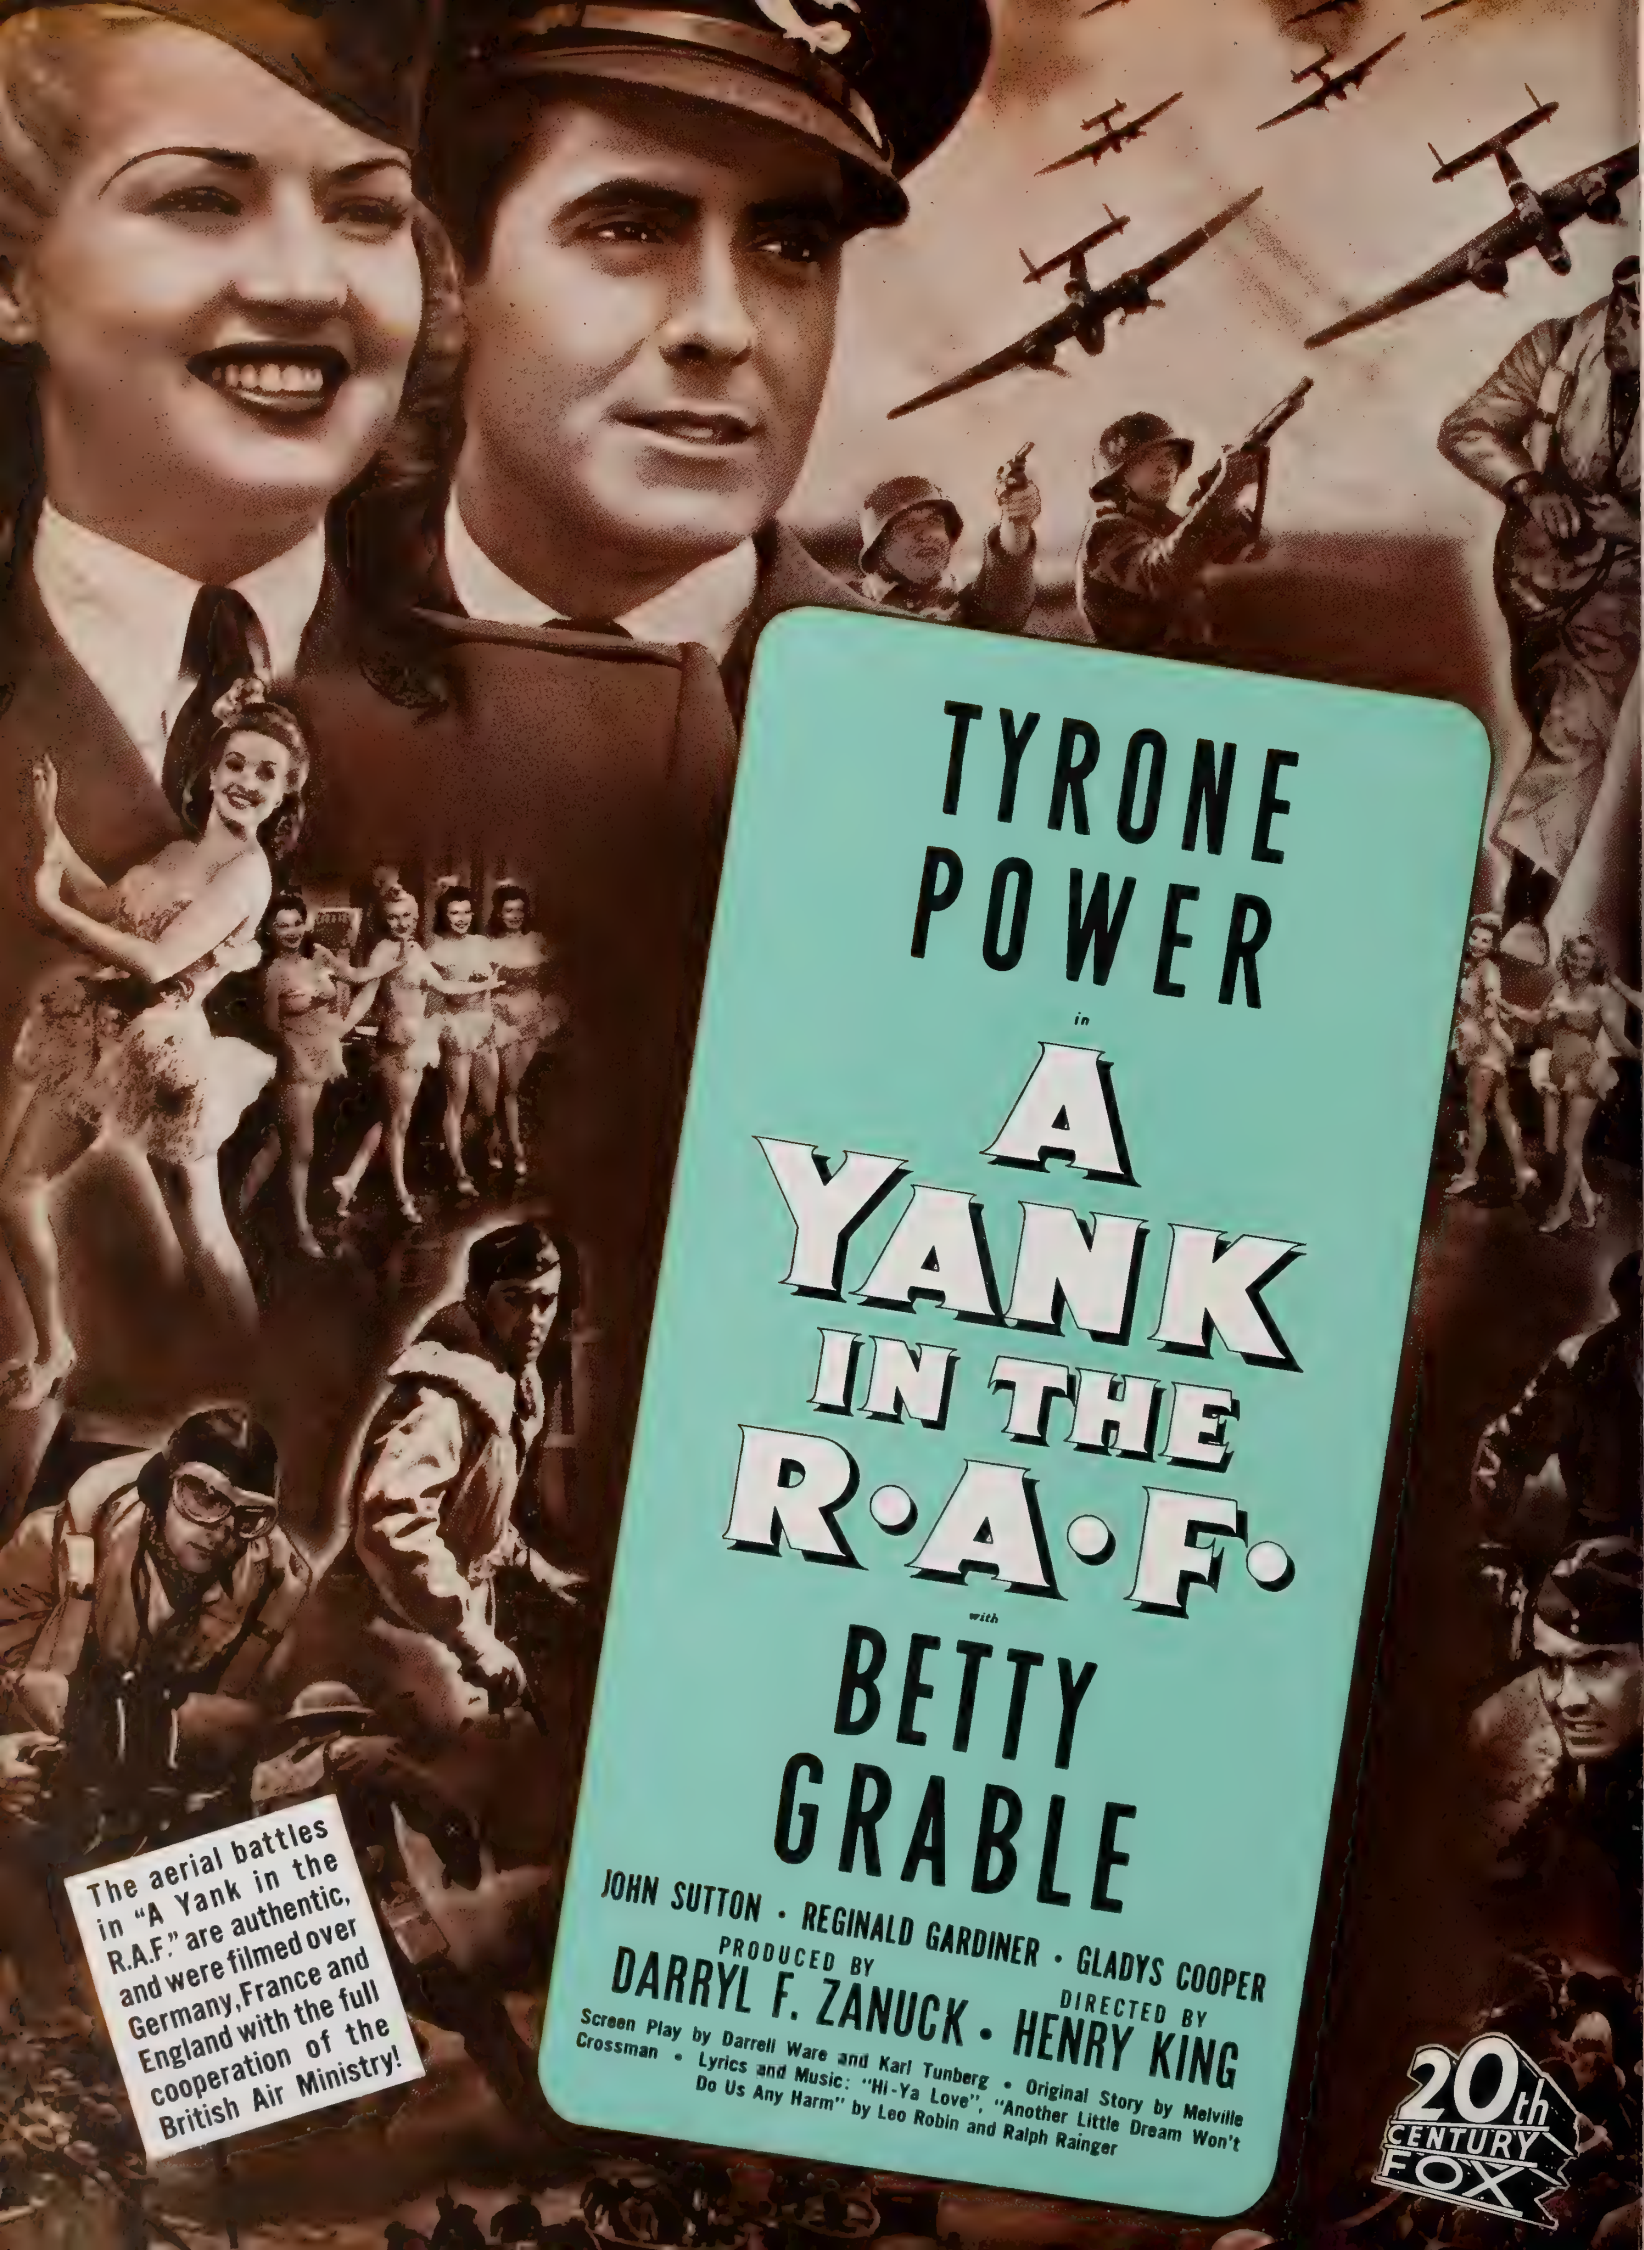
One of Those Cruises

The new film of the Alice Faye-Carmen Miranda tour of Latin America is as gay, colorful and improbable as the Cuban capital itself. Ernest Palmer, as photographic director, working in Technicolor, has presented a tourists' paradise, with a few excellent shots of the Islanders, whose Cuba it barely resembles.

But this is a Hollywood-New York product from the glamorous hosiery salesgirl whose cherished vacation is almost ruined by a steamship mishap, to the charming bounder who agrees to provide Latin romance for a fee, and who, incidentally hails from Brooklyn. The week-end of the title is underwritten by a steamship company on the girl's promise of a waiver of liability if it lives up to her dreams. That it ultimately does is incidental to the audience's enjoyment. For meanwhile there is Carmen Miranda with her locomotive Portuguese and equally expressive English. Several beautifully-staged song and dance numbers interrupt her hot pursuit of the Brooklyn boy who lives by his wits—and in this capacity Cesar Romero turns in the best performance in the film. The romance between Alice Faye and John Payne is necessarily a little tepid, but the pair are attractive enough to keep the thread of story running through agreeably, with the help of director Lang.



William LeBaron, who produced the film, was not primarily interested in cementing Pan-American relations, but "Weekend in Havana" should do much to improve the tourist trade.



Previewed at the projection room before an appreciative audience of exhibitors and members of the trade press.—E. A. C.

NEW U. S. WAR TICKET TAX SET BY SENATE AT 10%, EFFECTIVE OCTOBER 1

Industry Action Defeats 15% Provision; Senate Reduces Personal Exemptions, Rejects Tax on Radio Time Sales

The motion picture industry scored a victory last Friday with the passage of the huge U. S. war-and-defense tax bill by the Senate with only a 10 per cent admission tax provision, instead of a previously proposed sliding scale up to 15 per cent. Since its stormy start in Congress early in April, the bill has been the subject of legislative battle on many fronts. Final enactment of the new tax measure before the end of this month is sought by the House and Senate conferees now engaged in ironing out the differences between the two bodies.

The measure as passed by the Senate would bring into the U. S. Treasury over $356,000,000 more than the bill approved by the House on August 4th, a considerable part of it from the increased taxes on corporations and the reduction of personal exemptions to $1,500 for heads of families and $750 for single persons.

Adopting some recommendations of the Finance Committee, the Senate rejected the special 10 per cent excess profits tax provided in the House bill; approved the House bill estate and gift rates adjusted to include the 10 per cent defense tax, and turned down the Finance Committee's proposal for an admissions tax amounting to about 15 per cent, retaining the House bill rate of 10 per cent on theatre admissions. This action reduces the $3,679,000,000 revenue yield of the bill by nearly $46,000,000. The Senate also eliminated the controversial "community property" taxes.

House Acceptance Seen

No controversy is expected over the admission tax provision, although the Senate in rejecting the proposed sliding scale levies did not accept the original House provision in full and made the 10 per cent tax applicable to all admissions, increasing to 18 years of age limit for the collection of tax only on the amount paid in the case of children's reduced-rate admissions.

The Senate also provided that the new admission levy and certain other taxes should become effective October 1st, believing that the measure would be finally enacted and signed by President Roosevelt before then.

The joint Senate-House conference Wednesday agreed on October 1st as the effective date. Discussion of differences in the Admissions tax provisions was passed over until less controversial points had been settled.

If the 15 per cent tax provision had been approved, the amusement industries, as the MOTION PICTURE HERALD reported in the September 6th issue, Page 21, would have paid an increased revenue of approximately $107,900,000 annually in ticket taxes. The Finance Committee in its report last Wednesday, explained that the admission tax schedule would return approximately $191,000,000 for the first full fiscal year as against $83,100,000 under the present law. The House bill, the report said, would increase the yield approximately $60,000,000 over the present law and the increase of rate to 15 per cent would add another $45,900,000.

ALLIED HAILS SENATE ACTION ON TAX BILL

H. A. Cole, president of Allied States Association, on the eve of the organization's National Convention scheduled for September 16-18th in Philadelphia (see page 35) issued a statement from his Dallas headquarters concerning passage of the tax bill by the Senate last Friday. Mr. Cole said: "Allied is highly gratified over the results in the recent Federal Tax 'blitzkrieg'; we feel especially happy that the Senate leaders who carried the floor fight in support of the industry position hailed from Allied territory, reflecting excellent ground work done by many of our units.

"This emergency, coming out of a clear sky and with no organized central rallying spot for all-industry efforts, shows the urgent necessity for the formation of some kind of all-industry body, such as will be considered at the Allied National Convention."

Defeat of the sliding scale admission tax to more than 15 per cent, was attributed by Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, to the concerted opposition of exhibitors all over the country. The action of the Senate, he said, "proved beyond doubt that our National Congress tried earnestly and sincerely to acquaint itself with the nation's business. Under conditions considered very difficult, we attempted the almost impossible task of getting a reduction in a tax schedule during a time like this. However," he pointed out, "it proved that when your cause is right, and by concerted effort, the theatre owners of this country can do much in getting fair consideration in the National Congress."

Mr. Kuykendall declared that proposed adoption of the sliding scale came like a "bombshell, since no intimation had been given during the hearings that the Finance Committee was considering anything so drastic. Immediately on receipt of this discouraging news, I advised exhibitor leaders all over the country how disastrous this would be to their interests and urged them to contact their Senators and Congressmen," he explained. "It gives me a great deal of personal satisfaction to say that I received full and complete cooperation from exhibitors everywhere, regardless of affiliation; and it was by the concerted effort of all that we succeeded in convincing Congress of the mistake as to this proposed increase."

The successful fight against the higher rates was led by Charles Pettijohn of the MPPDA, Abram F. Myers of Allied, Mr. Kuykendall and Pete J. Wood of the ITO of Ohio. In the Senate, Robert M. La Follette, Wisconsin progressive, led the battle, contending that the tax was an "inordinate burden on theatres" and also upon the recreational habits of the nation's low-income groups. Senator La Follette's successful plea climaxed the fight carried on by all fronts of the industry which resulted in a deluge of telegrams and long distance phone calls from indignant exhibitors throughout the country and acted to exert pressure on the Senate legislators.

In commenting on the industry's victory, Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied, regretted that the Senate merely killed the Senate amendment, restoring the House language of the bill while not retaining the Senate wording which would have automatically wiped out the provision of a 10 per cent tax with exemptions of nine cents and under. Mr. Myers and other industry leaders objected to this exemption from the start, fearful that it might be an inducement in some areas toward price cutting. Whether or not further concerted effort should be exerted to change the present language of the provision in the tax bill, is still under consideration, Mr. Myers said.

No Tax for Service Men

As finally approved by the Senate and sent to conference, the admission tax provision, Section 541, reads as follows:

"Rate. A tax of one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription. In the case of persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, persons under 18 years of age, members of the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps when in uniform) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at any time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, an equivalent tax shall be collected based on the price so charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted. No tax shall be imposed on the amount paid for the admission of a child under 12 years of age if the amount paid is less than 10 cents."

Among those in the exhibitor field who responded to the "all-out" call of industry leaders and participated in the "concerted effort", as described by Mr. Kuykendall, were: Members of the I.T.O. of Iowa and Nebraska, headed by Leo F. Wolcott, president, who protested to the Senate Finance Committee and to their Senators in Washington against the proposed 15 per cent tax; Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois, through Jack Kirsch, president, who wired Illinois Senators urging them to oppose the provision; and R. R. Biechele, president of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association, who urged theatre owners in both states to send telegrams of protest to their Senators.

In addition to the lower income exemptions, which were not approved by the House, the joint Senate-House committee conference group must adjust these Senate changes in the new tax bill:

Increase in the corporation surtax rate from five to six per cent on net income up to $25,000 and from six to 7 per cent on income over that; elimination of the House-approved taxes on soft drinks, radio time sales and billboards; elimination of a special 10 per cent levy voted by the House on the profits of corporations which do not earn enough income to come under the schedule of excess profits taxes; imposition of a 10 per cent tax on electric light bulbs; increase from five to 10 per cent in the House-approved levy on local telephone bills.

Ohio's Sales Tax

Collection of the three per cent retail sales tax in Ohio from January 1st to August 27th, 1941, amounted to $37,295,621.54, according to figures released this week by Don H. Ebright, State Treasurer, at Columbus. Exhibitors pay three per cent tax on gross receipts. This three per cent tax on gross receipts.

EXHIBITORS STICK TO CLEARANCE COMPLAINTS DESPITE NEW RULES

No Specific Run Cases Filed with Arbitration Boards, Although Full Decree Is in Effect; Five Complaints Filed

Five new arbitration cases this week increased slightly the trickle of complaints filed with the American Arbitration Association during the last few weeks, but to mid-week not one of the flood of specific run complaints which were expected after September 1st had appeared. On September 1st Section X of the consent decree which permits independents to seek a specific run became effective. Previously a number of exhibitors had indicated that they contemplated specific run actions.

The new cases, all involving clearance, were filed in New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, and Kansas City.

At New York, in the board's 19th complaint, the clearance of first run suburban White Plains theatres was attacked Monday as unreasonable by the M.F. Theatre Company, operating the Kisco theatre, in Mt. Kisco, N. Y., also a Westchester suburb. It asserted that the seven-day margin of White Plains on first run is unreasonable and asks adjustment. No specific change is requested. The Big Five are named.

20th in New York

The 20th New York case, entered the same day by the Rome theatre, Pleasantville, also in Westchester, makes a similar complaint against "unreasonable" seven-day clearance held by White Plains. All five consenting distributors are cited. Phillips-Sussman, Inc., operate the Rome.

At Kansas City the board's third case raised a race-color question in a clearance dispute which may form precedent for action by numerous Negro theatres in southern territory. D. R. Gifford, operator of the Louis, Negro theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., charges that distributors hold him to third-run status by lengthy clearance.

Asserting that his 310-seat house has an exclusively Negro trade, and is not in direct competition with white theatres in the town, Mr. Gifford asks that his 160-day playing margin be improved substantially. The action names Paramount, Loew's, Warner Brothers and 20th Century-Fox.

Philadelphia's 12th action was filed on Friday by Lewen Pizor, independent circuit head and president of United MPTO in Pennsylvania. The complaint, entered for his Tioga theatre here, is directed against MGM, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and the Warner circuit. Determination of whether the complaint is one of clearance or change of run will be decided by the arbitrator yet to be selected. The complaint asks the arbitrator to declare that the seven days' clearance of the Keystone and Great Northern theatres over the Tioga be declared unreasonable; and that the Tioga get product seven days after first run on North Germantown Avenue at the Strand or Carman.

Mr. Pizor's complaint is of unsual interest in view of the fact that Case No. 8, filed earlier by Columbus Stamper, operator of the Great Northern theatre, also seeks a change of clearance in the same zone. Mr. Stamper asked that the 21 days' clearance of Warners' Strand be cut to 14 days, placing the house seven days after the circuit's Keystone.

Chicago

Hearings of Chicago's sixth complaint, the clearance action of the Portage theatre, continued at Chicago Monday before William McConnel. Stipulations and seven joint exhibits agreed upon by both sides were accepted as evidence on transportation, capacity, admissions, runs involved, population density, games and promotion, dual bill policies and ownership. The exhibits were chiefly maps, and city engineer reports on population, parking and transportation in the competitive area.

Previously Mr. McConnell had ruled that contracts and the records of other exhibitors were secret evidence and should be examined only by himself. He overruled the contention of Theodore Rein, complainants' attorney, that open comparison of receipts and contracts would show ability to pay. Mr. Goldberg, testifying for the Portage, submitted correspondence on product with six distributors and asserted that no matter what price he had offered he had been unable to play pictures ahead of the Gateway, Balaban and Katz house, named in the action. The hearing was adjourned Tuesday for resumption September 16th.

The Steve Bennis clearance complaint for the Grand and Lincoln Theatres in Lincoln, Ill., Case No. 5 was dismissed Wednesday by Harold J. Clark on motion of all parties. Distributors gave Bloomington, Ill., national release date along with Springfield, allowing Lincoln to run immediately after Bloomington instead of twenty-one days after the Chicago loop.. Costs were paid by Mr. Bennis and Great States Circuit.

Atlanta

Atlanta's first arbitration hearing started September 4th and continued through Friday and Monday as Aaron Courshon, operator of the Parkway, Miami, Fla., sought to prove before Harold T. Patterson, Atlanta attorney, who is arbitrator, that Paramount, Warners, and MGM give the Paramount Enterprises circuit an "unreasonable" 120 to 150 day clearance.

St. Louis

The some run complaint of Louis Sosna, Mexico, Mo., exhibitor, heard last Thursday in the St. Louis office of the AAA, has been taken under advisement by Fred A. Armstrong, St. Louis lawyer, who is acting as arbitrator. He will hand down a decision in 30 days. It is the third St. Louis case.

The hearing consumed most of the day as Mr. Sosna pressed his claim for some run from Loew's, Inc. The plaintiff said Loew's had not fulfilled its contract with him, but admitted he had obtained some product from the company. He testified unless he obtained film from Loew's he faced a shutdown.

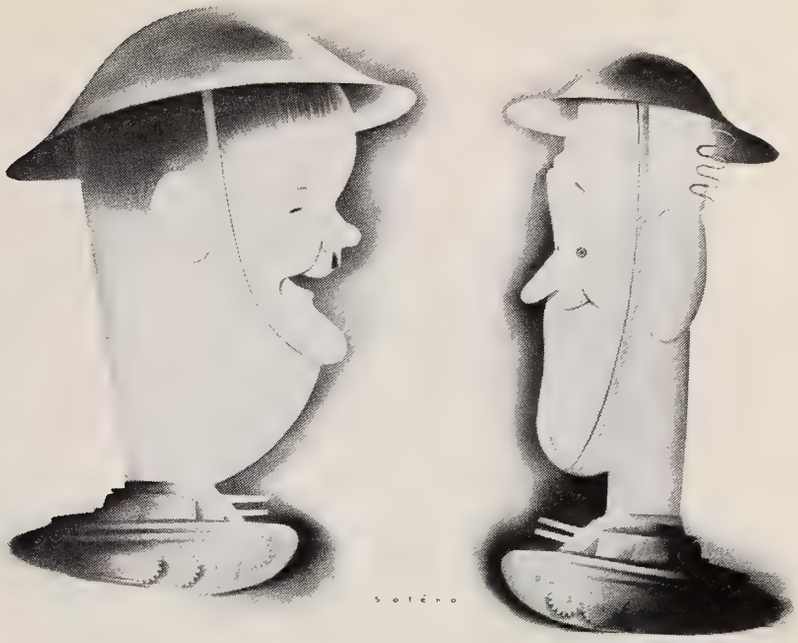
An issue in the hearing was a 5 cents admission price. Mr. Sosna claimed he could make more money by charging 5 cents than 15 cents or higher. John X. Quinn, St. Louis branch manager of Loew's, said he had furnished Sosna with pictures, but withdrew them when the exhibitor cut prices to 5 cents, contrary to stipulations in the contract.

William Felstein, representing the Frisina Circuit, named by Sosna as interested parties, also testified. Frisina operates the Rex and Liberty in Mexico, opposition to Sosna. Mr. Feldstein said there was no attempt to freeze out Sosna.

In St. Louis' fourth action, the St. Louis Amusement Co. has intervened in the clearance case filed by Victor Thein, operator of the neighborhood Palm. Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and two Fanchon and Marco houses were named in the original complaint.

Philadelphia

The anti-trust suit of J. H. Schad, Reading, Pa., exhibitor, against the major distributors, which opened Monday in U. S. District Court at Philadelphia, occupied company lawyers and prompted a general postponement of arbitration hearings scheduled for the next two weeks. All the scheduled hearings involved clearance actions. Case No. 7, of N. Herman Bornstein, operator of the suburban Hatboro against all the consenting distributors and Warners' Grove, has been postponed for a second time from September 10th to October 2nd.



Case No. 9, the first of three complaints filed by A. M. Ellis, head of the independent circuit operating the Broad Theatre, and all directed against Warners, Paramount, RKO and the Warner circuit, will be the first arbitration complaint to be heard this month, its original hearing date of September 24th holding good. Case No. 10, Mr. Ellis for his Liberty theatre in Camden, N. J., was postponed from September 16th to October 7th; and Case No. 11, Mr. Ellis for his Parkside, in Camden, was postponed from September 19th to October 10th.

Los Angeles

H. Eugene Breitenbach will arbitrate the clearance action of D. Lemucci and James Vanducci, Arvin, Calif., operators who seek better clearance for their three theatres. Hearings will start October 21st. The case is Los Angeles No. 4.

Detroit

Detroit's fourth arbitration case was filed Tuesday by D. E. Frank, owner of the Gale, Galesburg, and naming Paramount, Fox, Warners and Loew's and also the Butterfield Circuit's and P. C. Schram's Michigan and Uptown Theatres, Kalamazoo. Mr. Frank asked reduction of his clearance from seven days after second-runs in the latter city to seven days after first-runs.

WALL STREET EYES THE CONTINUING RISE OF FILM AND AVIATION SHARES

Rise in Gross Receipts Brings Increase in Stock Values; Major Companies and Affiliates Reflect Stock Exchange Gains

Solid evidence of the accelerating upswing in motion picture boxoffice receipts and waxing prosperity in dependent branches of the industry is seen in strong current Wall Street interest in the rising performances of entertainment corporation stock issues.

Belying somewhat the talk of slumps and bad weather voiced not so long ago by some, amusement shares on both the Stock and Curb exchanges at New York have been leaders, along with aviation stocks, in trading since mid-summer. A study of 23 leading film issues over the past year shows a consistent climb in every instance with some shares more than doubling in value over the 12-month period.

An accompanying tabulation of the prices variously over the past year for the 23 shares shows at a glance the gains which have been made in every major film corporation's common and preferred issues. Twelve of the most important production, distribution, processing and film equipment firms are represented.

Boom Forecast

A study of nationwide boxoffice returns made available exclusively to MOTION PICTURE HERALD and published in the issue of June 14th presaged the current stock prosperity with reports of sharply increasing attendance and boxoffice grosses through April, May and June. Subsequent reports indicated that attendance and dollars continued their rise through July and August mounting rapidly towards boom proportions.

In the brokerage offices and customers' rooms interest in film shares has kept pace with the reports of better theatre business. Trading in the issues has been outstanding through a summer and Labor Day turn in which steels, utilities, and even the heavy industrials associated with defense expenditures have been lackadaisical. Only aviation issues have exceeded or matched the film shares consistently, for the last two months.

Film shares, according to several reliable financial sources, are being traded both as speculative and investment issues. No figures are available on the distribution between the categories. There have been reports recently form the SEC and other sources, however, of large acquisitions in company stocks by executives, producers, and players in companies with which they are associated. In most instances the purchases are regarded as having been for investment purposes.

Notable among the larger rises in film issues have been increases in the price of Warner, Paramount and Universal issues, from September 1, 1940, to September 8, 1941. Warners preferred stock advanced from 27 to 72, the common from 2⅜ to 5½; Paramount common rose from 5⅝ to 15¾ over the same period, while the company's first and second preferred issues advanced from 75 to 111¼ and from 8⅛ to 14⅛.

Universal scored the most spectacular increases when its common, listed on the Curb Exchange, increased by almost 500 per cent from 5 to 24. The company's first preferred, listed on the Stock Exchange board, almost doubled, mounting from 80 to 159, as of Monday noon.

Less spectacular, but equally consistent, have been the advances in Eastman Kodak, Consolidated Film Industries, Technicolor, Pathe, and other issues not directly engaged in marketing motion pictures, but directly dependent on them for a large portion of their income.

Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox, Pathe, RKO and minor issues, although traded in less volume than the Warner, Paramount and Universal stocks, have also shown heavy gains. The Loew common, always regarded as an investment issue, and largely held by officers of the corporation, moved from 26 in September 1940 to 37⅛ this week. The even more closely held preferred shares advanced from 101 to 108½. Stocks of 20th Century-Fox and Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and its related Keith-Albee-Orpheum, all largely controlled by banking interests registered less wide a spread, but mirrored the general increase and today are well above quotations of a year, six months, and a month ago.

Buying in amusement stocks has been interpreted in several Wall Street quarters and by the Wall Street Journal and New York Herald Tribune, among others, as evidence of a hedge in the face of a war market. While industrials are susceptible to sudden change in the event of an alteration in the war's course, they point out that payrolls, saving and other resultants of defense expenditures are likely to continue for some time, assuring continuing patronage of motion pictures.

C. Norman Stabler, financial editor of the Herald-Tribune, recently observed, "Buying has been on the assumption that no matter how many tanks and cannons we may be able to build, and how much the heavy industries may lose through increased taxes, it is a certainty that payrolls are going to continue to mount. It is assumed that a good portion of these payrolls will flow into the coffers of the amusement companies."

Shortly after the Labor Day lull the same commentator observed that it was the film and aircraft shares that kept the market open on the preceding days. They were practically the only groups to witness large trading. New highs for the year were registered last week by Columbia, Loew's, the three Paramount issues, Fox and Warners, among others.

Heavy buying in film shares, and constant increase in bids is attributed by financial circles, according to a reliable Wall Street observer, to the success which picture companies have had in recouping lost foreign markets by domestic promotion. He noted that reports indicate that the domestic situation is continuing to improve and said that Wall Street investors were optimistic about the box office prospects of the 1941-42 picture season, just launched.

Also, he said, reports of more economic production planning in Hollywood, and more careful budget controls have reached the markets with encouraging effect.

Universal, Loew's, B. & K. Dividends

Universal last week declared a second consecutive quarterly dividend of $2 per share on first preferred stock, payable October 1st. It is the second dividend since 1932. The arrears on the issue are reduced to $68 a share. The dividends reflect Universal earnings estimated at $3,000,000 for the first three quarters of 1941.

Loew's, Inc., last week voted a regular dividend of 50 cents a share on its common stock payable on September 30th to stockholders of record on September 19th.

Balaban & Katz Theatre Corporation at Chicago on Monday voted a $1 dividend on each share of its common stock, to be paid October 1.

Transfer of Stock To Dissolve Pathe

Final plans were announced on Tuesday by Pathe Film Corp. whereby the company will exchange its holdings of 3,500 shares of duPont Film Manufacturing Corp. common stock for 56,750 shares of E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. common, thereby dissolving Pathe Film following such an exchange. Stockholders of Pathe will vote on the plan, which was presented by Kenneth M. Young, president of the company, at a special meeting to be held on October 1st. Pathe's board of directors and executive and finance committees of the duPont organization already have approved the transfer.

$100 a Share

Under terms of the proposed dissolution, holders of 7,469 shares of Pathe preferred would receive $100 a share in cash, while holders of 585,095 shares of common stock would receive one share of duPont de Nemours common for approximately each 10.3 shares of Pathe held. Cash for payment of the preferred and all expenses would be available from cash now on hand plus dividends to be paid Pathe on the duPont stock before the exchange. On August 15th, duPont Film paid a third quarterly dividends of $50 a share, an aggregate of $175,000, on the stock held by Pathe, and has agreed to pay not less than $217, a share additional before consummation of the plan, or $759,500."

Holders of Pathe common stock not entitled to full shares of E. I. duPont common will receive the participating receipts for fractional shares of E. I. duPont common. In addition, Pathe common holders will be entitled to share in any available cash after the satisfaction of all liabilities, following lapse of four years, during which time such available cash will be held in a contingency fund for unknown contingent liabilities.

Reasons given for the dissolution of Pathe Film are: unnecessary duplication of operating costs and taxes inherent in any holding company; recent trends in taxation tending to work special hardships on fast-growing companies enjoying a high return on capital, such as duPont Film, and lack of controlling voice on behalf of Pathe in the management of duPont Film.

As of August 15th, Pathe Film had total assets of $3,098,023, including $240,880 in cash and in investment in duPont Film of $2,857,143. In 1940 Pathe Film received $490,000 in dividends from duPont and showed a profit carried to earned surplus of $439,416. From January 1st to August 15th of this year dividends received totaled $245,000 and profit and earned surplus $194,181.

Fox Continuing British Films; Has Two Scheduled

Twentieth Century-Fox is not discontinuing production in England. It is in fact planning completion of at least two important films before the year's end, according to Robert T. Kane, the company's production chief in Great Britain, who arrived in New York Tuesday, from Hollywood, and who was scheduled to fly to Britain later in the week.

Some technicians from the Hollywood studio will follow him to Britain. Mr. Kane explained they were to meet the shortage of technical workers.

Mr. Kane will stay in Britain about six months, supervising "Piu the Younger" now in work, and "This Above All."

Sussman on Stand In Schad Suit

On the second day of trial of the anti-trust suit brought by Harry J. Schad, Reading exhibitor, against Warners, the Wilmer and Vincent circuit and Twentieth Century-Fox, on Tuesday in Philadelphia U. S. District Court, William Sussman, Fox Eastern division sales manager, was the principal witness on the stand. Federal Judge J. Cullen Ganey presided. State Senator Harry Shapiro, attorney for Mr. Schad, also took the testimony of Ted Schlanger, general manager.

Mr. Schlanger was dismissed early when he explained that all negotiations for the circuit's houses in Reading were conducted by the Warner home office and not by himself. Mr. Eagen, following on the stand, explained how the Wilmer-Vincent circuit acquired its houses in Reading, the circuit's film deals and how the product was used. He concluded his testimony on Tuesday morning, and was followed by Mr. Sussman, who explained how Fox sells its product in Reading.

Odlum Named To OPM Post

Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas Corporation, one of the principal stockowners of RKO-Keith-Orpheum, was appointed by President Roosevelt last week to head the new division of contract distribution for the Office of Production Management. Mr. Odlum has taken a temporary leave of absence from his Atlas post to direct the new division which was created by Presidential order to effect a wider geographical and corporate distribution of defense orders. President Roosevelt gave the division broad powers to break up the Army and Navy contracts into smaller units, to develop the conversion of non-defense factories to the manufacture of arms and to stimulate subcontracting and otherwise assist manufacturers who seek participation in the defense program.

Mr. Odlum has been identified for many years with the corporate affairs of major motion picture companies through the Atlas Corp. His new post will be on a par with other defense program OPM chiefs and his major task at the moment is to persuade the bigger contractors on defense orders to farm out some of their business to smaller firms. Mr. Odlum's previous connection with OPM was as adviser to Leon Henderson, administrator of the Office of Price Administration.

Brown at World-Telegram

John Mason Brown, for many years drama critic on the New York Evening Post, this week assumed the same post on the city's World Telegram, succeeding Sidney Whipple, who ascended to an editorial executive position. Mr. Brown is succeeded at the Post by Wilella Waldorf.

Film Making School

The Hartley School of Film Making has opened in New York City, "planned to enable a student, upon completion of the term, to intelligently produce a motion picture," and under supervision of Irving Hartley.

Variety Tents Plan Convention

Preparing already for the eighth annual convention at Los Angeles next May, the Variety Clubs of America have appointed a national committee of arrangements.

At present it includes: Paul Short, Robert O'Donnell, James G. Balmer, Edward Ruben, Harry Kalmine, Ted Schlanger, Jay Emanuel, Walter Wanger, John LeRoy Johnston, Cliff Lewis, Harry Mayer, Henry Friedman, Charles E. Lewis, John H. Harris, Burt King, William McAvoy, Duke Clark, Max Leven, Joseph Grant, Jack Beresin, Ray O'Rourke, Dr. Leon Levy, John Maloney, Herman Robbins, George Dembow, and Carter Barron, in addition to all national canvasmen.

Others may be named at the induction dinner and charter presentation of the new Southern California tent, in Los Angeles, September 29th. Charles Skouras, the new tent's chief barker, last week issued a challenge-commandment: the new tent, 25, will be the first in membership, club room facilities, and charities.

Tournament Set

The Charlotte, North Carolina, Variety Club will hold its second golf tournament October 6th. The tent is now surveying the number and needs of crippled children unable to attend school; so that it can establish a special school.

The Cinema Club of Cincinnati, after having been inactive during the summer, will resume monthly meetings at Variety quarters, beginning next Monday. Entertainment will feature the initial meeting, to which resident members of the Variety Club have been invited.

The Dayton, Ohio, Variety Club held its annual golf tournament and frolic at the Northmoor Country Club, Wednesday. Sports and athletic events, in addition to other entertainment, were features. The affair was stag, with a $3 charge covering all expenses, and the proceeds going to the club's charity fund.

Variety club charities are richer by $2,500, as result of the pre-season football game sponsored by the Pittsburgh Tent 1 between the Pittsburgh Steelers and Detroit Lions. Net proceeds from the game were $10,000, of which 25% went to Variety coffers. Dr. Lawrence G. Beinhauer was chairman.

The Dallas tent will shortly present three affairs: the "appreciation luncheon," September 22nd; the Fall golf tournament, October 11th to 13th; the annual Hallowe'en Party, October 31st.

The Boston tent, 23, recently held open house for members and for Universal comedians Lou Abbott and Bud Costello, visitors to the city.

The Kansas City tent will hold its first monthly meeting of the new season next Monday. Plans for the autumn and winter will be mulled.

Expect Loew's Year Profit $8,200,000

Loew's has earned $8,200,000 for the fiscal year ended August 31st, New York financial circles estimated Tuesday. This amount is calculated after provision of $4,000,000 as a foreign contingency reserve.

Loew's reported a net profit of $8,908,470 for the fiscal year, ended August 31, 1940. That was after provision of $2,000,000 for foreign contingencies. The 1941 figure is equivalent to approximately $4.50 per share on the common stock, compared with $4.82 the preceding year.

DISTRIBUTORS GET 36.3 CENTS OF EACH BOX OFFICE DOLLAR: ALLIED

Convention Call Stresses Present Rentals; Units Praise Plan for Joint Committee; Meeting Opens Sept. 16th

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors will assemble in Philadelphia's Benjamin Franklin Hotel, Tuesday through Thursday, for its 12th annual convention.

Economics of operation and their relation to new Federal taxation and to film costs will be a basic theme of discussion, along with the usual matters of product, policy and procedure. In this connection, the convention committee, preparing the agenda this week in Philadelphia, pointed out that the total average film cost for all theatres was running 36.3 per cent of the gross box office receipts, that 36.3 cents of every gross dollar income was going to distributors for film rentals.

Meanwhile, from National Allied headquarters in Washington, Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, issued a "follow-up" bulletin containing praise from industry leaders for previous suggestions from him for a national joint committee from all sectors of the film industry, to solve industry problems.

Leaders Urge Committee

Mr. Sears said: "I believe your suggestion to be an excellent one.

"While it is not new or original, the effectiveness of the committee will depend entirely upon the earnestness of the members of the committee itself and the initiative and energy which is put forth by the proponents of the plan to insure its proper functioning. Since the formal request for such a committee emanates from a reputable and responsible exhibitors' organization I am positive the production, distribution and administrative ends of the business will surely cooperate.

"I will give the committee the benefits of any suggestions which may come to me from time to time and any other help which they earnestly require."

Colonel Cole wrote: "I believe there is a possibility if not a probability that the formation of such an idea would be welcomed by all interests in this industry. I believe that Philadelphia is the place where the movement should be started—at our National Convention September 16-18. I believe that this might be the most important step that has been taken by our industry."

Mr. Kirsch said: "There is no doubt in my mind that great good would eventually result from such a movement as it has always been my belief that if all elements of the motion picture industry could get together on common ground much could be accomplished for the betterment of our business."

Mr. Branch's letter read: "That there is a crying need for just such procedure as you outline therein, goes without saying, and I believe the gesture of placing it on the agenda for discussion at the National Convention in Philadelphia is a very fine one, and a very timely thought."

Advance reservations at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, Philadelphia, for Allied's 12th annual national convention, Sept. 16-18, have broken all records, it was announced September 4th by Sidney E. Samuelson, chairman of the convention committee. The reservations include acceptances from outstanding industry executives in the distribution and exhibition fields who have promised to participate in the discussions designed to create a national liaison committee for better industry relations.

Besides a set program for the convention sessions, the floor will be kept open to all delegates for free discussion of various industry problems, including a discussion on what is happeing to the box-office from the standpoint of gross income and film costs, the effect of the consent decree, how arbitration is working in various territories, and the proposed tax bill before Congress. In regard to the tax measure, on which Congress will be taking final action just at the time when the convention is in session (see page 29), it is felt that an outstanding attendance of all persons engaged in the motion picture industry will focus attention on and will give the convention an opportunity to make its opinion heard on this vital issue.

Statistics for a full calendar year, the convention committee points out, indicated that total average film cost for all theatres was 36.3 percent of the gross box-office receipts. Experience since then has proved that the new U. S. admissions tax has cut into the box-office dollar and it may well be that the total of the new taxes and the film bill will wipe out all possibility of exhibitor profit. This despite the fact that financial reports of the film companies show very good earnings.

Another subject which will occupy the attention of the convention is feature pictures that were promised for delivery during the 1940-41 season and have been withheld by several of the companies.

In arrangement made by Mr. Samuelson with Ted Schlanger, Warner theatres' zone chief in Philadelphia, convention delegates will be allowed to enter all the circuit houses free during the three-day session.

Brandt Gives Cautious Approval

In New York last week, The Independent, organ of Harry Brandt's Independent Theatre Owners Association, remarked editorially that if the Allied convention is an "all-industry" meeting, "everyone will benefit;" but that, if it is not, "it will be a repetition of what occurred in Minneapolis several years ago when exhibitors came from all over the nation to give their views on the proposed trade practice code, and all the time the Allied board of directors, in secret session, had voted the proposition down.

"That proved such a shock to the industry, that faith in Allied's proceedings from that point on went down to nil . . . unless every word is allowed to be heard, and all action be taken on the floor in full view of every one, Myers' words will be but so much eye wash. . . .

"The MPTOA's convention in June was a complete fiasco for two reasons: lack of leadership and lack of an adequate program. They had nothing to talk about, and there was no one there to talk about it.

"Let the Allied members realize that there are many important topics to talk about; and regardless of what happens at their convention, they should discuss those things which demand action now. . . .

"All exhibitors who are not members of Allied, yet who are attending the convention, should likewise go with the idea that this in reality is to be an all-industry meeting. If it should turn out that they have been fooled, at least every one will know that their intentions were honest, even if those of the Allied leaders weren't."

EXHIBITOR UNIT LAUDS RODGERS

William F. Rodgers' contributions to "better understanding in our great business" was commended, via resolution, by the recent Seventh Annual Convention of the West Virginia Managers Association, at White Sulphur Springs, that state. The unit remarked that the MGM sales manager, by his "courage, patience, tolerance, and kindliness, took the leadership several years ago to bring about this better understanding, refusing to be discouraged when his attempt to write a code of fair play for the business was not adopted. . . ." The organization is affiliated with the MPTOA.

The ITOA is unaffiliated. Harry Brandt, its president, has several times recommended a new national exhibitor organization.

In inviting exhibitors to its all-industry convention, the National Allied, via advertisements in the trade press, said, "While diversion and entertainment will be provided—'this is not a party,'" and it asked exhibitors to "come prepared for serious discourses by outstanding industry and national leaders and for a constructive business meeting that is most needed in these troubled times—and in which you will participate!"

New York Meeting

The New York Allied, recently formed, will probably hold a meeting concurrently with the Philadelphia convention, it was said in New York last week. In this organization, prominent are Robert Goldblatt, Max Cohen, Louis Goidel, Abraham Stone, Leonard Rosenthal.

Officers will probably be elected at the Philadelphia meeting.

Robert H. Poole has been renamed executive director of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California. Mrs. Ida Schreiber was agains appointed office secretary and Mrs. Jennie Dodge, named treasurer, replacing Charles Ferry.

Reelected trustees were Hugh Bruen, Jack Y. Berman. Recently, Murray Hawkins and M. C. Sinift were named to the board.

A charter has been granted the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners in Sacramento. Listed as directors were Hugh Bruen, Jack Berman, H. V. Harvey, Ben Levin, L. O. Lukan, W. G. Ripley, Bob White, and George Hunt.

A Thirtieth Anniversary testimonial luncheon will be tendered October 7th, at Ceriani's, New Haven, to Joseph F. Reed, by the Connecticut Allied. Mr. Reed is operator of the Bantam theatre, and others, and is a chairman of the unit's board of directors. Chairman of the affair are Dr. J. B. Fishman, and Daniel Pouzzner. Mr. Reed started in business, in the area, in 1911. The organization held its regular luncheon meeting, Tuesday, in that city.

The Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania will convene at Pittsburgh October 20th and 21st.

Arzoz Renews Monogram Mexican Release Pact

Rafael Arzoz, Mexican distributor and head of the Victoria producing company, has renewed his distributing contract with Monogram, following a visit to the company's foreign sales office, in New York City. Mr. Arzoz will take 42 Monogram films, this year. Last year, he distributed 21.

The Mexican film man explained in interviews that American pictures are increasingly liked in Mexico, and together with native product, and as a result of the war, have eliminated Europe's films as competitors.

Victoria will make nine films next season; one in color.

Acquires Gridiron Shorts

M. J. Kandel, president of Ideal Pictures Corp., in New York, has purchased the original negatives and the exclusive rights to a series of six one-reel pictures entitled "Football Tactics" featuring the late Knute Rockne.

RKO, Columbia Hold Havana Conventions

by RAMON PEON

in Havana

The Columbia Latin American sales convention opened in Havana on September 4th, the day after delegates to RKO Radio's first Caribbean convention ended a three-day meeting here. Columbia managers from Puerto Rico, Mexico, Panama, Trinidad and Venezuela were greeted by Ernesto P. Smith and Pedro Martinez, manager and assistant manager of the Columbia Havana branch. J. A. McConville, Arnold Picker and Jack Segal, all of the company's home office in New York, were the presiding officers.

Screenings of "Our Wife" and "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" featured the three-day meeting. Delegates included Michael Burgner and George Oller, Puerto Rico; Edgar Kerner, Trinidad; Enrique Davila, Colombia; Harry Prosdecini, Panama; Rafael Sevilla, Mexico, and Christina Van Ree, Venezuela.

The RKO Radio convention, featured by a screening of Walt Disney's "Fantasia" at the Fausto theatre, closed September 3rd with a banquet at the Hotel Nacional. R. K. Hawkinson, division manager, presided. Mike Hoffay, director of foreign publicity, attended.

Browne Loses Second Dismissal Motion

George E. Browne, along with Willie Bioff, his West Coast representative, must stand trial for extortion next Monday in New York City, Federal Judge Simon Rifkind ruled Monday n that city, quashing a second motion by attorneys of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees president, for dismissal of the indictment against the two men.

The motion cited technical grounds. A previous dismissal motion, quashed by Federal Judge Louie Strom, contended the indictment did not come under the Federal anti-racketeering laws. The two men were indicted by a Federal Grand Jury for extorting $550,000 from Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Paramount, and Warners.

The trial has been twice delayed because of inability to find a Federal Judge to sit on the case. United States District Attorney Mathias Correa warned two weeks ago, at the last postponement, that there might be another.

Meanwhile, scheduled trial, in Los Angeles, of Bioff, for evasion of Federal income taxes in 1936 and 1937 has been postponed to November 17th.

Paramount Wins

The baseball team of the Paramount home office, New York, won the Motion Picture League championship Saturday, September 6th, by defeating the Universal team, 13 to 3. Its record has been nine games won, one lost. It is the third time in four years the team has won first place. It has thus each time won the cup donated by Quigley Publications.

Breen in New York

Joseph I. Breen, general manager in charge of studios of RKO, arrived in New York this week from the Coast.

Theatres Extend USO Drive Week

With 10,233 theatres in the United States participating in the USO Theatre Week, many houses reported collections amounting to about 10 per cent of the gross and others indicated to Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Bros. Theatres, who is chairman of the theatre drive, that they were extending collections beyond the stipulated Labor Day week. In New York, the Roxy theatre is continuing the campaign for 10 days because of favorable patron response. According to Mr. Bernhard, the theatres which enrolled for the campaign represented the largest number for any drive in film annals.

Richard Lawrence, chairman of the New York City USO campaign, of which Thomas E. Dewey is national chairman, sent a letter to Joseph Hazen of Warners, chief of the New York motion picture division for the drive. Mr. Lawrence wrote: "I wish to express to you and your associates our grateful appreciation of the splendid results attained in your division. The energy and devotion which all of you gave to this great community enterprise deserves and has the commendation of New York's citizens as well as the appreciation of the young men in the service."

Drive in West

In Oklahoma, 26 Oklahoma City theatres including Standard houses, all theatres of the Griffith Amusement Company and the Talbot theatres in Tulsa, in addition to 100 independent houses throughout the state are conducting USO campaigns to raise a quota of $21,000. From Seattle, reports indicated that the local USO drive was "entirely satisfactory," with 166 of the 180 theatres in that area signed up to collect funds.

Total receipts from all theatres throughout the nation will not be announced for another week.

Howard Dietz, MGM's director of publicity and advertising who is coordinator-chairman by special appointment of Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury, for the "Treasury Hour" radio programs, has written the lyrics for "Buy a Bond," in collaboration with tune-writer Arthur Schwartz. Mr. Dietz wrote the lyrics last week in New York and airmailed them to Mr. Schwartz who is in Hollywood. On Friday, tune-smith Schwartz completed his melody, played his own accompaniment and sang the tune for a transcription. The record was rushed back to New York where orchestra leader Al Goodman of the "Treasury Hour" shows, listened to it and then prepared a score for his men. Within 48 hours the tune was ready for a studio rehearsal. "Buy a Bond" had its premiere on the CBS network "Treasury-Hour" Wednesday night spot this week. All of which made good publicity copy for everybody concerned.

Four New Companies

New York's Secretary of State has chartered four new companies: Cinesound Productions, Inc.; Coda Corporation; Adabel Films, Inc., and Futura Amusement Corporation. All are in New York City.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

DOUGLAS MILLER, former United States Trade Commissioner at the Embassy in Berlin, is convinced that 'you can't do business with Hitler.' And he has written a book to prove it, disclosing, among other choice items, how Herr Goebbel's Ministry of Propaganda arranged for the chief of the German Film Chamber to pay Mr. Miller a little call at his Embassy office, and propose that the then banned American motion picture companies resume operations in Naziland, sell their films in Germany for whatever they could get, and take their profits out of the country without any restrictions. Mr. Miller's ears perked, for hadn't the U. S. film producers been complaining to him loudly and long against the intolerable operating and economic blackjacking of the Hitlerites.

But, he was told by the Goebbel lieutenant, in return for the privilege offered, Goebbels demanded the absolute right to one-quarter of the screen playing time of the largest picture theatre in each of our 25 largest cities for German propaganda pictures.

THEATRE NOT A CLINIC, PUBLIC, INDUSTRY TOLD

McNicholas, Head of Pictures Committee, Attacks Showings of "Sex Hygiene" Pictures

Strong disapproval of the exhibition of sex hygiene films in motion picture theatres was voiced over the weekend by the Most Reverend John T. McNicholas, O.P., S.T.M., Archbishop of Cincinnati, who is chairman of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures.

"The Catholic Bishops' Committee, which constitutes the governing body of the National Legion of Decency, views with grave alarm the exhibits, past and present, of so-called sex hygiene films in entertainment motion picture theatres," said the official statement.

"Normal people burdened with the cares and troubles of life frequent the motion picture theatre primarily to relax and to be entertained. They are in search of legitimate pleasure and they anticipate wholesome enjoyment.

"The motion picture theatre is not a clinic; nor is it a doctor's consultation room or a classroom. It is not the sanctum of the minister of religion; nor is it the sanctuary of the home," continued the statement, adding:

"Sex instruction does not come within the function of the motion picture theatre. On the contrary, to assume this grave responsibility would be a perversion of the principal function of the theatre. Instead of rendering any real service to the public welfare, the influence thus exercised must be progressively degenerating in the moral order.

Responsibility of Parents

"Necessary sex information and instruction are primarily the responsibility of the parents, who should consult physicians of the soul and body about the prudent and timely instruction of their children in matters pertaining to the mysterious facts of life. . . . Sex information and instruction should be given to the individual and never to groups, especially not to mixed groups of young people.

"The private instruction by parents or by those delegated by parents, if it be sound, should inculcate a proper appreciation of values, namely, that reverential appreciation of sexual actions which regards them as subject to the laws of God. All actions are subject to God's laws. Sex actions do not concern merely the individuals of the domestic society of the home. They primarily regard the entire social body. The general failure to accept and to be guided by this law of nature and of God is accountable, in large measure, for the loose sex morals of the home and for the sex mania of society today.

"A technical or clinico-story treatment of the fundamental and germane considerations of sex life entrusted to us as a sacred heritage by the Almighty Creator is out of place in the theatre, where there is an atmosphere rather of entertainment than of reverence.

"It is earnestly hoped that the motion picture industry which, aware of its great social responsibility, has in the past exercised a prudent vigilance in fostering programs proper for the entertainment motion picture theatre, will not only refrain from permitting the function of the theatre to be perverted by the intrusion of improper screen material but will strive, even more assiduously than in the recent past, to avoid any and all recessions from the right standards of morality and public decency in motion picture entertainment."

"No Greater Sin" in Class C

The National Legion of Decency has classified "No Greater Sin," a University Film production, as a Class C, condemned, release. The picture was produced by Jeffrey Bernerd for Edward A. Golden.

The reason given by the Legion for its classification of the picture is that it "deems this film, which deals with social disease, screen material unsuitable for exhibition in motion picture theatres. . . The film, moreover, evidences no concern with the moral aspects of the problem," the Legion's statement says.

The National Legion of Decency for this week has approved seven of eight new pictures, four for general patronage and three for adults, while one has been condemned. The new films and their classification follow.

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage—"Badlands of Dakota," "Dude Cowboy," "Last of the Duanes," "Under Fiesta Stars." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults—"Lady Be Good," "Man at Large," "Unfinished Business." Class C, Condemned—"No Greater Sin."

NEW GUILD MOVES IN N.Y. SEEN STEP TOWARD CIO vs. AFL BATTLE

Council of Guilds Proposes Change of Affiliation and Attacks Leaders of A. F. of L.; I.A.T.S.E. To Re-enter Pact

A CIO-AFL struggle for control of the film industry's workers was foreshadowed this week when the Congress of Industrial Organizations, defeated two years ago in an attempt to organize studio workers, bobbed again into the industry's union news in New York, where the Screen Guild Council, representing several film guilds, proposed CIO affiliation. Members of the Screen Publicists Guild were to meet Thursday evening to discuss the proposal.

The last big-scale attempt ot the CIO at invasion of an industry long regarded exclusive territory of the American Federation of Labor, was the formation on the coast of the United Studio Technicians. That organization, backed by dissidents from the allegedly high-handed rule of the AFL's International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, lost a National Labor Relations Board studio election and evaporated, although strong financial support had been given by coast CIO unions in other industries.

Publicists, Readers, Employees

The New York Screen Guild Council, favoring CIO affiliation, comprises the Screen Publicists, and Screen Readers guilds and office employees guilds, at Warners, MGM, Paramount, Columbia, and Twentieth Century-Fox. It is headed by Joseph Gould, of United Artists. Mr. Gould is also president of the Screen Publicists Guild.

Its specific recommendations were:

"1. It is necessary, to both the continued organization and successful collective bargaining of the member unions of the Screen Guild Council, that they effect an affiliation with a national labor organization."

"2. It is proposed that the affiliation be made with the Congress of Industrial Organizations, which body this report finds of greater advantage to our objectives than it finds the American Federation of Office Employees (AFL) on three counts: (a) trade union strength, (b) trade union democracy, and (c) honest and progressive union principles."

A membership meeting of the Screen Publicists Guild, September 4th, was inconclusive, the affiliation proposal being referred to the meeting of this week. In the meanwhile, however, the executive council of the Guild indorsed the CIO affiliation and, in a message to the membership, printed in the September issue of the SPG News, Mr. Gould said:

"The membership of the Screen Publicists Guild now has before it one of the most serious questions in its history. A decision to affiliate with the Congress of Industrial Organizations will be of profound importance to every aspect of our life as a trade union.

"That decision has bearing, with great weight, upon our pre-determined objectives—in essence, upon the contract which we have presented to the producers. That decision will greatly influence our whole future. That decision will be of major concern to our closest allies—the organized home office workers.

"Your Executive Council, in its unanimous proposal of affiliation, is fully aware of all this. It will therefore insist that the decision be made by the greatest number of members possible, and by a vote which shall be completely informed.

"In so insisting, the Executive Council demands the active cooperation of every member. This will mean that every member should and must discuss the matter fully and frankly within the Guild."

The New York Screen Guild Council attacked the AFL-IATSE film industry unions for having an "extremely bureaucratic leadership" and for allowing contracts to deteriorate. The attack was made in the report recommending CIO affiliation.

Willie Bioff was mentioned, briefly. Bioff, with George E. Browne, is under Federal indictment for extortion of money from film companies, and is under another indicement for evasion of Federal income taxes. He was the Screen Cartoonists Guild's opponent in that union's dispute with the Walt Disney studio.

The possible switch of various film industry guilds, both in New York and on the Coast, from long maintained independence to CIO sponsorship, has been bruited for some time; but no action had been taken because of the AFL strength, which apparently was not shaken even by the dissidence of some coast studio unions, and subsequent court suits.

The CIO is understood to have pledged the Screen Guild Council that the CIO's film unions would enjoy autonomy.

The negotiating committee of the SPG met this week again with the majors, over a closed shop contract, due the Guild now that it has won a National Labor Relations Board election at the majors' home offices.

IATSE in Basic Pact

The IATSE will reenter the studio labor basic pact, it was said in Hollywood last week. Negotiations on renewal of the pact will start in New York September 20th with Pat Casey, producers' labor representative meeting those from the six international unions of the AFL. Expected also at the conferences are executives of the majors.

IATSE locals, which had gained some autonomy from their leadership, were notified last week to have their agents in New York prior to the negotiations, for discussions with the IATSE international officers.

There remain several questions hanging over from the 1939 meeting, the principal one being whether the ten per cent raise granted unions then should apply to workers getting over minimum prescribed in scales. This matter was left to discussions on West Coast but no formula ever developed.

On Monday, the local 683, mentioned, opposed IATSE reentry into the basic pact. Its resolution pointed out the Alliance constitution does not give international officers power to make controversial adjustments without approval of locals affected.

Meanwhile, with the Disney studio still closed, to members and non-members of the Screen Cartoonists Guild, in an impasse over the number of workers to be laid off, two executives of the plant, William Garrity and David Hand, conferred this week, in Washington, with James Dewey, Labor Department conciliator.

Studio reopening is scheduled next Monday.

On Tuesday, from Washington, came news the dispute was settled, with a formula accepted, for reemployment of about 500, and consideration given seniority.

John R. Steelman, conciliation commissioner for the Department, had asked both the studio and the Guild to send representatives to a mediation conference.

Also in Hollywood, the Screen Actors Guild has established a Guild Authority, to pass upon requests for free radio performances. On the Authority are directors of the Guild. A ruling on free shows, recently made because of the Louella Parsons' guest star radio program, was amended to read:

"It is a violation of rules for screen actors to give performances for regularly established, commercially sponsored programs which nominally pay actors, but actually turn money over to charity."

New New York Union

The Exhibition, Exposition, Entertainment Employees National Union, which two weeks ago asked the RKO circuit in New York for recognition and a contract for its manager, assistant manager, and treasurer members, has also applied for certification, to the New York State Labor Relations Board, which will call an informal hearing shortly. The union is new, and according to survey of theatre companies, unknown; but it states it represents a majority of RKO employees in the categories mentioned, and that it is unaffiliated.

Gustave Gerber, union attorney, refused last week to disclose union headquarters or names of its officers, asserting members might be "intimidated."

A new music contract with the Philadelphia musicians' union, signed last week by the Warner theatre circuit in that city, calls for the continuance of existing conditions, providing for a 32-piece pit orchestra at the Earle theatre, Philadelphia, and 12 men at the Stanley theatre, Camden, N. J., for Sundays. The new contract, forestalling possibilities of a strike, starts September 29th and is effective for one year.

As a result of the settlement of the music question, it is expected that there will be an early booking of "Sergeant York" and "Citizen Kane" at the Warner house. It is understood that the bookings were held up in the expectations of a music strike so that if vaudeville were lost to the Earle, the pictures could be booked into that house.

First fall meeting of the Philadelphia Film Exchange Employees Union, Local B-7, has been called for Sept. 12th. Elections of a president will be held to fill the vacancy of William Z. Porter, who left the city early in the summer to become a traveling auditor for Monogram.

In Pittsburgh, wages of musicians and vaudeville performers have increased 20 to 50 per cent. Negotiations are under way between theatres and the AFM local.

In San Francisco, dissidents in the local of the American Guild of Variety Artists, have asked the AFL for an International AGVA charter, asserting its affiliation with the Associated Actors and Artistes of America International, and its alleged domination by the Screen Actors Guild is harmful.

HIGHWAY ROBBERS?

Two motorists received suspended sentences Friday in Amherst, Mass., court as police opened a drive against parkers on the Chestnut Ridge Road behind the Niagara Drive-in Theatre. The management had complained that scores of people parked in cars were getting a free view of the films from the nearby road. The two culprits were brought before Peace Justice Theodore E. Smith, Jr., and were charged with parking on a highway without lights.

QUEBEC OWNERS FAIL TO GET RELIEF FROM WAR ADMISSION TAXES OF 35%

Provincial Authorities Cite Continued Heavy Attendance, Despite Levies; New Circuit Fight Carried to Advertising

by PAT DONOVAN
in Montreal

Motion picture exhibitors in the Province of Quebec stand little chance, if any, of securing relief from the exceptional war admission taxes, which, with Dominion and Provincial levies, are now running at 35 per cent.

When the Dominion Government imposed its 20 per cent tax on theatre admissions in Canada last June 1st, hardest hit of all Canadian provinces was Quebec, whose theatres were already struggling under a 15 per cent domestic tax. The Provincial Government's 15 per cent levy plus the new war tax forced the Quebec exhibitor to lay aside 35 per cent of admission gross in taxes. Delegations were sent to confer with Hon. J. A. Mathewson, Provincial Treasurer, to engineer the abolition, temporarily at least, of the provincial tax. No official announcements were made about results of the conferences and many appeals.

No Slump

Unofficially it has been made known now that the Provincial authorities expressed concern over the plight of their motion picture exhibitors and volunteered to lift the provincial tax after having examined evidence of the Quebec motion picture scene. Having examined evidence submitted by representatives of the Quebec Allied Theatre Industries, the Government could find no proof or sign that receipts were off more than normally and could see no reason for modifying its tax demands.

It has since been pointed out that at the time of the appeal, exhibitors' "felt" that the abnormal tax situation in Quebec would discourage patronage, and this, coupled with the regular slump, would cause box-office figures to nosedive with fatal results.

It is apparent that no account was taken of the patience, long-suffering, and tax-absorbing abilities of Quebec's population, for in spite of exhibitors' fears, the summer season was a normal one. Theatre men could not demonstrate where their receipts had declined because of the tax.

Officially, it is thought that increased activity in war industries and general business, resulting in greater earnings, and magnified spending power has offset the tax throughout Canada.

Montreal exhibitors expect that with the arrival of attractive fall products the box-office will progressively show improvement from now until next summer.

The latest release of the Canada Carries On series entitled "Soldiers All" now showing in theatre houses across Canada maintains the new high standards set by the enterprising National Film Board. Three camera crews worked on the picture, two in Canada and one in England, and the cutting room was obviously relentless in seeking brisk, bright shots fitting in with the rapid-fire survey of Canadians in training on the war and home fronts. The commentary in this latest release rates with that heard in the March of Time series, after which the Canadian series is modelled.

FPC GROUP HAS INSURANCE PLAN

J. J. Fitzgibbons, president of Famous Players Canadian Corp., at the annual dinner of the home office staff in Toronto last week, announced that the directors had adopted a group insurance plan for all home office employes in the company's service for more than five years. The dinner was given at the Rouge Hills Golf Club, and in the golf tournament held earlier in the day, R. G. Darby won the Dentelbeck annual trophy for low net, with Robert Eves capturing the prize for the low gross with a score of 77.

In "Soldiers All," the camera sweeps widely across Britain and Canada. From field maneuvers in England it reverts to the advanced training of officers at R.M.C., and ends with a picture of Australian and New Zealand airmen training in Canada under the Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

Interesting and spectacular is the treatment given the war-time transformation of R.M.C. (Royal Military College) from a proud school and engineering college for jaunty cadets to an advanced training base for staff and intelligence officers as well as company commanders.

School Films Set In Saskatchewan

by ED. M. BAKER in Winnipeg

A plan under which films and projectors will be provided for schools and communities throughout Saskatchewan, with the assistance of the Federal Government, has been announced in Saskatoon by the Hon. J. W. Estey, K.C., minister of education. Mr. Estey said he had completed arrangements for the plan during his last visit to Ottawa, when he conferred with the National Film Board.

A film library will be established and pictures of Canadian life and activity will be made available all over the province. Morley P. Toombs, minister of education for the province, will be in charge of the library. Similar arrangements have been made by the other prairies provinces. The plan, to start soon, is to be operative for six months.

Expense of the scheme is being shared by the Federal and provincial authorities. The Federal Government will provide a number of projectors to handle 16 mm. film. The pictures will be sent to schools and the school superintendents will be primarily responsible for both films and projectors. However, two technicians will be made available by the Governments.

The Maritime Co-Operative Theatre Owners' Association, recently established, is opening headquarters in St. John, N. B. Chosen because of it being the picture distribution centre for the eastern provinces. A. J. Mason, of Springhill, N. S., veteran proprietor-manager of the Capitol there, founder and first president of the new association, has been keynoting a number of conferences with group members and potential members, at St. John. Just who will direct the new picture and accessory renting and distributing, and general theatre supply service, has not been disclosed, but the name of A. A. Fielding, of St. John, has been connected. He is now concentrating on his Capitols at Digby and Bridgewater, N. S., and with other houses to be added. For 16 years up to several months ago, he was general manager for F. G. Spencer Company, St. John, and handled the picture buying for that theatre chain.

Westerns Top All Others At Canadian Army Camps

by VICTOR SERVICE
in St. Johns, N. B.

A survey of entertainment conditions in the Canadian army training camps, and at the service hostels and canteens shows that western pictures top the popularity list, with practically all of the Class A pictures at the bottom of the poll. In second place are the comedies of the belly laugh type.

At one of the biggest camps, 3,500 soldiers jammed into a camp theatre in two nights to see "Santa Fe Marshal," produced by Harry Sherman and starring William Boyd. Just previously, "Love Affair," starring Charles Boyer and Irene Dunne, drew only 300, in two nights, and "Stradivarius," a French production, attracted 700 in one night. Seating was at a premium for "Santa Fe Marshal," and every seat was occupied a half hour before the show started.

At all the camps, the basic demand has been for the action westerns, and with the Class B products even more welcome than the elaborate epics typifying western history. As for the much publicized stories of sophistication, they are usually screened to empty seats. William Boyd, The Three Mesquiteers, The Range Busters, Buck Jones, Bob Baker, Tex Ritter, Charles Starrett, Johnny Mack Brown, Bob Steele, Fuzzy Knight, Andy Clyde, Smiley Burnette, seem to be favored by the men at the Canadian army camps, hostels and canteens. Tops in comics are, The Three Stooges, Laurel and Hardy, George Formby, Pop Eye, Donald Duck. There is little doubt that Abbott and Costello will click heavily with the soldiers when their pictures are released for army camp consumption.

The biggest week's business in the history of the Family, Halifax, N. S., in operation about 30 years, came recently, and despite the 20 per cent war tax, which has been detrimental to theater patronage.

The record breaking week is attributed to the playful antics of naval and mercantile sailors in bringing their pet white mice ashore, and freeing them in the eastern Canadian theaters. Publication of the dilemma in which Manager at Dwyer, of the Family, found himself in trying to locate three of the pets, at large in the Family, developed the abnormal business. Created, without a cent extra being spent for exploitation or advertising. Local newspapers played up the Dwyer quandary. The exhibitor has been deluged with personally delivered, mailed and telephoned instructions on how to catch the trio of mice, which refused to heed the calls and whistles of their nautical masters, and return to the pockets. The instructions are all humorous. Standing room only, prevailed all through the week, day and night. Dwyer says one fly in the ointment is that some persons insist on making noises like mice and cats when he is around them. The Family is in the heart of Halifax, and in the Franklin & Herschorn circuit.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS FACE CRISIS ON LABOR SHORTAGE UNDER DRAFT

Industry Demands Showdown on Government Policy Toward Reservation of Projectionists; Women To Be Called

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

With the war approaching its most critical phase and turning, to some extent, on the question of man power, it is inevitable that the motion picture industry here should have cause for immediate concern in that regard. Trade interest and activity during the past week has centered almost exclusively upon the question of labor, particularly its retention.

For the exhibitors it has been notable for two developments: each of them is concerned with preserving the army of workers upon which the future operation of the picture house hinges. On the one hand a national agreement with the N. A. T. K. E. has provided for a war bonus to their employees, 15 per cent for those earning under £3., 12½ per cent for those earning over £3. This week, too, the Ministry of Labor have stated categorically that they are prepared no longer to reserve second projectionists. Nearly 800 men will thus be called from the picture houses to the colors. Nor are usherettes and female staffs to be reserved, although a minor concession may result in reservations in certain individual cases.

First Projectionists Reserved

Principal concern, naturally, lies with the subject of reservation. Until the present, male projectionists, by the Government's Reserved Occupations Schedule, and by the goodwill of the Ministry of Labour, have been reserved between the ages of 25 and 35. Projectionists between these two ages have not been called to the colours although they may have been in the registered age groups. Now, with the Government Department bent upon further drainage of the country's available manpower, they have decided that, although first projectionists will continue to be reserved and may work content in the knowledge that they will not be called to the colours, the "blanket" on second projectionists will be raised and the men will have to go. Exceptions have been made in the cases of 213 cinemas which have succeeded in claiming difficulty of operation until alternative men have been trained and made efficient. When eventually these 213 cinemas provide their quota, as they will have to do ultimately, the total of projectionists affected by the present deregistration will reach the figure of approximately 800.

Women Must Register

It had been hoped, too, that the Ministry of Labour would be conciliatory in regard to women employees. Picture houses are already working on a rock bottom minimum of usherettes, numerical depression of which would present great problems to the exhibitor. The Ministry, however, has, with a long term view of the labour situation and the need for women in war work, decided that women employed in cinemas must, with certain exceptions, register for war work and, when called upon, go into the factories, farms, or the Services. The concession made is that, when women have registered and are to be called for the Labour Exchange interview to decide their suitability for certain employment, the exhibitor employing them will be advised before hand and his case for the retention of his women employees, on grounds either of the national importance of the work or the indispensability of the employee, will be heard with detachment and, maybe, with sympathy.

Women who are already operating or being trained to operate, as first or second projectionists will not be called up.

Necessity Questioned

The position of the Government, the urgency of the problem of securing manpower and womanpower for the war industries, the Services and other activities directly involved with the national effort has been completely understood by the motion picture industry. It is even realized that on the grounds of indispensability the factory, farm and aircraft works may have a prior right over the picture theatre. Nevertheless there is intense dissatisfaction with the manner in which the Government is handling the industry and its role.

It has been stated publicly and semi-publicly by the Government that the industry has a definite role to play in the national war machine. Government Departments, such as the Board of Trade and the Ministry of Information, have special sections devoted to it. Government speakers, in Parliament and out pay tribute to it, stress the value of its work in propagating the national viewpoint, in recreating and entertaining members of the Forces and the civilian populace. These continued encroachments upon the personnel of the industry, not alone the exhibiting section, but likewise the producing section, are thought to be in direct opposition to and contradiction of the publicly expressed Government attitude.

This was in the mind of C.E.A. President Sydney K. Lewis who, following the discussions of manpower with the Ministry of Labour, said that whilst he was satisfied that the industry had had all possible consideration from the Ministry, any further encroachment on their personnel territory would precipitate a crisis and the C.E.A. might demand a direct and equivocal statement of the Government's attitude to the industry and of the value of its role in assisting the war effort.

It has already been recorded here that whilst the Production Manpower Panel has been sitting in conjunction with the Ministry of Labour in an effort to achieve a formula which will preserve its technical integrity, the Ministry itself has thrown the cat among the pigeons by demanding at least another 100 men from the studios for the Forces. It would seem not unlikely that these men would be drafted into such technical groups as the Army Film Council's mobile film unit, or to similar units in the Admiralty or Airforce. There is much opposition to this move, but producers and labour, knowing that whatever they decide, whatever they protest, whatever they demand, the Government will always have the last word, are, it is stated, seeking a formula which will offer a solution of the problem, allow the Ministry of Labour its pound of flesh and obtain labour guarantees for the production of a stated programme or a minimum of films during the forthcoming year.

Unlike other sections dealing with the industry, the Manpower Committee and the Producers Sub-Committees working with it, operate in conditions of the most clandestine secrecy, hiding all their activities, decisions and purposes from the light of day. It is clear, however, that the situation in regard to production is also on the verge of crisis and unless some rigid protective armoury is achieved the future of British production, with which is included the future of American production in this country, will be something bleaker than bleak.

Quota Changes Seen

Already, it is stated, Government circles have been considering complete amendment or suspension of the existing quota legislation. Rumour has even talked of a disbandment of the Films Council.

Meanwhile, with the obvious objective of retaining its personnel, the exhibitors section of the industry has this week agreed to hand out to theatre employees throughout the country a war bonus varying between 12½% and 15%.

This situation was directly precipitated by the action of individualist Oscar Deutsch in giving his employees a war bonus, without statutory consultations with his Association. Oscar Deutsch claimed that his action was necessary in order to preserve his employees, who were already drifting off to war industries.

It would not be unfair to conclude that not dissimilar ideas have been behind the minds of exhibitors whose sudden burst of generosity will certainly have the effect of restraining some of their staffs from seeking the higher wages which are said to be found in war factories. The bonus will also have the effect of restraining employees of other circuits and of independent theatres in going over to the Odeon Circuit.

The Agreement is to be a national one and will provide for these percentage increases on the basic wage rates already established by agreement between local C.E.A. Branches and the N.A.T.K.E.

Only one exhibitor group, that of Leeds, Yorkshire, was against the national agreement. There are still one or two others which have no basic agreement, but which the national bonus will probably settle.

The Union had asked 17½% and, despite their criticisms, are probably well content with an easy achievement.

LIBRARY RENTS FILM EXTRACTS

A new enterprise has been launched by the British Film Institute's National Film Library in the issuing of extracts from feature films of a classic nature. The extracts, which are one reel each, have been prepared for students of the cinema to enable illustration and analysis of cases where it would be inconvenient to hire or show a complete film.

In each case the extract has been chosen so that it shall not only be complete in itself, but also, that it shall give a fair representation of the technical qualities of the film and, if possible, of its theme.

Among the films from which extracts are already available are "Dr. Caligari", "The Last Laugh", "Metropolis", "Potemkin", "Mother" and several other Soviet films.

MEXICAN UNION MOVES TO EXTEND FILM STRIKE

Confederation Threatens to Call Out Theatre Workers Unless Majors Meet Demands

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

A short strike, a shutdown of a few hours, against all of the 65 theatres in Mexico City is planned for September 15 by the National Cinematographic Workers Union in an endeavor to force a settlement of their dispute with the eight major American distributors. A strike was called September 2nd against the Columbia and MGM offices. Theatres always stage special shows on September 15th, eve of Mexico's Independence Day.

The Union also is planning an appeal for a general sympathy strike of all workers in Mexico unless its dispute with the Americans is settled promptly and entirely in its favor. The Federal and local Municipal Governments are trying to head off both these strikes.

Arthur Pratchett, Paramount's manager for Mexico and Central America, said in New York Tuesday, on his arrival from Mexico City, that the American majors had warned Mexican exhibitors film deliveries would end October 5th, unless a peace was reached.

Theatre Closings Seen

The Confederation of Chambers of Commerce has publicly expressed itself as being pessimistic about a favorable settlement of the conflict, favorable, that is, to the employers. The business organization believes that Mexico would be a heavy loser if these Americans withdraw, for it sees a general closure of all of the Republic's 958 theatres within six weeks after October 2, the date the majors' home offices have ordered cancellation of contracts with exhibitors in this country. Stoppage of films from Hollywood, the Confederation holds, would soon close the theatres because of a dearth of good films.

The closure, the Confederation warned, would hit Mexican economy hard for it would deprive some 12,000 theatre attaches of employment, which would mean less money for business, and cost the Federal, State and Municipal Governments thousands of pesos in tax money. The local Civic Government alone obtains more than $2,000 a day from the theatres. Local theatres during the five years ended last December 31 averaged a sale of 18,000,000 tickets a year with an average annual gross of about $5,000,000—very important money for Mexico. Pictures are by far Mexico's most popular amusement.

Some quarters say that the Americans are bluffing. This opinion is based upon the fact that these majors are spending a lot of money on advertisements, some of them full-page, in local newspapers, to tell the public their side of the case. This costly publicity campaign, these optimists contend, would hardly be waged by interests that intend to withdraw from Mexico.

A united front in the dispute was pledged by all the majors at a banquet here of their managers—Jacob Epstein, Universal; Arthur L. Pratchett and Robert Graham, Paramount; Max Gomez, RKO; Oscar J. Brooks, Warners; Gustav Moheme and Stanley J. Day, Fox; Carlos Niebla, Metro; Rafael Sevilla, Columbia, and J. Urbina, United Artists. This ceremony was also attended by Lic. Enrique Zienert, attorney for the Film Board of Trade, and Lic. Genaro Garcia, attorney for the eight companies.

Intervention of the Senate to settle the conflict promptly and in favor of labor is asked in a petition submitted by Salvador Carillo, secretary general of the picture workers union. Sr. Carillo accused the eight Americans of exercising a monopoly and reminded the Senate of its campaign against all trusts.

The laborites' petition charged that the Americans' newspaper advertising campaign was a "campaign of falsehoods" and that the Union had acted justly and legally throughout the conflict and intended to continue doing so. The Americans, the petition declared, have misrepresented clauses of the new contract their workers are demanding to make it appear that the workers are "without conscience or reason."

In presenting the petition, Sr. Carrillo said there was no sign of any settlement of the dispute.

Germans Woo Mexico

An editorial in the Berlin newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, in lauding Mexican pictures, high spots of which were cabled to Mexico and widely distributed in this country by Transocean, the Nazi news service, has prompted surprise and much comment in film circles. The editorial said, in part:

"Mexican films are serving to counteract those of Hollywood. Mexican films are veritable cinematographic beacons of the real Spanish spirit in America because they expound true cultural values and present the 'charro' (dude cowboy and national Mexican figure) as the prototype of Spanish America."

In announcing that several unnamed Mexican pictures are soon to be exhibited in Germany, the Reich capital paper remarked, "There is a general anticipation about the exhibition of these films for they are expected to be glowing examples of the Latin cinematographic art."

This editorial is the more surprising in view of the banning of all German and Italian films in Mexico, mostly by action of the powerful Confederation of Mexican Workers, the anti-totalitarian sentiment that is spreading in this country, and the demand upon the Mexican Government by the recently organized National Victory Society, officials of which include prominent senators and congressmen, that Transocean be suppressed because, the accusers say, it is a strong vehicle for Nazi propaganda.

Protest on Ban Tabled

The second prohibition by the Confederation of Mexican Workers of exhibitions of "He Stayed for Breakfast" at the Cine Teatro Alameda, Mexico City first-run theatre, has apparently been tabled by the Federal Government. President Manuel Avila Camacho merely answered with a form letter announcing that a telegram of complaint against the banning sent him by the Association of Mexican Cinematographic Journalists had been turned over to the proper authorities for consideration.

The Politeama, an old stage theatre here which for several years was a cinema, is being remodelled as a revue house by Espectaculos de Mexico, S. A., a recently organized theatrical booking and promotion agency, president of which is Santiago Reachi, prominent advertising man who heads Posa Films, S. A.

Posa has done exceptionally well with the two pictures its has made with "Cantinflas," who in private life is Mario Moreno. The comedian is a partner of Mr. Reachi in the stage proposition. "Cantinflas" is to head the Mexican company that will present the best vernacular comedies of this country, slanted for American tourists, at the Politeama which is expected to reopen late in October.

A new producing company, America Films, S. A., has been organized here by Alonso Sanchez Tello, veteran producer, and Mauricio de la Serna, manager of the Cine Teatro Alameda, leading first-run theatre. The company is now making its first film, "La Liga de las Canciones" ("Songs League") which is to be released in November.

America has signed exclusively for two years Mapy Cortes, a Puerto Rican stage and radio comedienne, who has starred in several Mexican pictures. She is playing the feminine lead in "Liga."

Gabriel Soria, Mexican producer who has won five gold medals awarded in this country for the best pictures of the year, has lost control of his latest high award winner, "Mala Yerba" ("Marcela"), named the best Mexican film of 1940, he told the Federal Attorney General in making a charge of fraud against the Compañia Financiera Mexicana, S. A., a local financing firm, and its operators, Jaime and Juan Sourasky.

Sr. Soria alleges that the company charged him $62,000 in excessive interest on loans to finish and market the picture, and that the Souraskys forged documents that gave them control of the film. The Souraskys entered a general denial of the charges.

A film scenarist is running for the governorship of a state for the first time in Mexico. He is Antonio Mediz Bolio, poet and author, who wrote the scenario for "La Noche de las Mayas" ("The Night of the Mayas"), tragedy of the Maya Indians of Yucatan State, a film that was a hit in Mexico and abroad. Sr. Bolio seeks to be governor of Yucatan.

A series of short subjects is being produced in Mexico City by Juan Jose Segura, painter, and Cosme Hinojosa, Jr., son of an ex-Mayor of Mexico City. The pictures are to be released in November.

"Meet John Doe" (Warners) set an exhibition record in Mexico this Summer by remaining for five weeks at the Cine Rex, a local first-run theatre that seats only 1,000. The picture was titled "The Supreme Command" here. Its prices varied from 43 cents during the first three weeks to 32 cents for the rest of the engagement.

Editing English Film

Alfred Hitchcock is supervising the cutting and editing of "Target for Tonight," the Royal Air Force documentary picturing an actual air raid on Germany. The cutting was undertaken in Hollywood at the request of Sidney Berstein, former British circuit operator who is now an official of the British Ministry of Information. Mr. Berstein brought the print from England with him. It is reported that The March of Time is considering taking the picture for distribution by RKO.

Chicago Theatre Changes

Several switches and promotions have been made in the Warner Chicago theatres. Waldon Ryan goes from assistant manager of the Rhodes Theater to assistant manager of the Venetian, Racine, Wisc. George Finley switches as assistant manager of the Hamilton to assistant manager of the Rhodes; Richard Fahey, from chief of service at the Avalon to assistant manager of the Hamilton; Jack Fleming, from assistant manager of the Cosmo to assistant manager of the Avalon, and John Falco, from chief of service at the Capitol to assistant manager of the Cosmo.

COLUMBIA PICTURES

Set 'Yank' 'Dawn,' 'Major Barbara,' 'Saddle Mountain'

With an international radio hookup, Twentieth Century Fox's "A Yank in the R.A.F." will open for the first time to the general public Friday, September 26th, at the Roxy Theatre, New York City, and at Loew's State, Four Star, and Grauman's Chinese theatres in Los Angeles. The film, which stars Tyrone Power, includes the evacuation of Dunkirk, and actual flying battle scenes filmed in the air over Britain.

There are, and were, other world premieres of consequence, also. Paramount's "Hold Back the Dawn," lead-off picture on the 1941-42 program, began a special prerelease engagement Thursday at Mullin and Pinanski's Metropolitan Theatre, Boston. To an estimated 50,000 visitors in Marshalltown, Iowa, Monogram's "Saddle Mountain Roundup" opened Saturday, September 6th, at the Odeon and Casino theatres, and after a three day Saddle Mountain Roundup, from which the film took its name. Gabriel Pascal's United Artists release, "Major Barbara," opened at the Elgin, Ottawa, Canada, Thursday evening, under the sponsorship of Princess Alice, and with proceeds to the Allied Merchant Seamen's Committee of Canada, and the Navy League of Canada. It was the picture's premiere in the Dominion. Republic's "Ice-Capades" and "The Pittsburgh Kid" are to open at the Loew's Criterion, New York, next Wednesday, and at the Rialto, same city, September 22nd, respectively.

Budget Increased

The advertising and exploitation budget on Warners' "One Foot in Heaven" will be one of the largest in the company's history, it announced this week. Twentieth Century-Fox and the RCA Victor company have joined to boost records and the personality of Glenn Miller and his band, in conjunction with the premieres of the film company's "Sun Valley Serenade."

Twentieth Century-Fox's "A Yank in the R.A.F.," to open Friday, September 26th at the Roxy in New York and the Graumann's Chinese, Loew's State, and Four Star, in Los Angeles, was made by Darryl F. Zanuck, the company's vice-president in charge of production, and a producer. Many of the realistic battle scenes were filmed on the company's spacious Hollywood grounds; others were filmed in actual combat with the Germans—and two cameraman were killed, on that assignment.

The international radio broadcast mentioned, will come from the two cities mentioned, and also from Washington and London. A feature will be greetings from the RAF, the American Eagle Squadron, and from other Americans serving the British.

The Paramount "Hold Back the Dawn" prerelease premiere in Mullin and Pinanski's Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, was marked by intensive publicity by the distributing company and the circuit, and by the personal appearance of Walter Abel, who plays a feature role.

The Monogram "Saddle Mountain Roundup" premiere at the Casino and Odeon theatres, Marshalltown, Iowa, came after three days of the actual roundup from which the film received its name; and an estimated 50,000 persons crowded into the city of 17,000 for the festivities and the screenings. Among those present from Monogram were Max Terhune and Dusty King, two of the three Range Busters; J. D. Chafin, of the George Weeks studio; F. E. Judd, Monogram Iowa franchise holder.

The Canadian premiere of Gabriel Pascal's UA film, "Major Barbara" occurred with the presence of numerous notables of the Dominion, among them the Governor-General and Prime Minister MacKenzie King.

Universal tendered a luncheon to Philadelphia exhibitors, Thursday, at the Warwick Hotel there, honoring Olsen and Johnson, comedians, who attended, and who are the stars, not only of the stage comedy still playing in New York, but also of the Universal release made by Jules Levey's Mayfair Productions.

Twentieth Century-Fox and RCA Victor are cooperating in a campaign for the film company's "Sun Valley Serenade," in its various openings, and for the record company's Miller recordings.

Dealers Tied-In

Record dealers are being offered promotional posters, sheets, window banners, ads, and stickers, and a Glenn Miller Musical Mileposts Album, a five pocket product designed for storing the band leader's best records. The film company, in cooperation with RCA Victor, is running advertisements in the trade press, making pointed reference to the 7,500 Victor and Bluebird Record dealers aiding the film's promotion: the album, the displays, the 300,000 program cards available in the coin-machine field, and the Twentieth Century-Fox three color window banner free to all dealers.

In Chicago, meanwhile, the world preview of the Quiz Kids' first Paramount short was held at the Chicago Theatre at evening shows September 3 in conjunction with a coast-to-coast broadcast, by the same kids that appeared in the short, from the stage of the theatre. The Quiz Kids' performance was repeated at a second show without benefit of broadcasting. Short was a part of the regular Chicago show opening Friday, September 5.

Opening ceremonies were carried over 48 NBC Blue Network stations, with the youngsters broadcasting their regular weekly half-hour program directly from the stage of the theatre for this occasion. Mayor Kelly acted as guest observer.

Several production executives from the Paramount New York studio attended the premiere which was preceded by a press party at the Blackstone Hotel sponsored jointly by Louis G. Cowan, owner of the show, and Paramount. Among the contingent from the eastern studio was Oscar A. Morgan, Monroe Goodman, Richard F. Murray and Leslie H. Rousch, director of the short. Those appearing in the short are Van Dyke Tiers, 14; Richard Williams, 11; Gerard Darrow, 9; Cynthia Cline, 15; and Joan Bishop, 14.

Jenkins Joins Principal

Frank Jenkins, former manager of the Montlake and Uptown foreign film theatres in Seattle, Wash., has returned from a recent trip to California and has joined Al Goldstein's Principal Pictures exchange as an exploitation and advertising representative.

RODGERS A LOEW VICE-PRESIDENT

William F. Rodgers, MGM's general sales manager was elected a vice-president of Loew's the parent company, at a meeting of the board of directors held last week at the home office. Mr. Rodgers' new title is vice-president in charge of sales. Other Loew's vice-presidents are David Bernstein, Arthur M. Loew, J. Robert Rubin, Edgar J. Mannix, Al Lichtman and Sam Katz.

Schine Anti-Trust Trial Date Sought

The Justice Department's second "field" anti-trust suit against a large circuit and the majors will begin trial in November, its representatives in New York said Wednesday. The case is that against the Schine circuit, its subsidiaries, Columbia, United Artists, and Universal, at Buffalo Federal Court. Closing arguments in the Nashville suit are expected in December; so that the Schine case may begin before its close. Approval of a November trial of the Schine suit must be obtained by the Department from Federal Judge John C. Knight, in Buffalo.

U. S. Attorney George L. Grobe filed a bill of particulars last week in the Buffalo District Court, in response to a defense motion in the Schine Circuit anti-trust suit. Signatories of the bill were Herbert H. Borkland, special assistant to the Attorney General and Attorney Seymour Simon. The bill contains statements of what the Government intends to claim during the Schine trial regarding "percentage of first-class pictures released by distributor and non-distributor defendants."

Motions of the plaintiffs in the $5,452,575 Pickwick-Greenwich anti-trust suit against the eight major film companies to dismiss the "separate defenses" of the defendants, will be heard September 16th, in New Haven's U. S. District Court. The "separate defense" incorporated in the answer of United Artists alleged that all three plaintiff corporations, owners and operators of the Pickwick lack the legal capacity to maintain the lawsuit. The other companies confine this allegation to one of the plaintiffs, the Fairfield Holding Company only.

Sisk Joins Blankenship

Andrew Sisk, head booker for Paramount in Oklahoma, has accepted a position as booker with the Blankenship office in Dallas, Texas, it has been announced by Wallace Blankenship, circuit head. Mr. Sisk has been booker for Paramount in Texas and Oklahoma for the past seven years.

Griffith Acquires Theatre

The Griffith Amusement Company of Oklahoma City has added another house to those they control in that city, bringing the total to seven. The theatre acquired is the Redskin, which was opened August 6th by Louis Barton.

Circuit Acquires Radio Station

Lucas and Jenkins, Georgia theatre circuit operators, have signed a contract with the State of Georgia to operate the state-owned Columbia outlet radio station, WGST, guaranteeing the state an income of $50,000 annually from the station.

School Films Promised

An extensive use of motion pictures and radios in classrooms and color films for geography students has been promised by Kenneth C. Ray, who was recently appointed State Director of Education in Ohio.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Crowds Know

It is a truism of Hollywood that a crowd knows more about what it wants in entertainment than any individual in it.

This truism is no secret, either, to exhibitors, whose perpetually fascinating experience it is to find themselves being congratulated on a picture they consider inferior and panned for booking a film they rate a knockout.

At this point in the carrying-out of the Consent Decree provisions for tradeshowing pictures to exhibitors only, it is in the experience of every showman who has sat through one or more blocks-of-five to have wondered why the comedians are so bad, the music so loud, the dances so mechanical, the pick-up in dialogue, following a musical routine or a gag, so belated. It's of course no secret to showmen, or anybody, that comedies and musicals are timed for audience response, a reasonably exact science worked out in many years of experiment but still depending upon actual test of product before unprepared audiences.

That the tradeshowing of musicals and comedies in small screening rooms to small gatherings of exhibitors, often in the morning and sometimes in bunches of two or more, penalizes the product is generally conceded.

What to do about it is not so self-evident.

Last week, by way of trial, one major Hollywood studio took to Glendale on Friday night, for unannounced presentation to a paying audience, one of the pictures scheduled for tradeshowing this week Monday. Only the trade press was invited to attend. Trade press reviewers saw the picture as audiences will see it, in the presence of a crowd. This company showed them another of its current block under the same conditions on Tuesday.

This week Monday another major Hollywood studio duplicated the experiment, dating a second trial for Tuesday and a third for later in the week.

Whether the device adopted in the studio community, where interest in the raction of the public to product may perhaps be somewhat keener than elsewhere, is susceptible of wider application remains to be seen.

Practicability promises to be the determinant.

Night tradeshowings, with exhibitors of an area foregathering within the theatre of one of them to witness a screening before an audience, loom as a possibility hedged around with certain objections.

Establishment of a preview theatre, to which the public could buy tickets on a sight-unseen basis, has been talked of for years as a Hollywood expedient, prior to and more so since inception of the tradeshow policy, but exhibitor opposition has put a stop to all movements in this direction up to now.

Tied for Lead

Warner Brothers, leading last week, had been caught up with by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at close of the period, each studio having eight productions in shooting stage when the week and Del Mar's season of thoroughbred racing ended. (Bing Crosby's followers will be glad to know, by the way, that his turf club did right handsomely this year as to gross, net and general results.)

Twentieth Century-Fox was in second place behind the tied leaders, with six pictures going, Universal and Paramount pairing with four each in third position.

Eleven pictures were finished during the week, ten were started, and thirty more were in preparation.

Open Season

Detailed on this page a fortnight back, and referred to again last week, was the procedure by which Columnist Hedda Hopper, barred by regulation from witnessing pictures in tradeshow and by agreement from reviewing them in person at time of their sneak-preview tryouts, had managed to achieve the same end by printing reports reputedly supplied her by a reader, one Bob Carl, who had happened to be present at a number of test screenings in his town.

Last week's reference to this evasion of the spirit if not the letter of the rules governing lay press reviewing of pictures was in connection with a reporting of the fact that Columnist Louella Parsons had duplicated Columnist Hopper's procedure, using the report of one Bill Simpson, championed by Miss Parsons as "the original previewer," on a Greta Garbo picture test—shown in his city.

This week's reference to the whole sequence of references is occasioned by Miss Parsons' raising of the ante, so to speak, in her column of September 6.

Miss Parsons quoted a Mrs. F. C. L. as writing to her, "Amateur critics should have as much right to disagree as professionals—and I don't see eye to eye with Bill Simpson about the preview of Garbo's 'The Twins.' Talk about the Hays office banning sweaters! The negligee Garbo gets away with makes the average sweater look like a mother hubbard."

It was the Misses Parsons and Hopper, separately and in that order, who, electing to represent the lay press in general, took the rostrum at the MPTOA-PCCITO convention in Los Angeles last June to express their views on things in general and the then aborning preview regulations specifically.

It was President Ed Kuykendall of the MPTOA who had expressed the exhibitors' wishes in respect to the withholding of critical appraisals of product until generel release of same for exhibition.

Gist of the Parsons-Hopper remarks, was "I love pictures."

President Y. Frank Freeman of the Association of Motion Picture Producers took President Kuykendall's recommendations under advisement and proceeded to implement exhibitor wishes in the matter by issuing a manifesto regarding the previewing of pictures for the lay press.

Provisions of this manifesto have been abided by generally.

The Misses Hopper and Parsons have not, personally, attended sneak-previews uninvited or written reviews of product before the appointed date.

Readers Carl, Simpson and, now, Mrs. F. C. L., presumably do not know the rules.

Columnists Parson and Hopper do.

AS A PLAY

AS A PLAY!

"The Little Foxes" proved one of the most phenomenal money shows in a decade. Opening in New York to sensational notices and terrific business, it maintained capacity pace for a solid year of 408 consecutive performances. Its road show tour was an even greater triumph. For 45 wonderful weeks it played 113 dates in big cities and small towns. In every section of the country — East, West, North, South — it rolled up attendance and money records that are still the amazement of local showmen.

AS A PICTURE!

"The Little Foxes" was hailed by trade and lay press critics as greater than the play. Now in its fourth week at Radio City Music Hall, it's pulling crowds that tax the capacity of the world's largest theatre, forcing the house to open its doors earlier, close later . . . with the tapes up from early morning to late evening. From every possible angle of box-office evidence, this outstanding motion picture is destined to sweep the country from metropolis to hamlet, just as did the play.

Stage Opens in Philadelphia

With Katherine Cornell re-opening the Forrest Theatre on September 8th with "The Doctor's Dilemma" for a week, the 1941-42 legitimate theatre season in Philadelphia got off to an early, and according to all portents, unusually active season. With more shows in prospect than the Forrest and Locust St. theatres at the present moment can accommodate, Lawrence Shubert Lawrence, managing director of the two Shubert houses here, indicated that it might be necessary to take over another house to provide for all the bookings. The Locust St. house opens its season September 15th with "Johnny Belinda" for a two-week bookings. With the Erlanger Theatre being prepared for the operation of first-run photoplays by William Goldman, the only other theatre in the center of the city available for legitimate stage shows is the Walnut St. Theatre, an independen house.

Musicals Abound

An indication of the good legitimate theatre weather ahead is found in the number of musicals booked into the Forrest. Following the Katherine Cornell production, there is a steady succession of musicals booked into the house for the next two months, starting September 15 with George Abbott's "Best Foot Forward" starring Hollywood's Rosemary Lane, for two weeks, "Louisiana Purchase," which originally opened at the Forrest two years ago, returns on September 29 for two more weeks.

The new "Ziegfeld Follies" is scheduled to arrive next, after which comes "Hellzapoppin," to be followed in November by "Panama Hattie" with Ethel Merman, the date uncertain until the run of the Olson-Johnson spectacle is fixed. Following the Ethel Merman show, the Forrest goes dramatic for two weeks with Fredric March in "Hope For a Harvest" and then follows with three more musicals, pre-Broadway showings of the new Vincent Freedley musical, "Let's Face It"; George Hale's "High Kickers" with George Jessel and Sophie Tucker; and "Nice Dreaming" with Jessie Mathews.

Tentatively set to follow are Cornelia Otis Skinner in "Theatre," "Women Aren't Angels" with Reginald Denny and Bobby Clark and the first of the Theatre Guild revivals in "Ah Wilderness."

The Locust St. house follows its opening attraction with "Separate Rooms" on September 29, which is expected to go beyond the usual two weeks and then has "The Corn Is Green." Others tentatively set for the house before the end of the year are the Maurice Evans-Judith Anderson production of "Macbeth," "Claudia," "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Tobacco Road" and "Watch on the Rhine." In addition, the Locust St. will have most of the six subscription shows of the American Theatre Society to be brought here by the Theatre Guild while the Forrest gets the Philadelphia Forum subscription series for three productions.

Two Lubitsch Films for Fox

Ernst Lubitsch will produce Clare Boothe Brokaw Luce's Broadway play, "Margin for Error" for Twentieth Century-Fox, it was announced this week. "Margin" will follow "Self-Made Cinderella" with Ginger Rogers, which is the first Lubitsch film for the Fox studio, with production scheduled to begin early in December. Arch Oboler, radio script writer, has been assigned to work on the script for the Clare Luce play.

LEE SAYS INDUSTRY HELPS PUBLIC MORALE

Speaking before the convention of Southeastern Theater Owners at Jacksonville, Fla., on Tuesday, Claude F. Lee, head of the Paramount's public relations department, cited the Senate's rejection of the proposed 15 per cent tax on theatre admissions as evidence of the Government's awareness that the motion picture industry contributes to the public morale and works in behalf of the national defense effort.

Mr. Lee declared: "This tax burden was not increased because members of Congress believed the proposal an excessive load on a harassed people seeking relief through much-needed entertainment. In my opinion the overwhelming majority of Senators, Congressmen and Government officials in Washington, look with favor and approval upon the patriotic cooperation which this industry is extending to authorized activities of national defense."

Circuit of Eight Started in Northwest

The United Theatres Corporation of eight houses in southwest Washington and western Oregon has been launched by Bill Forman, who for some years was with the Starling Theatres of Seattle.

Headquarters of the new chain will be located in Seattle. In the pool are the Visalia, Longview, Wash., an 800-seat house now being completed and scheduled for October opening; Bill Ripley's Liberty and Roxy in Longview and his new Kelso Theatre in Kelso, Wash.; the Liberty in Kelso, formerly operated by Basil Basher.

It is announced that both Mr. Ripley and Mr. Basher will be associated with the new company.

Forman's "Columbia" and Roxy in St. Helens, Ore., and the first-run Grand Theatre in Salem are also included in the new company.

Don Harrington has been named city manager for the two houses in St. Helens, Ore.

Open Da-Vue

The 900-seat Da-Vue, Dayton, Ohio, suburban theatre, recently completed by the Libson-White interests, Cincinnati, was formally opened last week and will operate evenings, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays at a 25-cent scale, with 10 cents for children. Ted Lehmeiere is managing the house.

Indiana Firm Incorporates

Roberts' Theatrical Enterprises have been incorporated at the Indiana secretary of state's office, for the operation of motion picture theatres. Incorporators are Willis W. Roberts, Lois Roberts and Wymond Ritter, Jr.

Shubert Theatre Leased

The York-Haven Enterprises, Inc., of which Morris A. Nunes is president, have taken over the Sam S. Shubert theatres in New Haven under the terms of a long term lease according to Berk & Krumgold, theatre realty specialists of New York.

Engles, NBC Chief Resigns

Anticipating the official pronunciamento from NBC headquarters of the artists' bureau purchase reportedly arranged between Merlin H. Aylesworth, former NBC president, and Daniel S. Tuthill, executive of the company's bureau, George Engles, vice-president and managing director of the concert division resigned last Friday. Following his resignation, Mr. Engles left immediately for an indefinite vacation in New England and it could not be learned whether or not he plans to return to the concert management field. Mr. Engles joined NBC in 1928 to head the artists' service.

At NBC offices last Monday, executives would not comment on the Engles resignation or the pending Tuthill-Aylesworth association. It was indicated, however, that some official word would be forthcoming by midweek. It is believed, in some quarters, that both Rubey Cowan, who handles talent, and Frank Jones, of the concert division, will continue their operations under the Tuthill-Aylesworth banner, but that Bertha Brainard, chief of program and talent sales division, will remain with NBC to handle the packaging end of the network's valuable programs, such as "Information Please," "Fibber McGee and Molly" and others.

Another NBC resignation announced over the week-end was that of William Kostka, director of publicity, who will leave NBC on September 26th for a post with the Institute of Public Relations, Inc.

Moffa Reopens Two Houses

Albert A. Moffa, operator of the Central Theatre, open-air theatre at Central Park in Allentown, Pa., has closed a deal with Daniel Shimer to operate the long-closed Astor and Ridge theatres in that city. The Astor is being remodeled for a mid-September opening as a first-run house. The Ridge, dark for 15 years, will also undergo repairs and improvements for an early opening for the showing of action pictures.

Griffith Schedule Set

Under a new agreement signed between Edward H. Griffin, producer-director, and the Paramount studio, he will continue as one of the studio's chief film makers. His next assignment will be the screen version of the Broadway play "Out of the Frying Pan."

William Quinn Promoted

William J. Quinn, manager of the Normandie theatre in New York City, since December, 1938, has been appointed supervisor of the Raybond Theatres Corp., New York circuit of which the Normandie is a unit. The appointment was made by David Weinstock, president of the circuit.

Fish Joins RKO

Bradley Fish, former San Francisco manager for Grand National, has joined sales staff of RKO's 'Frisco exchange, in charge of the San Joaquin Valley territory. Mr. Fish replaces Earl Stein, who goes into the branch office to succeed George Seach, away on a long leave of absence.

'KICK IN THE PANTS OFTEN HELPS', RICHEY OF MGM TELLS EXHIBITORS

Industry Can Turn Criticism to Good Advantage, SETOA Convention Hears; Greater Unity Seen as One Result

"A good kick in the pants turns out to the advantage of the kicked," frequently, H. M. Richey, exhibitor relations chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, on Tuesday told members of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association at their annual convention in the George Washington hotel at Jacksonville, Fla.

The film industry is beset by many kicks, currently, he observed, but he predicted that the adversity of the moment would bring increasing unity between all branches of the trade and solidify the common endeavours of both exhibition and production-distribution. "A new appreciation on the part of the public of our industry" is already apparent, he indicated.

Analyzing current conditions in the trade Mr. Richey listed the chief causes of "heartaches and sleepless nights" for theatre owners and distribution executives. These include, he said, the consent decree, five picture selling, which has not come up to expectations, increasing taxation, outside criticism, a million young customers withdrawn to army camps, lost foreign markets "and now a Congressional investigation of the industry because we are too damned patriotic."

Sees "Greatest Opportunity"

He warned against viewing the adverse forces with pessimism. "I see ahead for our business the greatest opportunity we ever had to cash in on every one of the stumbling blocks," Mr. Richey told the delegates.

"In the first place we all know that business is better and will continue to improve. Reports from all over the country tell the same story—that since July there has been a general upturn in business, and unless all signs fail it will continue to improve," the MGM spokesman told the Dixie theatre operators.

Excessive comment on the slow start of the upswing was a disadvantage to the industry insofar as it reached the general public, he observed. Among showmen, however, it has stimulated their interest and effort and has marked 1941 as "the year of the reawakening of showmanship." From his travels Mr. Richey reported that he found theatre plants in the best condition in years and theatre men more aware of the need of showmanship and planned selling than ever.

Particular tribute to the institutional advertising supplied by many newspapers during the summer was voiced by Mr. Richey. He characterized as invaluable the "Movie Vacation" plan inaugurated by the Philadelphia Bulletin and spread by Abe Montague of Columbia and others. "It was a tremendous impetus for the business," he said.

Discussing the consent decree, Mr. Richey admitted discontent over it in many quarters. For exhibitors, however, the arbitration system has been a definite asset, he noted. "A record of the decisions rendered, particularly in clearance show an overwhelming majority in favor of the exhibitor and many sore spots cleared up," he said. "While the system may not be perfect I bevlieve it will improve as time goes on."

A full program of entertainment and sightseeing was arranged for wives of convention delegates under the direction of Mrs. M. C. Moore. Enjoying the program here are Mrs. Mary Brockett, Mrs. W. R. Griffin, Cullman, Ala.; Mrs. H. V. Manning, Etowah, Tenn.; Mrs. Fred Weis, Savannah, Ga.; Mrs. L. S. Bach and Mrs. J. Harrison, Atlanta, and Mrs. Moore.

Previous statements by MGM spokesmen emphasizing the company's intention of doing everything to make the consent decree work, not only in letter, but spirit, were echoed by Mr. Richey. "We didn't ask for it, but we intend to tolerate within our organization no violations of the decree," he remarked.

Conciliation has been adopted as a general policy in the case of arbitration complaints, he indicated, adding that it is his company's intention to settle complaints before they reached arbitration hearings. "We urge you as theatre owners, however, if you have a complaint take it to arbitration and get it settled."

Despite many objections to the blocks-of-five selling system imposed by the decree, and a somewhat slow start on 1941-42 selling operations the speech indicated advantages for both exhibition and distribution through new sliding scale percentage plans and other contract changes. Furthermore, it will increase exhibitor discrimination in the purchase of pictures, decrease the dissipation of product caused by long runs, and may result in more careful Hollywood casting and story selection.

Draft Affected Business

The withdrawal of more than a million young men from civilian life to the army has had a noticeable effect on picture business, Mr. Richey admitted. However, he predicted that with films the chief source of camp entertainment they will end their enlistments as more avid fans. Moreover, the general public, and defense workers in industry are turning to picture in increasing numbers for escape from headlines and relaxation, he reported.

Commenting on the Congressional probe of films instigated by Senators Wheeler, Nye and Clark, among others, Mr. Richey predicted that it would prove a boomerang by bringing "most graphically to the American public the service that the motion picture industry renders in a time of emergency."

"I don't believe we owe any apology to anyone for hating Hitler and his principles," Mr. Richey told the delegates. "I believe that when the investigation has been concluded the American public is going to have a new realization of the efforts that we have put forth." He cited the cooperation of theatre owners in showing defense short subjects, the USO drive, and the production of training films as instances of industry aid to the government.

Body blows of criticism, taxation and legislation have brought the unity movement to head, Mr. Richey said.

"My hope for the future," Mr. Richey told the exhibitors in closing, "is that you will more often give us the benefit of your advice so that in addition to delivering to you good motion pictures you will assist us to assist you in the marketing of them to the public."

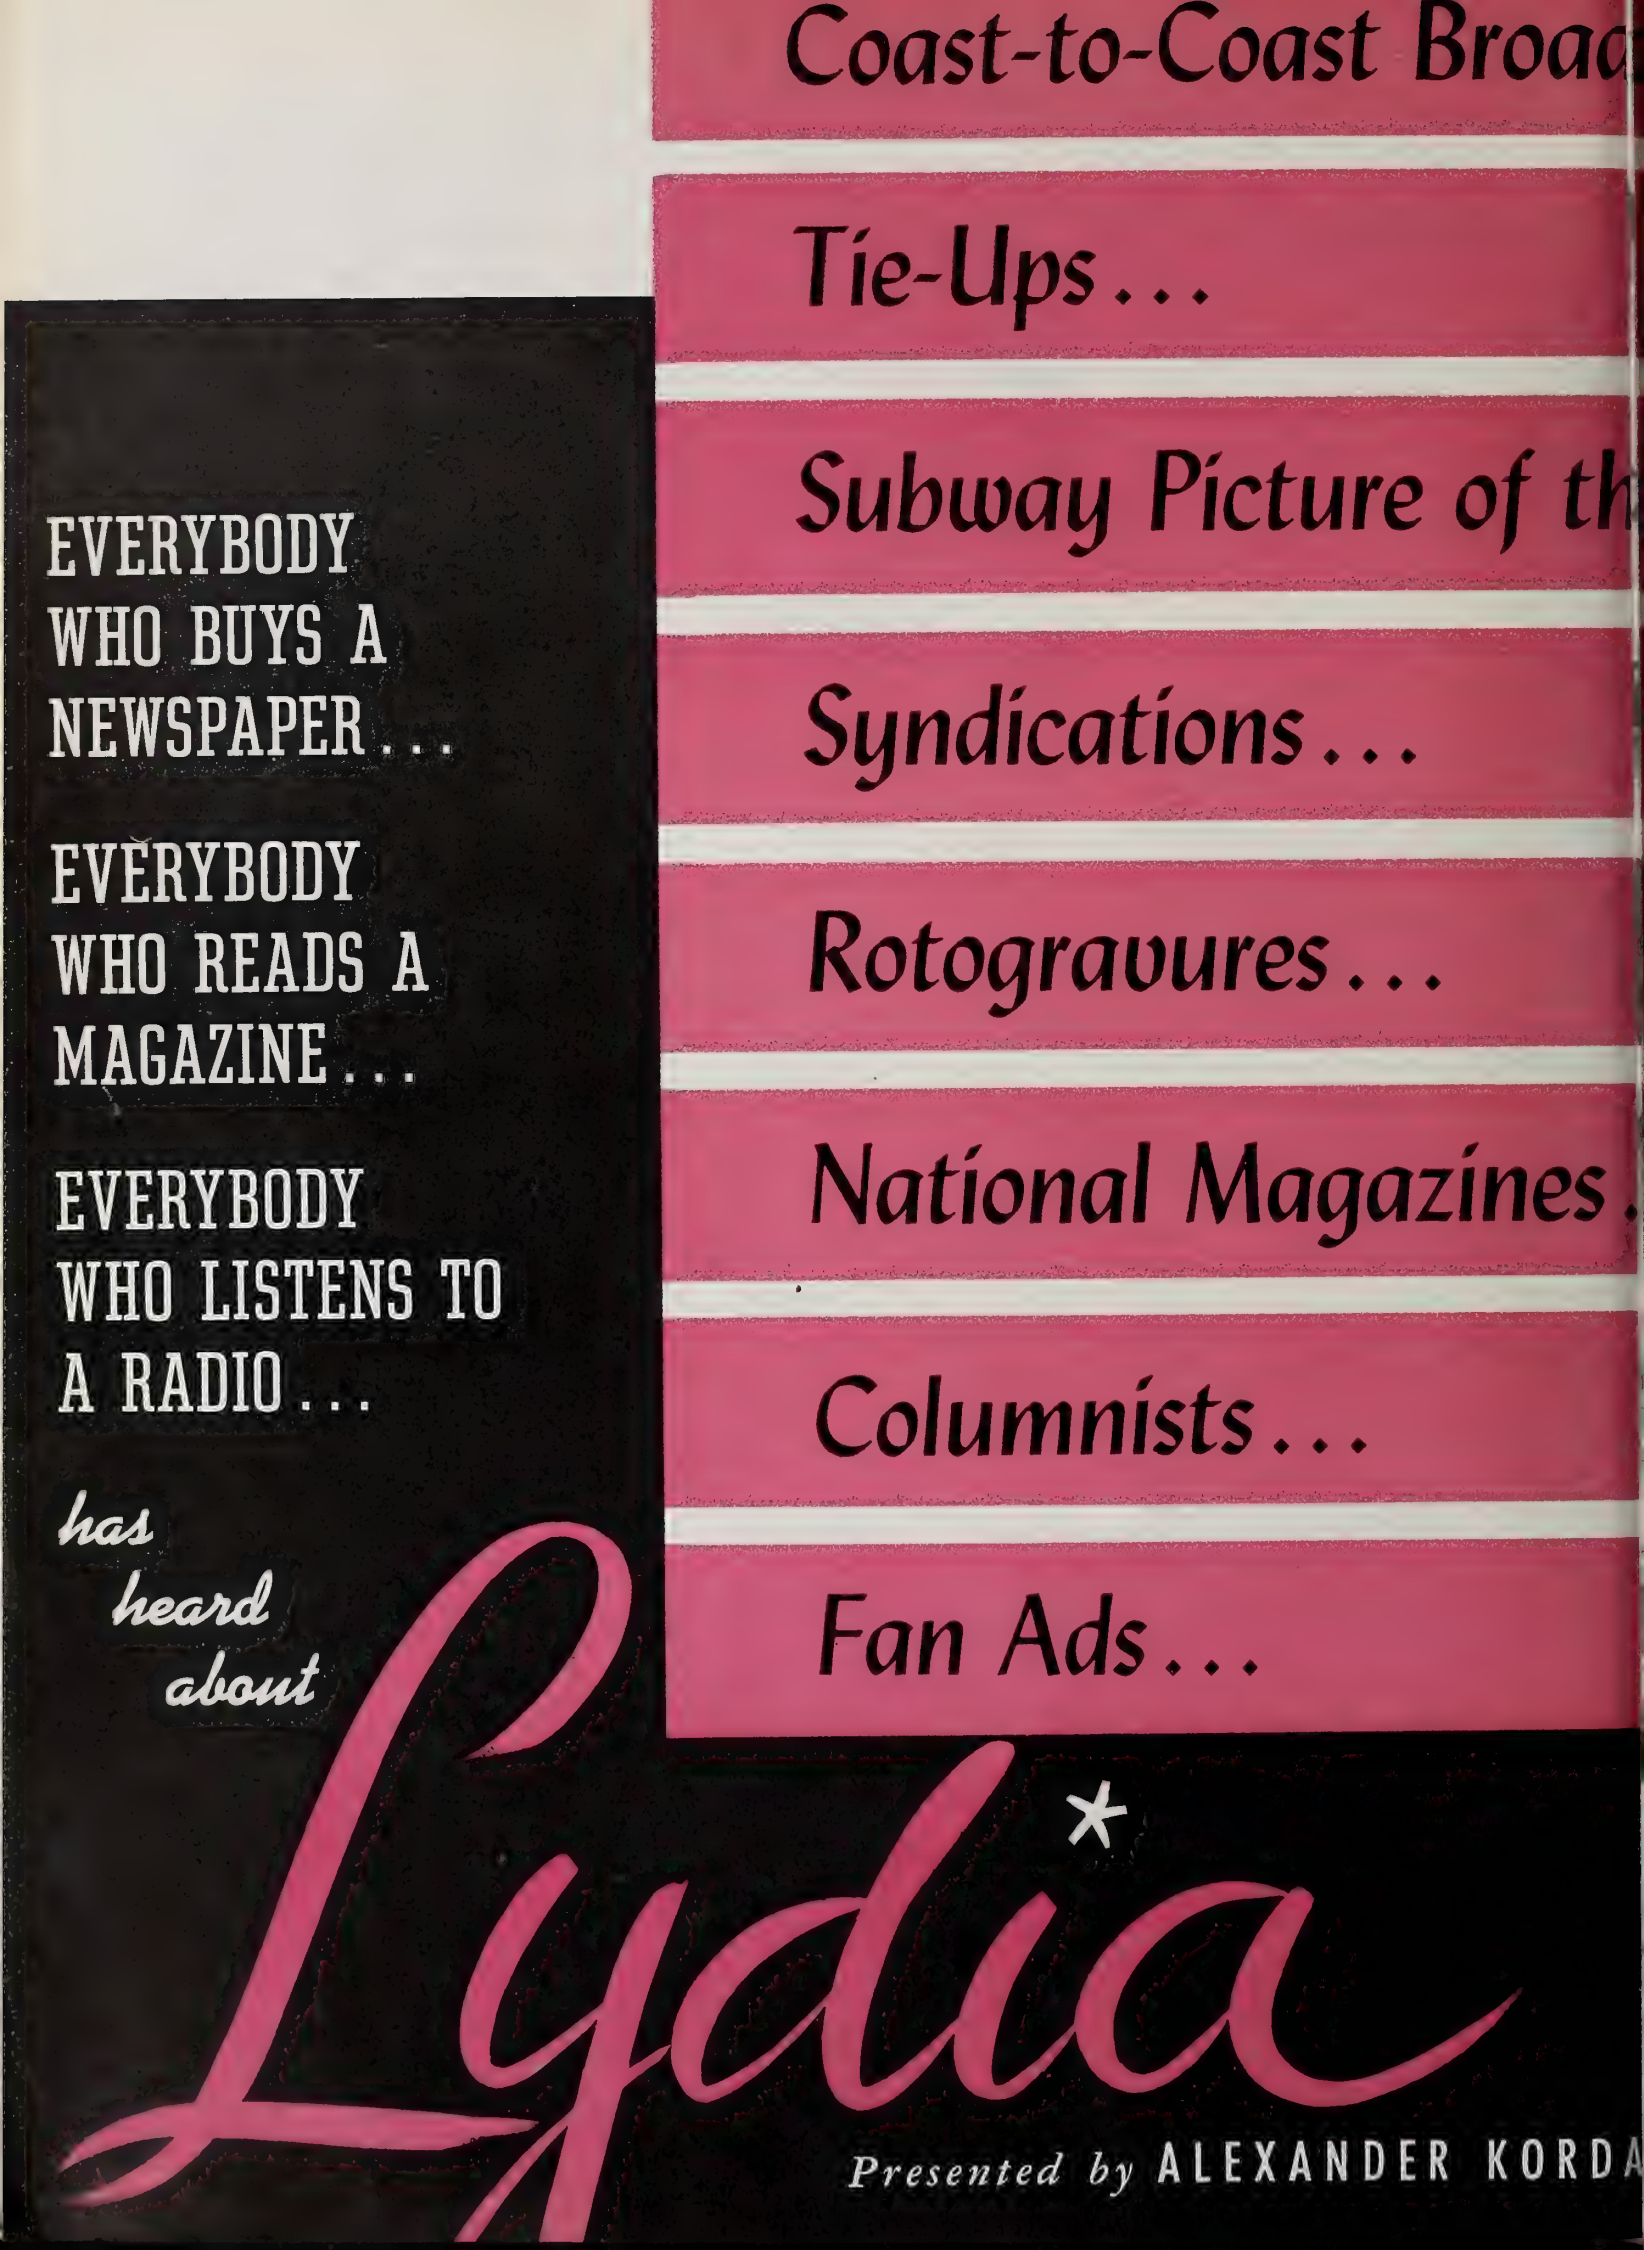
M. C. Moore, SETOA president and operator of the Riverside theatre, Jacksonville, presided at the convention session. Guy A. Kenimer, operator of the Florida theatre, Jacksonville, was general chairman of the meetings.

Kuykendall Urges Unity

A warning that the movie industry must take hold together in combatting critics who would tear down the industry, was sounded by Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, in the opening session of the SETOA convention. He urged exhibitors and others to speak well about the industry which has been good to them.

"We have a peculiar business and we must work together or someone else will take us over," Mr. Kuykendall warned.

Problems touched on by the speaker included television, labor, the consent decree, shortage of product, "forcing of shorts," the taxes, attendance, the USO drive, and the congressional investigation.



Explaining the admission tax raise Mr. Kuykendall said those in Washington are hunting for billions of dollars and they want no general statements as to why the tax should not be put into effect, but only facts and figures. Hopes of a compromise were expressed.

The speaker warned against the "forcing of shorts" and said reports indicate the forbidden practice has again been resorted to by some ambitious salesmen.

He urged full support of the USO drive as one of the finest causes the industry has ever assisted.

Mr. Kuykendall told the exhibitors that the trade papers were their best bet in previewing pictures. He pointed out that they have trained people who know their business and believed that many of the exhibitors would return to their trade papers for trade show information.

Mayor John T. Alsop, Jr., of Jacksonville welcomed the convention to the city and the response was made by Colonel Thomas E. Orr. M. C. Moore, president, was in charge of the business sessions.

SUBURBANS THREATEN DOWNTOWN SHOWS

City Fathers Frown on Minneapolis Suburbans; Council Studies New Restrictions

by ROBERT MURPHY
in Minneapolis

"Encroachment" of suburban theatres in the Minneapolis area this week appeared to be threatening a policy of Minneapolis city fathers with which theatremen have been heartily in concurrence.

For some years the city council, heeding the plaints of showmen that the city already was overseated, have refused to issue licenses for new theatre building. Minneapolis, with about 500,000 population, is served by some 50 theatres. But while theatre building in the city has been restricted, surrounding suburbs have been increasing their seating capacity steadily, and drawing Minneapolis business.

The city council's license committee—which is divided on the subject, but so far in favor of theatremen—several times has refused H. L. Griffiths permission to build a new de luxe house in a heavily populated Hennepin avenue district, a mile each way from any other house.

Refuse Some, but Suburbs Grow

A recent application to build a new house on the North Side was turned down, as several previous had been, when housewives appeared to testify to the friendship in which they held operators of existing theatres. The Nicollet Amusement Co. more recently was refused a permit to construct a new house in another district which has no first-class house.

Several other requests for permits to build new theatres at other outlying business centers have been uniformly turned down.

But, since this policy went into effect, the Edina theatre in Edina—the theatre is located a half block from the Minneapolis city limits, and the Westgate, located just across the street from Minneapolis proper, have gone into operation.

The St. Louis Park theatre, in St. Louis Park, draws a heavy proportion of its business from Minneapolis. On Aug. 14 Abe and Louis Engler of Hopkins, four miles from Minneapolis, will open the de luxe $150,000 Hopkins theatre, a 1,200-seat house, the largest suburban house in Minnesota.

Already operators of the smaller Royal theatre in Hopkins, they will continue operation of that house. Hopkins' population is 4,300. A good proportion of the Hopkins theatre's business must come from Minneapolis.

The New Brighton village council is considering an application for a permit to construct a $60,000 theatre there. New Brighton, a few miles from the city, has no theatre now. It is the site, however, of a new small arms plant which within a few months will employ 8,000 persons.

Inasmuch as thousands of residences in the tonier home sections in Minneapolis are closer to suburban theatres than to neighborhood or downtown houses, a good proportion of theatre business goes to sections in which the Minneapolis city council has no power to restrict building.

The council's policy has not been a matter of law but one of practice. There is a well defined split in the council, and in the license committee, on the issue, and it was feared in some circles that more "encroachment" might swing enough votes to throw the field open to new theatre builders.

If the policy were abandoned, it was believed there would be four or five or possibly a half dozen new theatres building within a few months.

What to do about the situation was a question. It was believed that any effort to restrict building in suburbs would meet with the assertion that suburbs have a right to the construction, employment and taxes which a theatre provides.

Virginia Censors Have Biggest Year in 19

The annual report of the Motion Picture Censor Board of Virginia for the year ending July 1, 1941, shows that the division had its most profitable year since its inception 19 years ago.

Gross collections amounted to $39,297 and after deducting all expenses a profit of $19,771 was turned over to the State Treasurer. This was an increase of $1,121 over the previous year, which was the biggest up to that time.

Some 1,389 films were screened during the year with a total footage of 5,126,000, compared with 1,312 films with footage of 4,867,000 the previous year. Twenty-six eliminations were ordered during the year and three pictures were rejected in toto. These were "Tomorrow's Children," "Highway to Hell" and "He."

Detroit Group Increases

According to an announcement from Carl W. Buermele in Detroit, the membership of Co-Operative Theatres of Michigan is being increased by seven to an all-time high of 107 theatres. New members include two houses still under construction in the suburban area—the Mel in Melvindale by Louis Schlussel, and the Berkeley in Berkeley by John Igna; two houses recently opened—the Clawson in Clawson, by Irving Belinsky, and the Shores at Saint Clair Shores, by R. R. Shook; two houses acquired by existing Co-Op members—the Town in Detroit by Ben and Lou Cohen, and the Apollo in Detroit, by Saul Korman; and one previously unaffiliated Detroit house, the President, operated by Bernard Brooks.

IN COURTS

Suit for Foreign Films Profits Brought in New York

Michael M. Wyngate, Inc., as assignee of Joseph Auerbach, sued for $203,082 damages in New York Supreme Court last week, against Chiel Weissman, alleging that in 1932, Mr. Auerbach gave to Mr. Weissman $112,000 for production of European films, with the alleged understanding Mr. Auerbach was to receive 40 per cent, the defendant 60 per cent, of the proceeds.

Also asserted is that Mr. Weissman owes the plaintiff $17,698 on "Masquerade" and $62,000 on "Mayerling," this representing profits here and in Europe.

Watch Michigan Decision

The Michigan Supreme Court's setting aside of a title deed to the Eastwood Park amusement enterprise, on grounds grantors misunderstood its nature, is seen as affecting fate of four Midwest Theatres, inasmuch as Jacob Schreiber, former owner of the theatres, has a similar suit pending, contending the bill he signed was thought by him temporarily granting operation, rather than a bill of sale

Carroll Sues Paramount

Earl Carroll, producer, sued Paramount in New York Federal Court Monday charging the film company failed to fulfill an agreement by which Mr. Carroll assertedly was to produce a film based upon revues he had staged. The film was "A Night at Earl Carroll's," released, the plaintiff stated, over his protest, and an injury to his reputation. He asks $300,000 damages.

Sues Cincinnati

Hyman Rosen has filed a taxpayers' suit to enjoin Cincinnati from buying, for $225,000, the property of the Music Hall, now in bankruptcy. The plaintiff charged the city would turn the property to the Music Hall Association, without compensation or accounting. The Hall is used for films occasionally.

Name Dispute

A temporary restraining order against the Azteca Theatre's use of the title "World's Fair Follies" was obtained by the Follies Theatre, burlesque house operated by Frank, Roy, and T. V. Dalton, last week. Both houses are on Main Street, downtown Los Angeles.

Cain Sues Universal

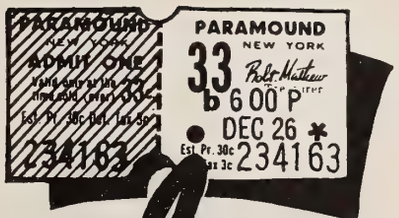
James M. Cain, newspaper man, novelist, author of "The Postman Always Rings Twice," and for a while with the Paramount studio, is suing Universal for plagiarism, charging the film "When Tomorrow Comes" resembles portions of his book, "Serenade."

Burgess Sues Play Bureau

Gelett Burgess, New York author, and the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis publishers, have filed copyright infringement suit in the United States District Court, in Cincinnati, against the Banner Play Bureau, Inc., a California corporation, and Jerome Beach, its Cincinnati representative, charging that Mr. Burgess wrote a book, "Love in a Hurry," originally titled "Married While You Wait," in 1913, and granted exclusive publishing rights to the Bobbs-Merrill Co., although retaining the copyright, and that the Banner Play Bureau produced "Stray Cats," which was largely based on the book.

Fox West Coast Acquires Three

Three additional independent theatres are to be operated by the Fox West Coast circuit, it was announced last week at Los Angeles. The theatres are the Nuart, 600 seats; the Tivoli, 700 seats, and the new theatre now being built on Picvo Boulevard, that city. The first two named are also in west Los Angeles.



George Bourke remains as operating partner.

Hearing on GE, Westinghouse $1,000,000 Settlement Offer

Referee A. J. Halpin will hold a hearing October 3rd in New York County Courthouse, New York City, to consider, on behalf of Radio Corporation of America stockholders, a $1,000,000 offer from Westinghouse and General Electric attorneys to settle a consolidated derivative suit brought by a minority of RCA stockholders against the two utilities and certain officers and directors of the radio company, more than three years ago.

That action charged conspiracy and a waste of approximately $500,000,000 of RCA assets for a long period.

In litigation, a court has already dismissed $262,000,000 of the original amount.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

ADVENTURE IN WASHINGTON: Herbert Marshall, Virginia Bruce, Gene Reynolds—A good picture that pleased all. Should have more stories like this about what is going on around us in the different walks of life. Did nice business. Gene Reynolds should go places. Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 21-27.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

AMAZING MR. WILLIAMS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Joan Blondell—A swell slap-stick comedy. Believe better title could have been given it. But still the picture is swell. Patrons sure gave this a whirlwind of laughter. Would like to see more like this. Running time, 86 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

BLONDIE GOES LATIN: Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, 'Daisy"—The best (so far) of the series. The musical numbers put this in the above average class. Played May 11.—Raymon Paul, Seabreeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

DOCTOR TAKES A WIFE, THE: Loretta Young, Ray Milland—A good comedy that slipped at the box office. Running time, 89 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

HER FIRST BEAU: Jane Withers, Jackie Cooper—A swell little program picture that received swell comments. A nice little story that can happen in any town or any home. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 7-13.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HIS GIRL FRIDAY: Cary Grant, Rosalind Russell—A swell comedy. Two perfect stars for a perfect picture. If Columbia would stick to pictures like this instead of those $12.50 gangsters, it would be better for all. Running time, 92 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

MUSIC IN MY HEART: Tony Martin, Rita Hayworth—It's pictures like this that break down the morale of our industry. How this picture staggered out of Hollywood is beyond me. Positively no good. Running time, 70 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF THE CAMPUS: Ruby Keeler, Harriet Hilliard, Ozzie Nelson—Just a programmer. Comments both ways. Jitterbugs should not miss it. Played on a double. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 21-27.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TIME OUT FOR RHYTHM: Ann Miller, Rudy Vallee, Rosemary Lane, Glen Gray and his Casa Loma Band, Brenda and Cobina—A good musical with catchy songs. Big cast of known names drew the crowds. This one has song, dance, women and comedy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 7-13.—Robert Berezin, Elgin Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

First National

HIGH SIERRA: Humphrey Bogart, Ida Lupino, Joan Leslie—Disappointing in every way, particularly at the B. O. Played August 14-16.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

VIRGINIA CITY: Errol Flynn, Miriam Hopkins, Randolph Scott, Humphrey Bogart—Not as good as "Dodge City," but still good. Wait! Who put Miriam Hopkins in there as a singer? Whoever did must have been doped. She can't sing so why let her? Running time, 120 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BAD MAN, THE: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—Very poor. Wallace Beery should not be cast in an unsympathetic role. Played July 24-25.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Marjorie Main, Virginia Weidler—Very good, especially for us, as fishing is one of our most important industries. Some of you "land lubbers" should take a trip down this way and try your hand in one of the best fishing sections on the Atlantic Coast. Incidentally, if any of you are interested, I will be glad to send you any information you desire, on our fishing and hunting. Played August 22-23.—Raymon Paul, Seabreeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Virginia Weidler—Let Metro talk us into playing this on Sunday to the second low for 1941. Picture did not please.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

COME LIVE WITH ME: James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr—This feature was very much enjoyed by my patrons and had many good comments. Star value helped sell the story. Would recommend this one. Running time, 96 minutes. Played August 23.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE NELLIE KELLY: Judy Garland, George Murphy, Charles Winninger—Very good little picture to normal business on Scotch nights. Played August 25-27.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Nipawin, Saskatchewan, Can. Rural patronage.

PEOPLE VS. DR. KILDARE, THE: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—I don't worry about my box office when I play a "Kildare" picture. They just naturally come. This was one of the best of the series. Everyone is very much upset that Mary gets killed in the next picture. Do not want to see it, etc. Good business. Running time, 115 minutes. Played August 20-21.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

THEY MET IN BOMBAY: Clark Gable, Rosalind Russell—Good picture but only fair business, as I had a carnival for opposition. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 20-21.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN: Laraine Day, Robert Young—Fair picture, but did not draw. One of my little patrons likes Robert Young "because he looks so much like you." This must be true for something hurt the picture terribly.—Rudolph Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN: Laraine Day, Robert Young—This is a good program picture, the best I have seen Robert Young play in a long time. Glad to see him get a chance. Laraine Day was good. Good business and satisfied customers. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—This was very good. A little too long, perhaps. Running time, 131 minutes. Played July 20-21.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

Paramount

LIFE WITH HENRY: Jackie Cooper, Leila Ernst, Eddie Bracken—Very good for small towns. Business excellent. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 23-24.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

ROAD TO SINGAPORE: Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—A riot of laughter. Hope and Crosby are a great pair and more of them would be well appreciated. Running time, 84 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour, John Barrymore—In spite of its age, it broke all box-office records since opening. I can see why it still held up. Why can't they make pictures like this now, instead of war. Running time, 110 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

UNTAMED: Ray Milland, Patricia Morison, Akim Tamiroff—A picture you get tired of after the first time. Who let Patricia Morison in there? She is no actress and never will be. Running time, 83 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

WEST POINT WIDOW: Anne Shirley, Richard Carlson—Good enough picture but so weak on star power it failed to draw. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 24-25.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Republic

ANGELS WITH BROKEN WINGS: Binnie Barnes, Gilbert Roland, Mary Lee—A nice little picture that pleased everyone who came; but that wasn't many as we had to "buck" a $200 Jackpot. Played August 13-14.—Raymon Paul, Seabreeze Theatre, Beaufort, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

ANGELS WITH BROKEN WINGS: Binnie Barnes, Gilbert Roland, Mary Lee—Played as double bill. Good little picture which pleased the week-end trade. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 22-23.—Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

ANGELS WITH BROKEN WINGS: Binnie Barnes, Gilbert Roland, Mary Lee—This did not hit the fancy of my patrons. Many said they did not like it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CAROLINA MOON: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey, Mary Lee—Played repeat showing to average business. Not the best Autry, but still good. I'd like to know what type piano June Storey was playing while Autry was singing the "Si Si" number. Did anyone notice its sound?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HURRICANE SMITH: Ray Middleton, Jane Wyatt—Good action picture which pleased the week-end crowd. Middleton should be a good draw when he catches on, as they seem to like him. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 22-23.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LADY FROM LOUISIANA: John Wayne, Ona Munson—This is a very pleasing little picture, but no special.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Thetare, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PRISON WITHOUT BARS: Corinne Luchaire, Edna Best, Barry Barnes—The script must have been lost when they made this one. Yes, the script and the business. Whoever dug this up had better bury it, but fast! Audience, what there was of it, was restless all the way through. Running time, 79 minutes.—Crist S. Caporal, Bison Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Universal

FLAME OF NEW ORLEANS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Roland Young, Bruce Cabot—Lost money on this as my people will not come to see Dietrich. Picture is fair.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck, Edward Arnold, Walter Brennan—This is a good picture and we did a fair business, but 50% is too much for a small town to pay. Running time, 123 minutes. Played July 27-28.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

Unoccupied France Sees Old American Films

American films made two years ago and earlier are being shown in theatres in unoccupied France, it was said in New York last week by J. H. Westreich, Warner foreign representative, who arrived from that country recently. The old films are preferred over new Nazi pictures, some of which were made in Paris, he said.

A new imposition by Vichy officials, he said, is the banning of still pictures of American stars from theatre lobbies and interiors. Pictures of French and German players are permitted, however, he explained.

Mr. Westreich was released from the French Army about six months ago after working on a railroad project in French Equatorial Africa.

Ullman Back from Coast

Frederic Ullman, Jr., vice-president of RKO Pathe News, returned to New York from Hollywood on Tuesday, bringing with him the first release of "Picture People" for the new season. The initial subject of this series, centered around the activities of Hollywood stars off the lot which was launched last year, is called "Stars in Defense" and features Anne Shirley, Margaret Lindsay, Sigrid Gurie and Binnie Barnes. The short, as the title suggests, is tied up with the participation of screen stars in national defense activities. "Stars in Defense" will be distributed nationally through RKO on September 12th.

Cinema Lodge Affair

The Cinema Lodge of the B'nai Brith will hold its annual banquet and ball October 18th at the Hotel Astor, New York, with Robert Weitman, manager of the Paramount, and David Weinstock, circuit operator, in charge. The membership will meet specially next Tuesday to consider the affair.

Hattie Helborn Retires

Miss Hattie Helborn, for many years secretary to Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., retired from office Monday, September 8th. She will be succeeded by Miss Mae Levintan, who for the past eight years has been secretary to Oscar A. Doob, head of Loew's Theatres advertising and publicity department.

SMART ADVICE

There are huge mouthsful of meat in the Arnold Stoltz articles on novelty heralds. At the moment, this observer is getting a lot of nourishment out of the last paragraph in the second of the series, on a following page. It reads:

"I will close with a word of caution. Not only will you cheapen your theatre and admissions by sweetening the deal with offers of free passes, but it is an immediate showing of weakness in what you have to sell. If prizes are necessary, the merchant usually has some item he is pushing to furnish as such."

There is a campaign recently come to this desk having to do with a tiein and the author of it proudly declares he put it over for "only 25 passes a day." The promotion ran a week and thus the theatreman committed himself for 150 seats free of charge.

The idea does not register as worth that many ducats. The impression is that the manager had given more than he got. Perhaps he lacked the salesmanship that Stoltz emphasizes to sell the tieup on an even-Stephen basis.

Whatever the purpose, every pass given is a seat given away. A seat given away is money out of the till. That would be something to inject into pass-free managers.

GET 'EM WHILE THEY'RE GOING

Now that business is on the up and new product promising to have great strength, it would be time again to treat with the exhibitor attitude in various quarters taking the position that when grosses are favorable little advertising is necessary.

That was brought into the conversation last week by one of the boys who came up with the old chestnut as an alibi for the obvious lack of exploitation in his situation, and in his circuit. With long lines re-forming at the ticket window, why tell folks about something on which they are already sold, went his argument.

Advertising agencies agree that boom times are not the easiest times to convince accounts on the value of consistent advertising. Many a manufacturer with more orders than he can fill fails to see why he should keep on beating the drum.

The answer to that one is the easiest on any quiz program. We give it to the short-visioned theatreman to serve his case, as well. Especially when the grosses are fat, and stay that way, the time is now to tell the customers, tell 'em and tell 'em again.

Established advertising values of any good brand name depend importantly upon intelligent repetition. Theatre appeal reacts similarly, despite those who would argue the difficulties of standardizing motion picture entertainment.

Some years back, one of the circuits bought out a neighborhood independent theatre noted for the consistency of its capacity business. The main reason for it was credited to a terrific 24-sheet coverage, maintained week-after-week over a wide area. Since the house was doing a steady S.R.O., the new bossmen figured the extensive posting an advertising waste and cut it down. It was just a question of time, and not too much time, before grosses dropped alarmingly.

Of course, the heads figured a lot of reasons for it, but the right one. In the end, they saw the light. The posting was restored. And so were the grosses.

KUGELL WRITES EDITORIAL

It was a two-column character shot of Marlene Dietrich that Manager Manny Kugell had planted with the Bridgeport Times-Star to break with a routine story on the amusement page the day ahead of his "Manpower" opening at the Warner. Came the AP story on the star's recent accident in Hollywood, and the editor slammed the photo on page-one to go with the wire flash, heading it "Bad Break for Marlene—Good for Manny." An additional paragraph carried the title, theatre and date and credited Kugell for the inspiration.

How did all this come about? Let Manny tell. In the telling he writes an editorial on the boxoffice value of newspaper goodwill:

"You've preached, many a time, be on good terms with your newspapers. Well, here's the answer. The editor thought enough of me to give me the 'break' when he had the chance to do so. Without his goodwill the AP story of Marlene's injury would be just another squib in some inside page of the paper. With his goodwill it became the climax of a campaign that rolled up one of the highest grosses of the year at this theatre."

Round Table In Pictures

Eye-arresting was the 75-foot sign along the main highway entering Denver, which was planted ahead and during run of "Citizen Kane" by Manager Mickey Gross and publicity director Ted Halmi for the engagement at the RKO Orpheum Theatre.

Lobby slant that proved a natural was that used by Carl Rogers for "Ringside Maisie" at Loew's Granada, in Cleveland. Using a 40x60 enlargement of "Maisie" with her face cut out, patrons were invited to insert their head in the opening, with photographer on hand.

Four "ghosts" touring streets of Pittsburgh in bannered old-vintage auto was stunt used by Publicist Ken Hoel and Manager Bill Zeilor for "Hold That Ghost" at the Harris Senator Theatre.

Ahead and during run of "After Mein Kampf" at the University Theatre, in the Bronx, lad dressed as a Nazi storm trooper and two others dressed as British soldiers toured streets followed by fourth chap with sign reading "They're taking him to see" etc.

With folks coming from all parts of the United States and Canada to witness the annual Calgary Stampede, in Alberta, Can., Round Tabler Pete Egan cracked local dailies with stories and art on his "Wagons Roll at Night" float which brought the theatreman first prize. Truck appropriately bannered created quite a flash.

RKO Theatremen Go to Town With 'Tom, Dick, Harry'

Campaigns on "Tom, Dick and Harry" by RKO Theatres over the nation found ready acceptance, reports Harry Mandel, circuit ad head, especially in the universally effective letter-writing contest tied in with papers on the subject, "Who would you marry—Tom, Dick or Harry?" Readers were invited to write 100-word-or-less letters why they would choose one of these young men as the ideal husband. Cash and tickets were given as prizes. The contest slant was also plugged in the circuit's four-page weekly Newsette, with a letter in a girl's handwriting signed by Ginger Rogers, asking patrons to advise her on who to marry, "Tom, Dick or Harry." Blowup of the letter was used in many of the theatre lobbies.

In the metropolitan section, the Westchester houses of the circuit arranged for full page co-op spreads, theatre credits prominently carried in all the individual ads. The New York area houses ran trailers asking that patrons not reveal the ending of the picture and for further buildup announced that no one would be seated in the last five minutes of the feature.

Weinstein Plants Lobby Switchboard

Extensively circulated by all the theatres in local telephone buildings were cards announcing Ginger, as Janie, the telephone operator, cards carrying stills showing the star at the switchboard. At the RKO 58th Street, Manager A. Weinstein used an actual switchboard in the lobby, with operator answering calls on the date. Lobby stunt in many of the situations was a large wheel, with spokes carrying various masculine names. Women patrons were invited to spin the wheel to "find out the name of the man you will marry."

Street ballyhoos were notably effective, the RKO Albee, in Brooklyn, putting out three men with long beards. One was dressed in street clothes, one in tails, the third in overalls. Accompanying signs read: "We're Tom, Dick and Harry. We won't shave until Ginger Rogers marries one of us." Other lobby-attention getters included full-length figure of Rogers in bridal dress, copy reading: "Here comes the bride . . . but whose bride is she?" Hangers alongside said "Will she marry Tom," etc.

Among the RKO managers directly concerned with these campaigns and particularly the newspaper letter-writing tiein, were Frank Smith and Walter Ahrens, Palace, Chicago; Eddie Sniderman and Maurice Harris, Proctor's Newark; Larry Grieb and Fred Herkowitz, Albee, Brooklyn; J. Di Lorenzo, Proctor's New Rochelle; C. Oelreich, Keith's White Plains; Pat Grosso and Ray Malone, district publicists in other situations. Of the Mandel home office staff, John Cassidy and Peggy Foldes, cooperated in planting the contest across the country.

Flex Features Limerick Contest

At Keith's, Syracuse, Jack Flex put on three contests for the date, one a last-line limerick hookup, a second, on prominent people named Tom, Dick or Harry, and the third on the pressbook suggestion, the "date on $1.80" contest. Radio station ran an announcer's tiein, asking listeners to submit list of popular announcers whose first names were either Tom, Dick or Harry. Co-op ads were numerous.

In conjunction with the tenth anniversary of the Fox, in Phoenix, Ariz., Manager Frank E. Hollis also plugged the date with the "$1.80" contest via a radio hookup wherein merchants bought time and gave prizes for the best answers. Campaign was highlighted with a special newspaper anniversary edition in which much space was given over to the attraction.

Original dresses worn by Ginger in the picture were obtained for display by "Mac" MacEachron, at the Malco Paramount, Jackson, Tenn. Previous to this, the window carried a sign announcing the coming display for added attention. Mac also promoted ice-cream company for cards distributed throughout the area, cards carrying shot of Ginger eating ice-cream plus copy.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Williams' Street Ballys

To exploit his dual bill of "Ringside Maisie" and "That Uncertain Feeling" at Loew's, in St. Louis, Rex Williams stationed a number of attractive young girls on street corners to distribute cards with gags from films, the girls attired in sweaters with title letters. In addition, a miniature prize ring was set up in lobby. Street bally for "That Uncertain Feeling" had the same gals distributing cards calling attention to the "keeks" episodes in the picture.

Loew Poli New England Circuit Inaugurates New Movie Season

The sixth annual Loew Poli New England theatres new movie season celebrated by 13 units in seven Massachusetts and Connecticut towns, was inaugurated by Harry F. Shaw, division manager, and Lou Brown, ad and publicity head with a different method than usual to call attention to the coming product.

From the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood, theatres opening the season with "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde," received what is said to be the largest postcard ever passed through the local postoffices. The card, 40 by 60 inches in size, carried a message of congratulations from Spencer Tracy on the seasonal activities, the reverse side featuring stars of the picture. In each case, the card was addressed to the individual manager and also served for window display purposes. For additional display in lobbies, there were wires of congratulations from stars of other studios. Exhibits of star stills, called "Gallery of Stars" were also installed by the theatremen.

The annual new season slogan contest, conducted through papers in the various towns, was put on again, the winning entry proving to be: "Loew Poli Picture Parade. Victorious new movie season of greater entertainment." The slogan, carried in all theatre advertising and on marquee valances, was worked in universally with the "V" symbol for further attention. Fronts were gaily bannered, as were stores in the theatre blocks. Street parades were held and in almost every situation invitation openings included the attendance of civic officials and local prominents. Co-op newspaper advertising was extensive, the dailies furthering the promotion with full pages of publicity having to do with the new pictures and featured by a statement by J. R. Vogel.

In all spots, the local Loewmen got behind the ball in pushing the circuit drive and effecting added promotions of their own devising. These managers include Matt Saunders, Morris Rosenthal and Harry Rose, of Bridgeport; Bob Russell, Bob Portle and Ted Teschner, of New Haven; Ed Fitzpatrick, of Waterbury; Joe Samartano, of Meriden; Lou Cohen and Fred Greenway, of Hartford; George Freeman, of Springfield; H. H. Maloney and Joe Anstead, of Worcester.

"Pot o' Gold for Britain" Stunt Arranged by Hamilton

Tying in with the local "Bundles for Britain" drive, John J. Hamilton, of the Brandon Theatre, in Brandon, Vermont, for his date on "Pot o' Gold" contacted chairmen of the "Bundles" committees in nearby towns and secured from them a large sign reading "Pot o' Gold for Britain" and planted it together with immense pot in front of his theatre.

Patrons were invited to place any old gold or other contributions in the container. Opening night of picture was designated as "Bundles for Britain Night" and a percentage of the gross was donated to the fund as the theatre's offering in addition to material collected. Dailies came through with stories on the good-will builder.

Afternoon Club Started At Drive-in by Harris

In order that Buffalo's Drive-In Theatre may be used during the idle afternoon hours, Manager Milton Harris recently announced the formation of a social club which enables the residents and folks in the surrounding area to use the 30 acres of graded ramps as well as the field behind the theatre as a recreation center.

Through the medium of newspaper ads, screen and program, Harris invited patrons to conduct their picnics and family reunions at the theatre. Dates were made in advance, with playground facilities arranged for youngsters.

STAGE PRESENTATIONS MARK BEAUTY CONTESTS

Wide Publicity Obtained with Promotions Endorsed by Civic Organizations and Merchants

Founded nearly 150 years ago, advent of the local parish in Belen, New Mex., is celebrated annually with an elaborate Fiesta, this year's festivities marked by a first-time selection of a Fiesta Queen, initiated through the efforts of Manager Carmon Phillips and tied to the first anniversary of his Onate Theatre. Phillips put on the theatre birthday celebration for the week ahead of the Fiesta, featuring the anniversary observances with a voting contest for the Queen.

Entrants in Fiesta costume appeared on the stage during the first night of the "Week" for an initial showing before the audience, patrons receiving voting blanks worth 50 votes. On succeeding nights, patrons were given 10-vote blanks and to encourage participation, photos of entrants and their names were shown in the lobby. Winner was crowned Queen in stage ceremonies by the city's mayor on night before the Fiesta, rewarded with cash prize and theatre term pass. Next four were appointed ladies-in-waiting and similarly awarded, the court taking part in the Fiesta parade riding on an elaborate theatre float.

Publicity on the tiein was vast with the local dailies running the contest on page one and papers in the area making much of it. This was especially noted in the Albuquerque, New Mex., press which carried three-column stories and photos of the Queen, a first-time that a Belen event had secured such prominent mention.

Merchants Work With Kramer

Enthusiastically endorsed by Les Kaufman, Fanchon & Marco St. Louis ad head, is the campaign waged by Manager Harris Kramer, of the suburban F. & M. Tivoli, in nearby University City, a Beauty Pageant to find "Miss University City" to represent the community Chamber of Commerce at a citywide pageant. Kramer had 25 leading merchants in his situation sponsoring individual entrants, each of the girls being widely publicized by their sponsors through newspaper and other advertising with the winner chosen by audience applause.

Contest publicity was built up by the theatreman with a series of tieins, started with a dinner to the entrants and sponsors by the Chamber of Commerce. Three parades to different parts of the county were held, Kramer promoting the use of new convertibles, colorfully bannered with Pageant advertising. The parades escorted by motorcycle police stopped at leading restaurants where the girls attired in bathing suits were dinner guests, the occasion widely advertised by their hosts. The girls also appeared at a charity ball game where they marched around the field and were introduced over the p.a. system. Further appearances at the municipal swimming pool also brought extra publicity.

The finals at the theatre were put on with Hollywood premiere fanfare, girls and escorts brought to the Tivoli in chauffeur-driven cars. Girls entered the lobby over special runway and were interviewed over the theatre p.a. Publicity in the neighborhood and downtown papers was extensive and continuous, the merchants being so pleased with the results that, according to Kaufman, the theatre is now considered by the city as the local point of all such civic activities.

"Bick" Finds Air Queen

Discovering that an air carnival was planned by the University of Georgia School of Aviation, in Athens, Manager Frank Bickerstaff, L & J City Manager, in that situation, tied in by selling the committee on the idea of a Queen to preside over the doings, "Bick" being appointed to handle the arrangements. The theatreman immediately contacted all airports within a hundred mile radius, asking for photos of girls for representation in the activities, the photos to be forwarded to the air cadets at famed Randolph Field, for voting on the winner. The Round Tabler also brought the celebrations to the notice of all newsreels, calling attention to the expected participation of champion glider record holders. In keeping with the proceedings, "Flying Wild' was booked as the screen attraction at the L & J Georgia during the carnival.

Since it was found that army regulations prevented the cadets from voting for the Queen, "Bic" had the winner decided by audience applause, the cup presented on the the stage night before the carnival opened. At the air field where the program was put on, the winning girl was introduced to the crowds, the Mayor participating in a further presentation for added publicity.

When the newsreel pictures arrived, the L & J head put on a previewing for the carnival committee, airport personnel, the Mayor and other prominents. The showing was covered by the dailies for front page attention which also mentioned the feature picture and theatre dates.

Kidwell Aids "Miss Ohio" Search

As part of the Ohio Firemen's convention, to be held this year in Kent, a statewide bathing beauty contest is held, the finalists competing at the convention for the title of "Miss Ohio." Eliminations are put on by various towns to select district representatives, and in Kent, Manager Ed Kidwell was able to land the local competition to be decided upon the stage of Schine's Kent.

To stimulate entries, the Schiner promoted gifts and through Pat McGee, district manager, obtained a loving cup to be awarded the winner with the compliments of Don Ameche, whose "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" was dated in the period covering the stage proceedings. The local papers and the nearby Akron press gave the event lots of publicity and photo breaks, Kidwell reporting nearly 300 inches landed in advance.

This being the season of girl competitions reports from members having to do with other beauty contests and pageants will be reported in next week's issue.

"R" Stunts Build Skelton Opening

The citizenry of Sharon, Pa., was recently concerned with the identification of a letter "R" which overnight was lettered on street corners and appeared in one-column blocks in the papers. Curiosity kept mounting until the day ahead of "Whistling in the Dark" at Warners' Liberty, when a street ballyhoo of a man carrying umbrella and back banner was sent out by Manager Bob Wanamaker to stand near the "R" letters, the banner reading: "Rain or Shine, I'm going to see the Western Premiere of," etc. As a followup, the man distributed cards of explanation: "Saturday is 'R' Day in Sharon for Red Skelton," etc., etc.

Over Station WPIC the day ahead, Wanamaker arranged tiein with a featured whistler, listeners-in invited to call the theatre and whistle the opening bars of the song "Whistling in the Dark" featured on the program. First 15 so doing were awarded guest tickets. The Warnerman reports an immediate jam of the house telephone line as a result.

Calling further attention to the western Pennsylvania premiere of the picture were two-color mimeographed postcards mailed to names in the surrounding area. Bob also promoted a large number of mystery magazines for theatre distribution, with picture announcements pasted on front covers. Libraries were covered with bookmarks on mystery yarns and miniature telegrams in parked cars announced a "flash" of the premiere. Further comment at the theatre was aroused with a number of boys spotted in the audience who "whistled their heads off," to quote Wanamaker, when the trailer came on.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Merchant Tieup and Contests Aid Loomis on "Serenade"

What proved to be a "natural" was tieup effected by Dale Loomis with the J. C. Penny Company for engagement of "Penny Serenade" at the Roxy, in Peru, Indiana. Uniformed usher distributed cards to which a cent was pasted, copy on one side read: "Save your pennies to see," etc., and reverse "Save pennies by trading at." Merchant stood cost of printing and distribution. Week ahead, patrons received change in imprinted envelopes with copy: "Don't forget your pennies and don't forget to see."

Also good for attention was the theatreman's offer to give 100 pennies to each baby born during engagement. Penny guessing contest was landed in clothing store window with guest tickets to those guessing correct number in bowl, while another contest offered tickets to those correctly guessing dates on pennies. Aiding on the campaign was James Ackron, assistant manager.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Rogers' "Blossoms" Contest

A baby contest, arranged by Carl Rogers, Granada, Cleveland, preceded the "Blossoms in the Dust" engagement there. Prizes were donated by local merchants cooperating with the house, stores advertising the tieup in papers.

Ghosts Picket on "Hold That Ghost"

Previous to the opening of "Hold That Ghost" at the Florida, St. Petersburg, Fla., Manager Walter Tremor reports a classified ad reading:

"Ghost Wanted to picket the Florida theatre unfair to serious ghosts. Hold That Ghost, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is a hilarious, ridiculous comedy not in keeping with the dignity of the ghost profession. (Signed) Ghost Local No. 554."

Oddly enough, writes Tremor, the ad drew a number of replies, about eight persons of both sexes applying for the job. This was commented upon by the dailies which called further attention to the date with a two-column shot and caption of a ghost picket line in front of the theatre devised by the Round Tabler as an elaboration of the stunt suggested in the Universal pressbook. Four boys draped in white and carrying "unfair" signs made up the picket line, signs carrying copy similar to that in the classified ad above.

Several days in advance, during breaks, trailers and newsreels, only, ushers were dressed in ghost costumes, and tricked-up ghostly figures made up of sheeting and built around floor lamps were planted in lobby and mezzanine. Large beaver board ghosts with laughing faces were incorporated into the front.

During the run, lobby was darkened and lighted candles placed around the displays with caution taken to guard against fire and accident hazards. Thus, an eerie atmosphere was created and made more so by a ghost costume worn by the doorman.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Radio Plugs Aid on "Cockeyed Sailors"

Teaser radio slant over WPIC was instituted by Bob Wanamaker ahead of "Three Cockeyed Sailors" at the Liberty, Sharon, Pa., plugs over regular theatre program one week ahead. Continuity in these plugs was achieved by mention of playdates thus: "In seven days you'll howl at"; "In six days you'll scream at," etc., climaxing in three announcements over program day ahead.

For street bally, rowboat on trailer toured the city appropriately bannered. Three ushers dressed as sailors sat in bow, as truck stopped lads alighted and started shooting crap on street corners. As crowds gathered they distributed heralds. Four days ahead theatre staff called subscribers with spiel: "Hello, Joe, I just noticed where Three Cockeyed Sailors starts at the Liberty on".

Darby Gets Rita Quigley For Personal Appearance

Since Rita Quigley, young Fox star, was playing in person at the Westport Country Playhouse at the same time Jim Darby at the Norwalk, in Norwalk, Conn., was playing one of her pictures, "Ride, Kelly, Ride," the enterprising theatreman contacted her agent and he agreed to have the star make a personal appearance on the theatre stage. Next step by Jim was to contact Mayor Frank T. Stack, who was on hand to introduce Miss Quigley to the audience.

Tearin' and rarin', Quigley Awards hunters speed up as the ending of the Quarter nears. As noted in these columns, the pace continues evenly, with 56 entrants taking down 54 Fortnighters. Who and from where, as usual, is set down.

Closing date for the Third Quarter is set as September 27th. Final results of the Third Quarter will be posted in the issue of October 4th.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

A local jeweler was promoted for a wrist watch by Al Myers, manager of Warners' Ritz, York, Pa., as prize for the best model submitted of a sky raider. One of the model clubs in town fostered a special club to make models for the contest in behalf of "Sky Raider." All model clubs and centers were contacted and announcements made in public schools.

Lin Sullivan, acting manager of Warners' Grand Theatre, Camden, N. J., for "Footsteps in the Dark," had photos taken around town and persons identifying themselves received free admission. Taken with his own camera, the snap-shots were placed on a cleverly devised one-sheet which rested in front of the theatre.

Wally, Leach, manager of Warners' State Theatre, Chester, Pa., used guessing contests to advantage. For "Pot o' Gold," he used a gold-fish bowl full of gilded pebbles to lure patrons to his message on the picture. Three crates of apples were promoted from a market for an apple-guessing contest on "The Lady Eve."

"Flight from Destiny" received a personal endorsement trailer and herald from manager Sam Teitelbaum, of Warners' Commodore, Philadelphia. He sold "Honeymoon for Three" with a unique card idea, the front devoted to the picture, back to "You Can Reveal the Mystery of Anyone's Age" and a complete analysis. Bottom copy plugged the picture on angle that regardless of age, "Honeymoon for Three" is guaranteed to be a hilarious hit.

Harry Clemens, manager of Warners' Imperial-60th St. Theatre, Philadelphia, used a gag card, warning: "You'll Be Short-Changed In Your Entertainment If You Fail To See 'Cheers For Miss Bishop' Starring," etc. Then followed an endorsement of the picture. The card was signed by the house cashier, who handed it to all patrons one week in advance of playdates.

Excellent newspaper breaks were accorded Francis Deering's most popular salesgirl contest in connection with his opening of "The Big Store" at Loew's, in Houston. Cash prize was offered winner, with tickets to runnersup, cooperating paper running ballot boxes daily.

Stenciling streets in the vicinity of the Paramount Theatre, in Grand Forks, N. D., was the way George D. Irwin ushered in his double-horror show of "Man Made Monster" and "Horror Island." As a giveaway, bally man covered area with banner reading: "We dare you to see," etc. In addition, jaloppy bally with scare copy was also much in evidence.

To build interest in "Shepherd of the Hills" at the Strand Theatre, in Trail, B. C., Leslie V. Campbell held a contest which he dubbed "Compare our scenery with that you will see in Shepherd of the Hills." Cash prizes and tickets went to those submitting best snapshots of local scenic beauties. Entries were displayed in lobby with appropriate credit cards.

Ahead of "Strike Up the Band" at the Roxy, in Clearfield, Pa., Wilford N. Sklar promoted numerous windows which were tied directly to the picture, special lobby display was erected for the occasion and one-sheet boards planted both inside and out.

Months ahead of the opening of "The Great Dictator" at the Elgin, in Ottawa, Bob Berezin planted a six foot cutout of Chaplin out front. Title letters were made of wood three inches thick and a half foot high, stills from the picture were also displayed outside. Front of box office was giant cutout of Chaplin, with the cashier selling tickets through wide open mouth. Lights behind eyes worked with flasher.

Ahead of "I Wanted Wings" at the Warner Whitehall, in Pittsburgh, Chuck Shannon had two boys march through streets carrying 24-sheet mounted on banner. Sheet was rolled up when they started and as they approached intersections, they would open up the sheet so that it was visible to passersby. Promoted from airport were sample flight charts.

Through cooperation of leading stores, Frank Shaffer at Warner's Dixie," in Staunton, Va., distributed imprinted cellophane bags to merchants for use in handing out change. Copy on envelope read: "Save this dollar and have the time of your life when you see Jimmy Cagney and Bette Davis in the funniest comedy of the year, The Bride Came C.O.D."

COSTUME DESIGNING CONTEST AIDS "FITZ"

Inside spread intended for the men carried cut of Rita Hayworth, while the gals' folder featured one of Tyrone Power. Both carried picture copy together with playdates, etc.

One week before opening with "The Devil and Miss Jones," Bert Leighton, manager of Warners' Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., he obtained a devil costume, mask and dummy, which, together with stills, was placed on display at the novelty shop where all high school students passed by. Window displays were promoted at all stores near the schools. Three downtown stores used photos of Jean Arthur in bathing suit. The picture was also announced on the radio and at the school baseball field one day before opening.

Doughboy Photo Contest Aids Kalberer on "Buck Privates"

Open to friends, relatives and sweethearts of local "Buck Privates" was the photo contest planted by A. J. Kalberer at Switow's Indiana, in Washington, Ind., whereby ballots were run in cooperating paper and folks invited to send in snapshots of boys in uniform. Guest tickets were awarded doughboys on the basis of the location of the Army camps in which the lads were stationed and additional passes went to those submitting the photos. "LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Perdue Gives Screen Test For "Ziegfeld Girl"

Highlighting his "Ziegfeld Girl" campaign at the Kansan Theatre, in Parsons, Kans., with a contest to find the local "Miss Ziegfeld of 1941," Barnes Perdue presented an engraved loving cup to the winner, who was selected on beauty, personality and poise by out-of-town judges. In addition topper was a technicolor motion picture test made on stage of the winner.

Using 16 mm. equipment, the camera was set up on table in the auditorium and the girls were "shot" as they appeared on stage. The winner was filmed as she received the cup and several "shots" were made of different poses and closeups. These were shown on the screen following week, which was good for additional business.

Publicity included teaser ads used in local daily well in advance of regular ads, papers coming through with stories and art ahead and for the finals. An art panel was placed in the theatre lobby two weeks in advance and moved to the sidewalk day of the show.

On Novelty Advertising and How to Make It Pay

Use Salesmanship Instead of Dollars, Says Warnerman

by ARNOLD STOLTZ,
Manager, Warners Avon, Utica, N. Y.

The novelty herald is a true godsend to the manager with a small advertising budget, because it is something the entire cost of which can be promoted from outside the theatre. The manager should first determine which line of business the individual tie-up will best benefit and then select from among that guild one of the live-wire merchants. His next step is to personalize the original layout with actual copy inserting the name of the particular store he is aiming to sell. If worst comes to worst, a little erasing for the next prospect is easily done. Thus, not only are you showing the merchant his name in print but you also make him realize that you have actually given his store thought and consideration. This will make the merchant receptive, if nothing more, liberal with his time. If he turns you down he will be apologetic and practically a surety for another tie-up.

There are no set rules in selling theatre promotions other than those applied to the sale of any other line. However, I would like to list a few suggestions that you might find handy.

"Separate Your Shots"

It is not necessary to know personally the merchant you are going to sell. The fact that you have pencilled his name in on your layout will prove its merit again by serving as an introduction.

If your herald has merit in your mind, don't worry if you have to deal with a chain store or a store whose advertising must be approved by an advertising agency. They are as easy to sell on novelties as the small merchant but sell them early as it usually takes a little longer.

Separate your shots so as not to hit the same merchant too frequently. Even though successful tieups may be of benefit to him, too frequent promotion tends to dull the edge and make him less exploitation-minded in the future.

Give consideration to your methods of distribution. For example, a herald made up like a prize-fight ticket could be advantageously distributed in pool rooms, cigar stores, bowling alleys, etc., whereas a strictly feminine herald would be suicidal in the same spots.

Avoid Telephone Contacts

I should like to add a few dont's, the most important of which are:

Never try for a tieup over the telephone. The merchant will not give your promotion any more import than you yourself consider it. When you phone him, he may be doing one of a dozen things that he might consider more important at the time and thus cannot give his full attention to what you have to sell. He might be out of humor, a signal you would observe in a personal call and heed. Then, too, telephone conversations allow the prospect to say "no" more readily, whereas a strong personal dissertation may win him over. Not all merchants can visualize and "seeing is believing."

Don't distribute heralds tied in with one drug store near another drug store or whatever corresponding line the participating merchant might be in. Aside from the bad taste of such a move, the one you offend might be the one in line as your next prospect.

Don't promise more heralds than you are actually going to print and distribute. Quantity is not paramount in making a sale. A merchant would rather have preferred distribution and an outstanding ad than quantities of straight pamphlets.

In discussing costs don't be afraid to include expense for the labor of folding, assembling, or stuffing your novelties. For example, when you ask a merchant for a certain sum, for say, 5,000 envelopes containing a certain item, he is versed in costs and will know the amount is about the actual cost of the entire outlay. But he also will realize that you are doing your share in dealing with the problems of assembling and distributing, as well as having mothered the IDEA. Thus, the merchant should never be responsible for more than the actual cash outlay and this will guarantee continued good feeling and he can be added to your lists of "regulars."

Is Against Pass "Sweetening"

Remember that two of the most eye-catching subjects are sex intelligently handled, and humor, because not only do they sell your show on the finished herald but likewise they help to sell the tie-up to the merchant. The most outstanding example in recent years and one that I quote to hard-to-sell stores is the fact that for years straight publications tried to sell fashions to men, without success, then along came Esquire with its tongue in its cheek and made us all "Joe Collegians" by a joke here and a petty girl thar!

I will close with this word of caution. Not only will you cheapen your theatre and admissions by "sweetening" the deal with the offer of free passes but it is an immediate showing of weakness in what you have to sell. If prizes are necessary with your herald, the merchant usually has some item he is pushing and will be glad to furnish the merchandise as such.

The above is the second of the series on novelty advertising, particularly heralds, by Arnold Stoltz, who specializes in this unique form of promotion. The first, in the issue of Aug. 30, told of the general plan of the Stoltz operations. If Arnold has any more to say about it—and we expect he does—the members will hear about it accordingly.

Smilin' Through

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1941-42)

A Thrice-Told Tale

Adapted from the Broadway stage play of the 1919-20 theatrical season, this third motion picture venture of "Smilin' Through" still contains all the dramatic impact, all the softness of sentimental romance, all the warmth of human interest and appeal, filled as it is with everyday material of everyday life, all the laughs and tears that color normal existence, and all the tension and suspense of a frustrated love that made the previous presentations successful at the box office and in the theatre.

"Smilin' Through" was first presented by the Selwyns at the Broadhurst Theatre in New York with Jane Cowl in the starring role. In July, 1921, under the producership of Joseph M. Schenck the first motion picture version was released with Norma Talmadge. Again in 1932 the play was brought to the screen, this time with Norma Shearer, Fredric March and Leslie Howard in the leading roles. Sidney Franklin directed both productions. For a third time under the aegis of Victor Saville, producer, and Frank Borzage, director, "Smilin Through" has emerged with its smooth and smart format still slick and sophisticated and with the double advantage of star value and Technicolor. Jeanette MacDonald and Brian Aherne are two points of the stellar triangle. As the third member, Gene Raymond comes back to the screen after a protracted exile.

The story is told in the two periods of the 1840's and the war years of 1914 to 1918 with a suburban London locale. The story was synopsized in the Product Digest section of the September 6th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Brian Aherne's performance as the aging and philosophic uncle is the kind the customers talk about and urge their family and friends to see, while many in the supporting roles contribute performances commending praise. Ian Hunter as the church vicar, Frances Robinson as "Ellen" the maid, Eric Lonsdale, Jackie Horner and David Clyde distinguish themselves.

There is nothing in either dialogue or situation that will cause showman or spectator embarrassment, but since the story is without comedy or adventure it will have little appeal to those who have not felt at least the first pangs of young romance. For exploitation the picture's appeal will be best directed to those who are pleased and entertained with softer and the more sentimental brand of program fare.

Previewed in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer projection room in New York at a screening for the trade press. The assembled fourth estate said the picture had come up to their expectations after comparing it with the 1932 version.—GEORGE SPIRES.

A Yank in the R.A.F.

Adventure Over Dunkirk

Bearing the signature of Darryl F. Zanuck as producer and directed by Henry King, this tale of an American aviator who joined the R. A. F. at a time when Britain was dropping nothing heavier than leaflets on Berlin and continued in the service to participate in the evacuation of Dunkirk is packed with audience values.

On the talent side there are striking performances by Tyrone Power as the American aviator, by Betty Grable, surpassing herself as the girl in love with him against her common-sense, by John Sutton as her British suitor, and by Reginald Gardiner as the admirer who is always about to meet her but never does. These are backed by solid acting on the part of all hands.

For most of the running-time, the film stays within the channel of humor, the growing seriousness of the war in the background being noted only in casual, fleeting references. Then it plunges abruptly into the dramatic when the R. A. F. is ordered to obtain mastery of the air over Dunkirk at any cost and the fliers are sent aloft to clear the skies of enemy aircraft while the Navy rescues the entrapped battalions. Scenes comprising this climactic portion of the picture are among the most impressive war incidents ever filmed.

Already beneficiary of much newspaper and magazine publicity, the picture comes to showmen pre-sold to a large public.

Commencing with outbreak of the war and ending after Dunkirk, the story has the impact of history, not propaganda.

The happy ending, filmed after early preview audiences protested the killing of the hero at Dunkirk, fits the picture snugly into the pattern of audience requirements generally.

Worked into the picture are three musical numbers, night club routines, led by Betty Grable.

Lew Edelman was associate producer.

Witnessed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, where a special screening for the trade press was arranged without notice to the paying customers. From the tone, vigor and enthusiasm of the audience's response, the picture appears to have all the attributes of a top flight hit.—W. R. W.

Produced and distributed by 20th Century-Fox. Producer, Darryl F. Zanuck, Associate producer, Lou Edelman. Director, Henry King. Lyrics and music by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin. Photographed by Leon Shamroy. Edited by Barbara McLean. P. C. A. certificate No. 7368. Release date, Oct. 3, 1941. Running time, when seen in Glendale, 97 minutes. General audience classification.

Skylark

Diversion for Grownups

Tradeshown last in the second Paramount block, this exercise in the field of adult comedy outshines its package-mates in point of marquee strength, production polish and expertness generally. A bit outspoken for the juvenile trade, and concerning itself with some adult matters in a blandly casual manner, it packs a lot of entertainment for the mature.

Producer-director Mark Sandrich, known for his success in the handling of the Jack Benny pictures, some of the Astaire-Rogers films and other enterprises of note, surpasses himself in his treatment of this different and more difficult type of production. Starting with a story which is, at bottom, the familiar triangle, he carries it from an unfamiliar beginning to the inevitably familiar ending without once falling into the familiar channels followed by his innumerable predecessors over the route. The effect thus achieved is that of newness, unexpectedness, surprise, all the solids of entertainment.

Claudette Colbert, whose portrayal of the wife excels anything she'd done since "It Happened One Night," is heroine and late in the picture, victim, of a boat-cabin adventure in knock-about comedy that had the tradeshow crowd laughing like happy customers.

Ray Milland and Brian Aherne, as husband and would-be husband respectively, turn in performances profitable to the picture and to their stellar reputations.

Binnie Barnes, Walter Abel, Grant Mitchell and Mona Barrie lead a supporting cast so rich in talent that such players as Warren Hymer and Hobart Cavanaugh are used for mere bits.

The story boils down to the ramifications of a situation in which a wife, discovering on her fifth wedding anniversary that her husband is subordinating their romantic relationship to business interests, obtains a divorce and prepares to marry another man but changes her mind, finally, in favor of remarrying her original mate.

Involved in telling of the tale are several sequences, considerable dialogue and much business inappropriate for juvenile eyes and ears.

Man at Large

Girl Meets G-Man

Here is a spy story, average for its class, replete with F. B. I. men, German secret agents, British Naval Intelligence and a girl reporter who should have been arrested midway for obstructing justice. But Marjorie Weaver is sufficiently innocent, attractive and persistent to hold on until the spy-ring has been uncovered, and her natural charm disclosed a spangled bandeau and shorts. She gets her man.

A good bit of territory is covered in brief, if not always coherent, snatches of prison camps, resort cottages, a newspaper city room—movie style—and a blind man's house wired for sound. Not even the F. B. I., represented by George Reeves, seems to take it too seriously, and the patrons should have some good laughs with their thrills.

Director Eugene Forde maintained a fast pace throughout, keeping the suspense well within the audience's attention, span and intelligence.

The film was produced by Ralph Dietrich.

Previewed at the projection room to a trade press audience which held its breath or chuckled at the appropriate times.—E. A. CUNNINGHAM.

Ladies in Retirement

Danse Macabre

"Ladies in Retirement" is a macabre, moody story laid in the gloomy surroundings of an old house on an English marsh, and is splendidly portrayed by players and camera. Its characters are unsympathetic, its romance illicit, its humor on the gruesome side; its motivation the love of a girl for her two insane sisters. It promises to be hailed by critics as an artistic triumph, which it is in all departments from production to technical.

That it has power to move audiences deeply is manifest, but its suitability for his type of patrons can be judged only by the exhibitor himself. Coming at a time when grosses indicate comedy is the chief craving of theatregoers, this Lester Cowan-Gilbert Miller picturization of the London and New York stage hit may be a welcome contrast.

The housekeeper-companion of a woman who lives on donations of her former lovers brings her two sisters, who are insane, to live at the home on the marshes. Fearful of having her sisters sent away and possibly confined in a government asylum, the girl murders her employer, hides her body and forges the employer's name to checks for expenses. A thieving nephew of the sisters, fugitive from embezzlement charges, stumbles onto the scheme and attempts blackmail. The climax comes when the nephew, after having an affair with the maid in the house, is captured by the police and the murderess, knowing that the Catholic nuns in the nearby priory will care for her sisters, gives herself up.

Ida Lupino as the murderess, Elsa Lanchester and Edith Barrett as the mad sisters, and Isobel Elsom as the murdered woman are the cast's standouts, all of them turning in excellent performances. Miss Barrett makes her film debut and Miss Elsom appears in her first American film. Louis Hayward as the nephew, Evelyn Keyes as the maid, Emma Dunn, Queenie Leonard and Clyde Cook complete the cast.

Charles Vidor has turned in the best directorial achievement of his career with "Ladies in Retirement." The task of creating and maintaining moods, yet giving them a semblance of tempo, was accomplished neatly.

Attempts of producer Cowan to buoy with comedy the ponderousness of the material meet only with occasional success. The camera technique of George Barnes is outstanding and did much for the film.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, to a press-professional and paying audience which was deeply and audibly impressed. Opinion was that the comedy was not sufficient to leaven the tragedy; and that it presented a knotty problem for exploitation.—V. K.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. A Lester Cowan production in association with Gilbert Miller. Directed by Charles Vidor. Married Bachelor

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1941-42)

Romantic Comedy

Following this year's style for gay and fanciful comedy farces with the accent on bed and boudoir, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents "Married Bachelor," an innocuous little story of a young husband who sells someone else's book, "A Bachelor Looks at Marriage," and poses as the author and a bachelor to raise money to pay off a $17,000 gambling debt to a big city gangster.

Robert Young has the role of the young husband whose success as an author wins him a radio program giving marital advice. Ruth Hussey, as the wife, makes her husband live the life of a bachelor and it is upon this theme that the story unfolds.

Produced by John W. Considine, Jr., and directed by Edward Buzzell, much of the comedy is derived from the gangland slang of Sheldon Leonard, remembered for a similar portrayal in "Tall, Dark and Handsome," in which Cesar Romero was starred last season.

Supporting these players are Felix Bressart, as the old and penniless professor who really wrote the book and who is the brains behind the "bachelor's" theories, Lee Bowman as the publisher, and Sam Levene, who, for his characterization as the horse race bookie, gathers his share of the many laughs.

Previewed in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer projection room in New York where a trade press audience laughed often and audibly expressed their approval of the picture at its conclusion.—GEORGE SPIRES.

The Return of Daniel Boone

(Columbia, 1940-41)

Western

A western is a western for a' that, and "The Return of Daniel Boone" falls under this category.

The hero under the sombrero is none other than the grandson of Daniel Boone, who carries on in the traditions of his illustrious ancestor in name and deed. "Dan Boone," enacted by Bill Elliott, becomes associated with "Leach Killgrain" (Ray Bennett) and "Mayor Elwell" (Walter Soderling). The "Mayor" boosts taxes to the point where the ranchers cannot pay, and "Killgrain's" nefarious plot is to buy the lands at foreclosure sales. Nothing of the sort happens, not with "Dan Boone" around.

Bill Elliott, while not a western glamour boy, is very adept with his hands, especially with a gun in them. Betty Miles is too busy doing some fancy shooting on her own account to supply any love interest as the heroine. Dub Taylor sings a song or two and spends the rest of the time resisting the blandishments of "Melinda" and "Matilda," enacted by the Rodik Twins.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Assistant director, Milton Carter. Director of photography, Philip Tannura. Film editor, Mel Thorsen. Sound engineer, George Cooper. Gentleman from Dixie

Blue-Grass Comedy-Drama

Showmen who have prospered with exhibition of the Tex Ritter Westerns produced by Edward Finney can make a special point of notifying their customers that this turning of the producer away from the field of horse-opera and into the domain of straight comedy-drama is an item quite out of the ordinary for their interest.

To be sure, Producer Finney brought over to this new field of endeavor that foundation-factor of audience interest, the horse, but this is a race horse and he not only wins his event but plays an important part in the story by trampling the villain and thus solving everybody's problems.

The scene is the Blue Grass country, without too many of the hackneyed trimmings, and the plot moves along steadily against a background of music supplied by the Clarence Muse singers.

Jack La Rue, as the hero under a cloud; Mary Ruth, an eight-year-old accomplished in musical and an actress besides; Clarence Muse as an hostler, and leading the singing assignment, and Mist-a-Shot, the trick horse, stand out as to performances.

Direction by Al Herman is successful in maintaining momentum and mood without sacrifice of plausibility.

Produced with no designs upon Music Hall playing time, the film is a tribute to Producer Finney's talent for making a budget yield screen value.

Previewed at the California Studios, Hollywood, to the expressed satisfaction of a large turnout of press and profession.—W. R. W.

A Day in Soviet Russia

(Anglo American, 1941-42)

Soviet Documentary

Autres temps autres moeurs is the natural consideration when Soviet pictures enter the box office arena. This record of life in the Soviet Union comes at a time when Russia is an ally of the democracies. This consideration, plus the answer it will supply to the natural curiosity of the audience should put "A Day in Soviet Russia" in the front box office class. The film is completely uncontroversial, without any political tendencies, and has Quentin Reynolds giving a vivid and racy commentary.

The film was taken on one day, August 24, 1940, by 97 cameramen stationed all over the Union, from the frozen wastes of the Arctic to the Asiatic edges of Vladivostock. It opens at dawn on the Eastern seas, closes with the Red Star shining over the Kremlin. Glimpses of Kalinin, Stalin and Budienny are mixed with shots of the holiday homes of the working people decorated for service in the factories. The 97 cameras penetrate into factories and mines, catch the Red Army tanks and sunbathers in the Azov Sea, stop here for a Khirghiz wedding, there for a tennis tournament in Moscow, show automobile and motor boat trials, ballets on a battleship, Pravda being printed, linger on mountain tops, scud through wheatfields.

It is necessarily a hurried and an incomplete survey and better passages have been seen than some, but it is interesting and its absence of disquisition and direct propaganda will aid its passage through the projectors.

Shown to a mixed trade and press audience in London the film provoked much intermittent applause and was accorded an extremely warm ovation at its close. The topical angle seemed to be the one which exhibitors were bent on exploiting.—Aubrey Flanagan.

A Central Newsreel Studio production. Distributed by Anglo-American. Supervising editor: Herbert Marshall. Editor, Sidney Cole. Directors, M. Slutsky and R. Karmen. Scenario by B. Yagling and M. Tseitlin. Chief cameramen, R. Karmen, M. Oshurkov and B. Nebylitsky. Lyrics by V. Lebedev-Kumach. Music by Daniel Pokrass. Commentary by Quentin Reynolds. Running time, 60 minutes. General audience classification.

Sing Another Chorus

Musical Comedy

Off in 64 minutes, and no strain on the mentality during any of them, this fabrication of tunes that tinkle and gags that serve their purpose is something for double-billing showmen to have in mind against that day when the long, tragic, sombre or intellectual super-production, just now becoming plentiful, comes to playdate.

The seven songs numbers in this, by Milton Rosen and Everett Carter, take care of a good deal of the running time. They are sung by various members of the cast and, for the most part, danced by one or more of the principals backed by a small chorus.

The performance of these numbers occurs in the course of a story about the backing of a musical show by a dress goods manufacturer, complete with sheriff bearing attachment, and this telling of the tale is enough like the "Tillie the Toiler" telling of it to suggest that showmen who use both attractions separate them widely on the calendar.

A point of exploitability is the fact that this film marks the ascension of Jane Frazee to star-billing.

Production by Ken Goldsmith is equal to the demands of the enterprise, as is direction by Charles Lamont.

Previewed at the studio to a press audience which manifested no signs of fervor for or against.—W. R. W.

Gambling Daughters

(Producers Releasing Corp., 1940-41)

Melodrama

This is a mystery-melodrama with a background set in a fashionable girls' school. The plot unfolds the tribulations of two wealthy students who become embroiled in the blackmailing schemes of a mysterious gambler and his two thug-minions. In executing the orders of the chief, to the detriment of innocent victims, the underlings involve the girls deeply in mounting gambling debts. The girls are forced to steal precious jewels from their parents, whereupon the insurance company puts a detective on the case to trace down the clues. The ace detective becomes an instructor in the school, learns how the girls are being intimidated and finally uncovers the identity of the gambling den's chief who turns out to be none other than the French professor in the institution.

The plot is rather weak, but producer T. H. Richmond and director Max Nosseck, with the help of a cast including Cecilia Parker, Roger Pryor, Robert Baldwin and Sigi Arno, manage to hold the interest of the audience until the final denouement.

Doctors Don't Tell

Melodrama About Medicine

Doctors, who heal mankind, and criminals, who destroy mankind, are the two conflicting social forces which conflict in this interesting picture.

"Dr. Ralph Sawyer" (John Beal) and "Dr. Frank Blake" (Edward Norris) who have just been graduated and open offices together, reach a minor variance over the affections of "Diana Wayne" (Florence Rice), night club singer, and a major variance over ethics. In an effort to make money quickly so he can marry "Diana," "Blake" accepts the blandishments offered by "Joe Grant" (Douglas Fowley), a gangster. "Sawyer" leaves "Blake" and becomes a Medical Examiner in the District Attorney's office. When the gangster is involved in a murder, he forces "Blake" to operate on his face to remove a scar, and thus avoid identification. Contrary to the title, "doctors do tell"; "Blake" appears at the trial of the gangster to give the necessary testimony. He loses "Diana," his license to practice medicine, and then his life.

The principals all turn in good performances: John Beal is properly serious as the ethical doctor, Florence Rice is engaging as the heroine and Edward Norris is attractive as the doctor who learns too late the value of virtue.

Among the Living

Melodrama and a Mad Man

This thriller-chiller type melodrama stands head and shoulders above its kind in point of realism, plausibility and performance. It opens in a graveyard, moves to the basement of a supposedly haunted house where a mad man has been imprisoned for fifteen years, then releases the maniac to roam the town and follows him through a sequence of murders to his death in the graveyard where the picture started. It's got everything the shock film trade demands.

Produced with far more skill and imagination than most pictures in its field, this thriller stays within the bounds of logic and packs for that reason a wallop few have equalled. The mad man who commits the murders does so for a reason that squares with the realities of dementia and they are the more terrible because realistically motivated. A sequence in a cheap cafe is a masterpiece of sordid reflexes, the maniac's pursuit and murder of a girl he meets there are terrifyingly authenticated and the final sequences in which a mob storms the haunted house in quest of the killer are without precedent in their impact.

Performances by Albert Dekker, as the maniac and his twin brother; Susan Hayward, as the flirtatious companion of the unsuspected mad man, and Harry Carey, as the doctor who knows the secret but does not reveal it until three lives have been lost, are powerful in every particular.

Production by Sol C. Siegel is tops for the field it serves and direction by Stuart Heisler makes every inch of footage an effective part of the powerful whole.

Subject matter and treatment by and large, suggest limiting the film to adult presentation.

(20th-Fox, 1941-42)

Zane Gray Remake

George Montgomery is today's star of this remake of a Zane Grey story remembered by oldsters in show business as among the money-makers of its kind in yesteryear. This telling of the story is achieved in 57 minutes and without expansions for purposes of super-exploitation, but is nevertheless a solid Western within its pretentions.

Performances by the veteran Francis Ford and William Farnum, in secondary roles, are items to remark upon to the customers.

The story, it will be recalled, is about the son of a murdered sheriff who, setting out to obtain justice in a country and time suited to six-gun heroics, gets into various troubles and out of them on his own power. Mr. Montgomery and associates attend to the details admirably.

Direction by James Tinling keeps the story line clear and the action flowing smoothly.

We Go Fast

(20th-Fox, 1941-42)

Contemporary Comedy

More notable for the novelty of its background material than for use made of it, this light comedy of contemporary manners as reflected by two motorcycle policemen and people who come in contact with them furnishes mild amusement along somewhat unusual lines.

Lynn Bari, in a way remindful of Claudette Colbert, and Alan Curtis, whose portrayal suggests John Garfield, Sheila Ryan, Don De Forest and Ernest Truex, provide the principal entertainment, Gerald Mohr figuring importantly after entering the picture at midpoint.

The story, which alternates as to emphasis on two lines, concerns a breakdown of motor traffic regulations following the handing down of a fixed verdict in a court action, and a swindle practiced upon a refrigerator manufacturer by a bogus foreign potentate. Concentration upon one or the other might have produced a more effective result.

Slang, wisecrack and the more physical variety of humor are relied upon, not always successfully, to get laughs, the story never becomes very earnest.

Crosby Croons a Hit

About half way through this more or less historical accounting for the rise of rhythmic music in the world, Bing Crosby steps into the chorus of "Melancholy Baby" and sings the rafters right off of the auditorium. He had the exhibitors present at the Los Angeles trade-show forgetting their buyer-resistance utterly and clapping like just that many happy ultimate consumers.

But "Melancholy Baby" is just one of nine hits tunes of other years sung by Mr. Crosby and others in this hit musical of today and tomorrow. Among the others are "Cuddle Up a Little Closer," "Wait 'Till the Sun Shines Nellie," "Memphis Blues," "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," done in the illustrated song media and with technicolor lending a note of authenticity to the slides, and that old reliable "St. Louis Blues" itself. There's a new song by Johnny Mercer, additionally, which belongs in this classic catalogue.

When it isn't musical, which is most of the time, the picture is concerned with depicting the rise of ragtime from its dusky beginnings in the late nineties to a healthy hold on the population in 1915 or thereabouts. The tale is told in terms of the adventures of a jazz band headed by Mr. Crosby as clarinetist and vocalist with Mary Martin as feature singer and Brian Donlevy blowing hot licks on a trumpet. Rochester is along as valet to supply some comedy, J. Carrol Naish is met up with as an early day gangster to provide some menace and Tiny Carolyn Lee as Miss Martin's infant aunt, supplies the charm of cuteness.

Victor Schertzinger, never more at home than in direction of a picture pertaining primarily to music, missed never a chance to combine story and score with loss to neither and profit to both.

Monta Bell rates a bow as associate producer.

The film compares most directly, as to type, with "Alexander's Ragtime Band," its appeal in large part being based upon the appeal of the old song hits and their power to reawaken memories of its audience. Orchestration of these is in the mode of the period of their origin. There's no age limit or other ceiling on the film's potential usefulness.

Mexican Spitfire's Baby

Lupe and Leon Continue

This, the latest of the Lupe Velez-Leon Errol "Lord Epping" series, is of the same pattern as the previous efforts, a pattern for the most part designed for frequent belly-laughs. The title stems from one of the earlier of the series.

It is a robust—and sometimes rough—comedy of errors centered around the usual blundering endeavors of Errol—Uncle Matt—to bring happiness to the one-year married Velez and Charles Buddy Rogers, by arranging for them to adopt a French war orphan. The measures for the adoption are placed in the hands of "Lord Epping"—the other half of the Errol doublerole, and when his Lordship arrives with the luscious and grown-up Fifi, the war orphan, things, as to be expected, happen. They happen just a bit too long for continuous laughter and attention, but while they happen, the comedy rocks ahead, not at all times, however, for family patronage.

In addition to the star names, there is the usually sputtering and continental-mannered Fritz Feld to add to the mirthful confusion, which he does as the fiancee of Fifi, whom he misplaced at the boat. Fritz, as an officer in the French Chasseurs—pronounced "chaser" by Zazu Pitts, another contributor to the fun—pushes the comedy a notch higher with his attempts to duel Errol to assuage his honor.

The story, if the Velez-Errol duo needs one—moves on to a resort hotel, where Errol tries to hide Fifi, while "Uncle Matt" squares his ever-suspicious wife and the more suspicious Lupe. Arrive "Lord Epping," Mrs. Epping and a host of others and everything is finally cleared up in the conventional farce comedy manner. In addition to custard pies and knives, some mud-spattered double-barreled dialog is thrown which is hardly needed to swell the goodly laugh total.

Previewed in the RKO Radio New York exchange projection room to a small press audience and a scattering of exhibitors who for the most part gave evidence of being amused by the antics.—A. MIKE VOGEL.

Glamour Boy

(Paramount Pictures, 1941-42)

Musical Comedy Romance

Producer Sol C. Siegel and his colleagues have turned out a superior all around gloom chaser. Funnyman F. Hugh Herbert, he of the expressive hands and zaney antics, contributed additional dialogue to the picture, which offers a proper setting for Paramount's singing young star, Susanna Foster.

The plot has a Hollywood background with a new twist. Jackie Cooper plays a juvenile actor, who at 18 is a soda jerker, waiting for a come-back into pictures. Marathon Studios hires him to coach a new juvenile in a remake of one of the former star's successes. In a projection room, the old "Skippy" and the new, view a few sequences of the film. In reality, the audience watches Jackie Cooper studying himself on the screen as the real youngster who played the part more than ten years ago. It is a good bit and the preview audience liked its novelty.

The older boy gets embroiled in studio politics, loses his job and is responsible for the quick rise and fall of a girl he has undertaken to advise on how to become a star. The hitherto obnoxious new juvenile resolves his predecessor's troubles to the confusion of all and to his own smug satisfaction.

The story is handled lightly and ably by director Ralph Murphy, and the best laugh lines probably were those contributed by Hugh Herbert. Jackie Cooper plays his juicy part to the hilt, Susanna Foster sings a few songs in a pleasant coloratura, but it's Darryl Hickman as the youngster whom the customers will remember. Walter Abel, in the role of Marathon Studio's chief, gets a good deal of comedy into his portrayal and the rest of the cast, including Jackie Searle, Ann Gillis, Edith Meiser and William Demerest add to the general gaiety.

"Glamour Boy" is of a type to be welcomed by juveniles and their mamas and papas, too.

Night of January 16th

Murder and Mystery

Here is a murder-mystery the unity and impact of which place it near the all-time top of its class. Sol C. Siegel, producer, Joseph Sistrom, associate producer, and William Clemens, director, have concocted a story certain to please all lovers of this type of drama, from presidents up and down. From its arresting beginning to its climax, the story runs along smoothly, without cheap, melodramatic tricks, until, in synthesis, the parts fit as neatly as a jig-saw puzzle.

The three characters around whom the picture revolves are 'Bjorn Faulkner" (Nils Asther), who has to explain a missing $20,000,000 to his board of directors; 'Kit Lane" (Ellen Drew), who has a secretarial and personal interest in "Faulkner," and "Steve Van Ruyle" (Robert Preston), a sailor, who has inherited a position on "Faulkner's" board of directors. "Faulkner" is presumably murdered, "Kit Lane" is falsely accused of the murder, and "Van Ruyle" assumes the responsibility of solving the mystery, clearing "Kit Lane" of the murder charge, and then giving her his own name.

The cast is uniformly excellent. Nils Asther makes a most attractive villain-tycoon; never did a man explain away a missing $20,000,000 more gracefully. Miss Drew is a very pretty secretary-heroine and Robert Preston turns in a neat performance as the sailor-sleuth. There are also some excellent comedy sequences by a drunk and a gasoline station proprietor.

The sets throughout the picture are lavish, elaborate and ahead of their time in decor.

Previewed at the Normandie Theatre in New York, where a trade-press audience responded appreciatively to the humorous sequences and applauded spontaneously at the end.—IRENE SMOLEN

Fantasia

(RKO-Walt Disney)

Screen Poetry

"Screen poetry" perhaps best describes Walt Disney's "Fantasia." The general box office value of "screen poetry" is an unknown quantity.

There is a charm in many of the images created by the vivid imaginations of Mr. Disney and his fellow workers which is without equal in previous motion pictures. The picture is built around eight classical music selections played by the Philadelphia Orchestra directed by Leopold Stokowski; Deems Taylor supplies the connecting narration. The selections are "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor," Bach; "The Nutcracker Suite," Tchaikovsky; "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," Dukas; "The Pastoral Symphony," Beethoven; "Rites of Spring," Stravinsky; "Dance of the Hours," Ponchielli; "Night on Bald Mountain," Moussorgsky and "Ave Maria," Franz Schubert.

Previewed at the Broadway theatre in New York to an audience of some 1,500 members of the press and other invited guests who, after being puzzled in the beginning, enthusiastically applauded artistic and technical triumphs, and at the end were speculating about the film's box office possibilities.

Produced by Walt Disney Production. P. C. A. Certificate No. 5920. Running time, 135 minutes. Release date, not set. General audience classification.

Charley's Aunt

(20th Century-Fox)

New Season Flagship

This flagship of the company's first block-of-five pictures for sale under consent decree conditions is in every sense a man-o'-war, a dreadnaught built to breast any storm or shatter any claim which may be riding the sea of show business.

Big gun of the craft is, of course, Jack Benny, top man in radio and among the tops in films at this point, and the big news about him in this picture is that he's better in it than he ever was in any other.

Equivalent in firing range is the play it pertains to, a property which has amused virtually every adult and most of the children now living, not once but many times, yet has distinguished itself, notably in the case of last year's sensationally successful Broadway revival, as perhaps the most sure-fire repeater in the annals of comedy.

The Smiling Ghost

(Warner Brothers)

Mystery Comedy

Producer Edmund Grainger and Director Lewis Seiler, responsible for Warners estimable drama "International Squadron," also made this one. This is a comedy. The manner of disclosure of the plot is deficient in suspense and humor.

That plot concerns a wealthy and beautiful girl, who the scandal sheets describe as "The Kiss of Death Girl." Men who become engaged to her meet violent death. For a stipulated sum, a newly graduated chemical engineer, agrees to be engaged to the girl. Various attempts are made on his life by "The Smiling Ghost."

Father Takes a Wife

(RKO)

Swanson Returns in Comedy

After an absence of seven years, Gloria Swanson returns to the screen in Lee Marcus' production of the RKO Radio picture, "Father Takes a Wife," co-starring with Adolphe Menjou. Miss Swanson's last film was the Fox "Music in the Air," in 1934. In a well-paced comedy written by Dorothy and Herbert Fields, the one-time Keystone and Mack Sennett star has ample opportunity to show that she still is a good trouper, and waltzes through a number of comedy scenes with ease, grace and charm.

Story plot centers around the senior member of a large shipping concern, who, after spending twenty-five years building a career, goes off the deep end and falls in love with a glamorous actress.

The picture provides good, light entertainment, principally because of the comedy situations and some keen-edged darts in the dialogue.

Lydia

(United Artists)

Drama

There's no other word for it. "Lydia" is terrific! Between them, Alexander Korda, producer, and Julien Duvivier, director, have taken the script which Ben Hecht and Sam Hoffenstein provided and turned out a romance-drama of taste, charm and pathos. Not since "Wuthering Heights" has Merle Oberon, as the title character, given so vital and enchanting a performance. Her "Lydia" leaves the shadows of the screen and brings all the verisimilitude of a woman's love story with forceful impact to the audience.

The plot of "Lydia," closely allied to "Un Carnet de Bal," which Mr. Duvivier wrote and directed in France three years ago and which was released here as "Dance of Life," traces the tale over a 40-year period of a young girl born into a Boston Back Bay family of wealth and position who, during her lifetime, is beloved of four men, only one of whom is fortunate enough to have known her love.

This is not a film for the children. Tell your patrons to leave them home, but to bring everybody else in the family, including Aunt Jennie, because "Lydia" provides 103 minutes of fine entertainment. It's romance at its best.

Buy Me That Town

(Paramount)

Gangsters Go Straight

This treatment of the racketeer-regeneration theme is a substantial program-balancer.

Strength of the story emanates from a fresh basic situation, a racketeers' cash purchase of an unincorporated town, impoverished by closing of the factory which established it. His racket is to provide a hideout for wealthy men evading arrest, defaulters and such, by arresting them for speeding and holding them in jail, safe against other claims upon their persons. He and his aides, who take the town positions of authority, are won over to honest ways by local associates, including of course a girl, and they repel a former pal and boss who attempts to take over, restoring the town to prosperity when they reopen the factory to handle a national defense contract.

Played for comedy rather than melodrama, although not neglecting this aspect, the picture ripples along its course without overdoing sentiment or the pastoral note.

Charlie Chan in Rio

Charlie Chan Mystery

For entertainment and commercial purposes this latest episode in the career of Charlie Chan should excite the interest of patrons and exhibitors who have found the series entertaining and profitable. Melodrama, mystery, comedy and a thin but definite trace of romance, suspense and action are combined in the story.

This episode is done in the best tradition of the Sol. M. Wurtzel style, with a maximum entertainment value and a minimum of extraneous matter. "Charlie Chan in Rio" presents the famed character and his son in another case of tracking down a murderess in Rio and eventually exposing and bringing to justice her murderer. This picture, like its predecessors, follows the standard formula which has been used so successfully before.

JOURNEY IN TUNISIA (Col.)
Tour (3551)

Amidst the white villas of old Carthage lies the city of Tunis. Once it was a Phoenician town which prospered for centuries until its trade was taken over by its new neighbors Carthage and Utica. Next it was a Berber City that was built largely out of the stones from the ruins of Carthage and then it became Oriental created by the Arab invaders and finally it became French. It is a modern metropolis laid out with broad palm-fringed avenues and splendid homes. From Tunis the journey is carried on through the plains to the gigantic coliseum of El Jem once the domain of the Caesars. Southward the journey continues to a beautiful oasis on the edge of the Sahara lined with thousands of palm trees where the growing of dates is the principal industry. This quaint little country seems to be set apart and unaffected by world battles and the fact that her land is one of the pawns of the struggle. For ages, new masters have come and gone and have ruled without greatly affecting the existence of her inhabitants. Andre de la Varre has turned in a photographed record of this great old country.

KING OF THE TEXAS RANGERS (Rep.)
Serial—VB Episodes (181)

Captain King, of the Texas Rangers, is murdered after he has learned that John Barton, supposedly a respectable citizen, and "His Excellency," a mysterious alien, are the leaders of a sabotage gang engaged in destroying the Bordertown oil fields. His son, Tom King ("Slingin' Sammy Baugh), a famous football player, joins the Rangers, eager to avenge his father's death.

He goes to Mexico with Pedro Garcia of the Rurales (Mexican police) to burn one of the gang's hideouts. There he finds that his sweetheart, Sally Crane, a newspaper editor, has been trapped in a blaze in the oil fields. King rescues Sally.

Following chapters concern the attempt by the saboteurs to liquidate professor Nelson, discoverer of a new aviation gasoline; ruin the oil in the storage tanks by putting in carbosulphide; their capture of Sally; the plot to blow up a dam and flood the oil fields, and the grand climax wherein the saboteurs are eliminated when their plane crashes into a dirigible.

EXPLORING SPACE (Col.)
Cinescope (3971)

This short was photographed in the Hayden Planetarium of the American Museum of Natural History in New York. The planetarium is a theatre of the stars, with the stage as the whole creation and the actors the bright celestial objects of endless space and eternal time. Streaking upward from Mother Earth, the land falls below us like a dropping leaf. We speed through space, calling on the moon, the regulator of tides; to Venus, beautiful because of her dazzling brilliance; and to Mars, which scientists believe our planet will be like in some remote future when life on earth has run its course. We stop to examine the Sun, so large that there would be parking space for more than a million earths inside it. Then we continue on swiftly toward great nebulae of glowing suns, gas and dust which whirl and flare like enormous pinwheels. We are travelling a strange and forbidding realm, trillions of miles high, without maps, as did Columbus when first he sailed across the Atlantic, and like Columbus, discover new worlds.

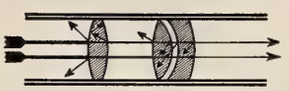
IS THERE A BURGLAR IN THE HOUSE?

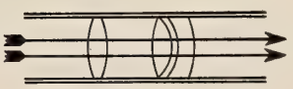
...the answer is YES! He steals light, definition and contrast from the picture on your screen

RCA "MAGICOTE" LENS COATING SERVICE



LIGHT REFLECTION is the burglar in your theatre! Reflection of light by every surface of your projection-lens ... reflections that steal as much as 30% of the light that should be directed to the screen! But that's not all—

A portion of the light scattered by the lens-surface does reach the screen. But in the wrong places! Diffuse, extraneous, unwanted light is scattered into dark parts of the image . . . and your picture loses contrast, crispness and quality. In color-pictures, the loss is even more apparent: for colored light, scattered where it doesn't belong, creates false values and "unnatural" appearance.



The answer is simple enough . . . the RCA MAGICOTE Lens Coating Service! Applicable to all types of lenses, old and new, MAGICOTE is a reflection-reducing coating of high efficiency and exceptional durability. No sealing of lenses is needed—no extra expense for recasing. All lens surfaces, both inside and out, can be treated . . . and MAGICOTE can be wiped clean without damage!

Your nearby RCA Photophone Representative or District Office will gladly tell you the whole story, at your convenience. Drop a card, or phone today.

RCA VICTOR PREFERRED TYPE RADIO TUBES
For Finer Radio Performance

THE OLD WAY, each lens-surface reflects back a portion of the light it is supposed to guide to the screen. Some is lost; some is scattered diffusely over the screen—spoiling contrast and definition—and color-rendering in color pictures!

RCA MAGICOTE Lens Coating greatly reduces reflection. More useful light is correctly directed to the screen; less is lost or scattered. MAGICOTE can be applied to any old or new lens; lens need not be recased, and can be cleaned any time by any competent projectionist.

The INQUIRY and THE ANSWER

OUT on the rim of the hurricane of hate that is the war are lesser whirlwinds of policies and purposes, causes and contentions. In one of these, for the day of its passing, the motion picture industry of America is being tossed and spun.

That is how the motion picture has come to be on trial, in a curious sort of inquisitorial fashion, in a caucus room in the national Capitol.

The charge purports to be that the makers of motion pictures are engaged in making screen propaganda for war and participation in war.

The motion picture often before in its career, still young among the arts, has been elected for kindred attentions, differing from those of today only in the intensities of the limelight.

This choice of the motion picture is readily traceable to the fact that, unlike the press and stage, it is not fortified by long established rights and traditions of rights. Additionally the screen is made the more a shining mark by its inevitably spectacular nature and its acceptance by the millions. Since the summer of 1896 attack upon it has been intermittently a means to publicity ends by all manner of militants for all manner of causes. It has become entirely the successor to and inheritor from the once decried "dime novel" and the subsequent "yellow press". It is to be remembered, also, that the screen is successor to the stage, not only as an art, but also to what remains of the ancient curses upon the theatre.

UNLIKE the stage and press of the printed page, the motion picture is also the more available to the militant marksmen because of a certain institutional solidarity. The stage is anywhere there is an actor and a footlight. The press is anywhere there is a writer and a linotype. They are not only fortified in the national mind by tradition, but they are also diffused. But the motion picture is also a place. It is called Hollywood. It is a spot on the map to be covered by one finger. Its fifty-mile circle can be, and is, swept by one bombsight.

That is why it is the motion picture which has come to trial, in this curiously inquisitorial fashion in a caucus room in the national Capitol.

Interestingly, but hardly consistently, this charge of propaganda laid against the motion picture and its Hollywood is made by propagandists for propaganda.

It becomes necessary to be most explicit about what is propaganda and today's meaning of that word in common parlance and acceptance. Once it meant promulgation by propagation, a decidedly open process. In less than three decades it has gone through a deepening coloration just as, long before, "enormous", which first meant big and vast, gave us "enormity", meaning something vastly wicked. We have thus arrived at the practical fact that "propaganda" today describes methods of seeking to compel acceptance of beliefs or opinions by devices of deviousness and indirection—three-cushion shots, not straight caroms.

It is hardly necessary to observe that these many years Motion Picture Herald, when occasion has arisen, has spoken in vigorous direct opposition to propaganda in motion pictures presented as entertainment. A few years ago when the Herald, its publisher and its editor were under special attack from persons of the Left seeking to drive their causes on to the theatre screen, this page made the earnest declaration that this publication would oppose propaganda invasion of entertainment until Hell froze over, and thereafter on the ice. We have not yet seen any ice.

THE definitions of propaganda to be derived from the citations that emanate from that caucus room in Washington would include, most sweepingly, any picture which could be construed as for anything. That could be carried into a charge that "Smilin' Thru", so basic that it has been made with success about four times, is propaganda for love. The Herald holds that it is not that, being an expression in utter candour—without deviousness and indirection.

Another picture, more widely known than seen, is "The River", made by Mr. Pare Lorentz. It was his study of the old, old problem of Ole Man River, and it was in behalf of a solution of that problem in the terms of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The picture was addressed, in scenic and cinematic guise, at a situation of rife political issues in Congress and a cause which found itself in need of popular support across the nation.

It sought to create opinion to support adoption of a TVA solution of the river problem by paths of emotion, seeking to sell a conclusion without reason. Neither the politicians, or statesmen, nor the public were or are entitled to an opinion about remedy for the river problem, because of their incapacity to know. A decision could only be legitimately held by competent engineers, and even among them there could be divergences about what to do about remodelling the geography of the continent. "The River" conveyed notions, but it did not make engineers out of its audience. "The River" was genuine, if not pure, propaganda. The more it looked like something else, the more it was that.

Hollywood had no finger in the making of "The River", a product of the United States Film Service.

Hollywood and all the motion picture is, however, as inevitably as the stage and press, subject to the influences of the times and the currents of popular interest. Autumn brings football dramas and college stories. Christmas gets attention on every December magazine cover. There is probably not a fiction writer in New York attic or Berkshire bungalow sitting today looking at a cobwebbed ceiling who does not reflect on plots laden with tanks and warplanes, submarines, life rafts in storm-swept seas, spies, refugees, cannon factories, clash of battle, intrigue and death rays. Bookstalls, newsstands and stage are most aware of war.

There should be no considerable wondering, then, that the motion picture, that art of expression so intimate with the interests and emotions of the people, should present pictures in awareness of war and all its dramatically conspicuous concerns. What's in the air will be everywhere, especially in a democracy.

IT is plain enough that there is not a unanimous, perhaps not even a well unified, public opinion about this war and our part in it. It is none-the-less manifest that there is for the United States a clear statement of policy, uttered by those who are qualified, by public office, on the national policy. These authorized spokesmen have declared that national policy to be "all-out", even to a shooting navy, against the Nazi Axis as a foe, voting the while American billions to the aid of Britain and its allies.

A sector of American opinion which is not aligned with the so stated official national policies is represented by the Committee which accuses the motion picture in Washington. It would seem most apparent that the difference properly is with the Administration and that public which it represents.

The quarrel is not properly with either the nation's press, the stage of New York or the motion picture of Hollywood-and-America.

The movement of opposition to the officially established and stated national policies is a proper part of the functioning of this republic. The processes and expedients by which the motion picture as an expression is subjected to what is known as "smear" are not defensible.

THE INQUIRY and THE ANSWER

[CONCLUDED]

Also no phase of the steps by which the motion picture is hailed to bar in a caucus room in the Capitol is defensible. The hearing has been self-described as a "grand jury" inquiry to decide if an investigation should be had. Unlike grand jury investigations, the hearing is for the immediate public ear. Unlike the grand jury of American legal practice, the indictment has been voted first, the testimony sought afterwards.

The ineptitudes and revealing awkwardnesses of the procedure have become more and more manifest day by day, a clumsy concept stepping on its own feet.

THE chief braintruster of this Washington manifestation is Mr. John T. Flynn, described as "economist and writer". Mr. Flynn, and many another, understand very well the process of "making the story stand up". Persons of experience in journalism are familiar with the devices by which a headline is written first and then a story to put under it. One of the classics is the tale of that managing editor in Chicago who, not long after the Wright Brothers took off at Kittyhawk, bellowed an assignment: "Airship Rams Submarine". The story was in the next edition.

Mr. Flynn as the committee's braintruster is the author of much more than his recital on what is called the witness stand in this hearing. He is quoted, also, in an urging that the members of the committee examine on the screen an array of some forty-five to fifty pictures which have been cited as examples of propaganda for war.

One may wonder if Mr. Flynn has seen all these pictures? If he has seen them as levelled-eyed as the public for which they were made? Several hundred newspaper reviewers have seen the pictures concerned, and a large proportion of the American people have seen them. It is evident that if the product concerned were of that positive biased and propagandist nature, sharp evidences in press and public reaction would have long since been manifest.

Examination of what the public reactions have been would be more important evidence of what the pictures were, what they did to the people, than rereviews by a group of Senators concerned with supporting an indictment and advancing a cause.

The motion picture has been brought to the caucus room under no law of the land. It has arrived there by political devices under the semblance of authority of government. That is a technique of totalitarians.

The proceeding is a method of publicity. As against the motion picture it has been conducted with far more success up to this time than the motion picture need have permitted.

ALL of the initial attention, or most of it, the flamboyant days of the hearing with the story new to the public, has been filled with the indictment, when the industry and Hollywood should have been speaking its piece. The industry went into Washington on the defensive and with the attitude of defendant at bar. If one has the lawyers' order of reasoning and perspective of procedure that is easy to understand, easier to understand than approve. That is the way one moves before a judge and jury presumed impartial in the pursuit of facts and justice. That is not the way one proceeds before the court of public opinion. There a stern chase is always a long chase, and there denial never overtakes accusation.

The motion picture is itself a great instrument of public relations, and it has in its service many experts in the art of communication, with demonstrations of performance in that field of public relations. The motion picture has integrated with it, too, a completely nationwide representation of exhibitor showmen whose interest and destinies are tied with the screen. These instruments and experts have not been used. These showmen have not been enlisted, informed, urged with clear exposition and facts. Everywhere there is a theatre there is a place to tell the story to a man who cares, who lives with and talks to his community. The sum total of those communities is the American public—the only court that can render a judgment of importance in the case at bar—in that caucus room in Washington.

The questions and trial are there, with the inquisitors and the whole bag of tricks, but the judgment, the only judgment that counts, is out across the whole United States.

THE motion picture, on the facts, both as to the content of the pictures and the procedure of Hollywood, film capital of an America committed to a policy, is in a potentially strong position. That position is not declared by legalistic denials and gestures at irrelevant matters. It has its own excellent story to tell.

That caucus room in the Capitol is only the place where the story gets on the wires, so far.

It is most earnestly to be hoped that the motion picture will waste little time, now, and at this late hour, despite all the delays and fencing that has been had, in getting before the people with the facts, getting them in the record at Washington, too.

The motion picture can not afford the possibility of permitting the conveyance to the public of an order of impression adverse to the box office. That need not be.

This Week in the News

Repercussions

ECHOES and repercussions reverberated at mid-week in Washington from the Nye-Wheeler-Clark Senate subcommittee public airing of "grand jury" proceedings against the American screen, on the charge that it is a carrier of war propaganda from Hollywood. (Story on the hearings starts on page 16.)

During an intermission in the hearings from last Monday to next Tuesday, the President, at a regular press conference, side-remarked belittlement of the cause for the probing, and, word started seeping through from Senate quarters that not all Senators were in sympathy with the proceedings.

Open expression in this connection finally came late Wednesday when Senator Scott Wike Lucas, from downstate Illinois, speaking as chairman of the Committee on Audit and Control of the Senate's Contingent Fund, declared he was giving thought to the question of how far the Nye-Wheeler subcommittee would go with its investigation without specific Senate authorization.

"As chairman of the Committee on Control," Senator Lucas said, "I have a responsibility in connection with the expenditure of funds that I cannot overlook, and which I intend to exercise at the proper time."

The subcommittee is acting under a general resolution which the Senate passes for each standing committee at the opening of a new Congress. This resolution authorizes the holding of hearings and the calling of persons and papers. However, under these general resolutions there is no allocation of any fixed sum of money to a committee.

Although emphasizing that it was not his desire to stifle the inquiry he nevertheless felt that there was a distinct difference between holding hearings on bills that await legislative action and entering on an extensive investigation without passage of a special resolution of inquiry. He also said that it was for subcommittee members to decide how far they should go under this general authority.

'Viva Mickey'

MICKEY MOUSE is the goodwill envoy for whom the citizens of Latin America have a very warm welcome. At least dispatches from Buenos Aires, Wednesday, indicated that Argentine citizens greeted Mickey's creator, Walt Disney, with more "Vivas" and a warmer reception Tuesday than was evinced for previous Hollywood "ambassadors of goodwill."

Argentine President Ortiz, who has been ill and in retirement for almost a year, emerged from seclusion to greet Mr. Disney.

Censoring War Censors

CONGRESSIONAL resolutions calling for an investigation of censorship of motion pictures, newsreels, radio and the press by the U. S. War and Navy Departments were tabled Monday by the House of Representatives following the receipt of assurances from the acting heads of those departments that no such specific action is contemplated.

However, it was revealed by the military it is proposed to seek authority for a censorship of international communications.

Department officials assured House committees in charge of the measures that no domestic censorship is planned, other than the cooperative censorship now applying to military and naval matters.

Only the other week, a U. S. warship boarding party, with sidearms, halted a yacht in Los Angeles harbor, boarded the boat and seized film in the camera of a professional Hollywood feature camera crew.

Newsreels off to War

NEWS and newsreel coverage of Iceland, ever since American troops occupied the Arctic island some six weeks ago, has been fraught with "bristling" difficulties, principally because, at first, the U. S. State Department refused to grant press and newsreel permission to visit the territory and then, later, when President Roosevelt gave his official "green light" sign for coverage, the Army and Navy officials frowned, unwilling to lend "publicity" to America's operations on the island.

Some three weeks ago, a group set out for Iceland: Neil Sullivan, cameraman for Pathe News; Larry Kennedy, for Fox Movietone; and Abe Schulman, photographer for International News Service and Bjorn Bjornson, representing National Broadcasting. It was disclosed at mid-week that thus far they had not arrived; that they are on a ship in a convoy and that it is difficult to determine at the moment when they will arrive—the U. S. Navy Department requires utmost secrecy concerning convoy moves.

Although Pathe and Fox are the only two newsreels that have representatives en route to the northern island, check on Wednesday revealed that a "pool" had been arranged for all.

Meanwhile, some of the reels prepared to release, for Saturday's issues, first films of the Canadian and British invasion of Spitzbergen. The films were released to all by the British Ministry of Information and arrived in New York by Clipper on Wednesday. Paramount plans to issue about 300 or 400 feet; Pathe about two minutes of the reels and others approximately the same. The films depict demolition of the radio station which the Nazis set up in Spitzbergen; evacuation to England of about 1,000 Norwegian natives; destruction of coal mines and other return "blitzkreig" tactics which the British air and land forces visited on the Nazi-occupied peninsula.

Showmanship Kickoff

THE Autumn excitements of football, professional and amateur, are already being turned in the direction of theatre box-offices as managers plan pigskin promotions aimed to tie-in with their screen attractions. In evidence thereof is a cross-section of such exploitations arranged in various sectors of the nation, set down in this week's Managers' Round Table, starting on page 67.

Fidler Gossip

ONE effect of radio chatterbox Jimmie Fidler's repsonses to Senate subcommittee interrogations in the Nye-Wheeler-Clark probe of films, Monday, was to send Hollywood memories back over that journalist's somewhat seismographic record of activities and start tongues wagging, not in all instances quotably, with the gossiper this time on the receiving end.

Out of the welter of hearsay and rumour emerged the fact of record that Mr. Fidler, early this year, had filed suit against William R. Wilkerson's Hollywood Reporter, demanding $250,000 damages for statements printed in that publication in connection with the then current reports that the Fidler column was to be dropped from the Los Angeles Times.

Memory of the filing of the suit had been kept green in Hollywood minds less because of the nature of the action or the sum of damages sought, these being commonplace in a community addicted to hair-trigger suings and box car figures, than because of the line, considered a local classic, with which the Hollywood Reporter had tossed off the news of the filing.

Remarked the Reporter, "Look who's suing who."

Reminded by this week's Fidler Washington news, that no news of the suing had been printed since the filing of the action, this publication's court reporter decided to find out what had become of it.

He discovered that the suit had been dismissed by agreement of the principals in Los Angeles Superior Court, on August 26th, with no money involved and attorneys for both sides, when questioned, evidently in agremeent not to disclose who paid the costs of the suit.

Cash on the Line

TAXPAYERS of the United States, including patrons of motion picture theatres, will start paying the heaviest tax bill in history on October 1st under the revenue law approved Wednesday by the Senate and sent immediately to the White House for President Roosevelt's signature. The Senate accepted changes in the measure agreed upon in committee conference with the House by a voice vote after 45 minutes' discussion.

Theatre admission taxes under the new law, were agreed upon by both House and Senate as follows:

"A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription. In the case of persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, children under twelve years of age, members of the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps when in uniform) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at any time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, and equivalent tax shall be collected based on the price charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted. No tax shall be imposed on the amount paid for the admission of a child under 12 years of age if the amount paid is less than 10 cents.

"Section 1701 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to exemptions from admissions tax) shall not apply with respect to amounts paid, on or after the effective date of this part, for admission."

Telling the Public

THE public in and around Los Angeles will hear, from exhibitors direct, commentaries about new pictures when they're current, and not weeks in advance of playing, as has been the practice, up until recently, of Hollywood gossip radio commentators and "bell-ringers."

Twenty Los Angeles independent exhibitors will sponsor a "community-of-interests" radio program, starting shortly, on local Station KMPC, to acquaint the public not only with new product, but, also to set forth existing exhibitor problems. The owners feel the public is made quite familiar with production and distribution matters through various media, but is almost entirely ignorant of exhibitors' functions, which will be explained.

In reviewing new pictures, the exhibitors will give a consensus of trade publication reviews.

Nat Tanchuk, local newspaperman and radio producer, will conduct the program for the exhibitors, whose identities will be disclosed at the start of the series.

New Sales Approach

THE new order in the industry is creating some new distribution procedure, all pointing toward the development of a better understanding by distributors to establish more amicable relations with their customers.

The majors are putting on more special field liaison men to personally visit exhibitors and their organizations. More than ever before, exhibitor complaints are being given special attention. Special promotional forces are starting to tour the land to help the exhibitor promote his product, and, in return, of course, to aid the distributor.

This week one of the large distributors openly admitted mistakes to exhibitors, with the promise that they would be corrected.

Cognizant of the fact that exhibitor dissatisfaction has been expressed and criticisms aimed at Universal's policies on allocation, William A. Scully, general sales manager of the company, went to Philadelphia to tell 150 exhibitors in that territory, that, while "U's" branch and district managers are in complete charge of Universal's business and that all differences should be adjusted by them, he personally would be glad to listen to any exhibitor with a just grievance in order to effect satisfactory correction of any given situation that arose.

"Universal is ambitious," declared Mr. Scully, "and being ambitious, it is quite possible for us to make mistakes. Probably we will continue to make them, but they will be honest mistakes and we are always willing to correct them."

The occasion of Mr. Scully's talk was a luncheon given by Universal's Philadelphia exchange, at the Warwick Hotel.

Beer, Tobacco & Movies

AN object lesson as to what happens to money earned while a nation is at war and the extent of restrictions placed on purchases, was seen in the figures released in England this week for excise receipts of the year ended March 31st, 1941, as compared with receipts for 1939-1940.

Money earned in Britain is going for beer and tobacco, considered there as two good budget stand-bys in time of stress, with excise receipts just over £60,000,000 more this year from taxes on beer. Tobacco receipts showed an extra £55,000,000—a total of about $460,000,000.

Meanwhile, in the United States, it was reported on Wednesday that U. S. film companies will ask the U. S. State Department to aid foreign managers with regard to the recent action of the British-American Stabilization Board to freeze remittances to American film firms in Shanghai. U. S. distributors also are asking that all revenue from distribution on the British Isles be allowed unhampered withdrawal.

Resolution Attacking Inquiry in Washington First Order of Business at Philadelphia Convention; Harmony Is Urged

by M. H. ORODENKER
in Philadelphia

Proposed "concerted action" calling for all-industry unity on major issues facing exhibitors highlighted the three-day 12th annual convention held in Philadelphia this week by Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, with action upon the present Senate committee investigation of motion pictures receiving first consideration on the agenda.

Proposal to adopt a projected plan for a national liaison committee of exhibitors and distributors received deliberate attention. Examination was made of the current tax measure as it affects the industry, and a forum conducted on the new selling plan under the consent decree.

Demands Freedom

Wednesday, shortly after introduction of a resolution calling for an all-industry committee to act as liaison for production, sales and exhibition William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of MGM, told the industry that it must create a united bulwark against designing politicians. He scored the Senate inquiry and demanded for motion pictures the right to conduct business peacefully and settle its own problems without political interference.

Claude Lee, exhibitor contact for Paramount, also pledged wholehearted endorsement and aid in any concerted effort to represent the industry before the public. He urged that the strength and unity demonstrated under fire be turned to solving industry problems all the time.

Abram F. Myers Wednesday, predicted the Consent Decree would end on June 1st, 1942 through operation of the escape clause. Section XII frees the Big Five if the Government has not won an anti-trust conviction or a similar decree from the Little Three. He advised exhibitors to make plans with an eye to such a contingency and called for immediate action to formulate a practical selling plan to replace Decree provisions.

Pointing out that the Government had first prosecuted the "less important Crescent suit" Mr. Myers said the only chance for a final decree would be for Columbia, Universal and United Artists to completely turn about and sign on the same terms as the Big Five.

Resolution Hits "Inquiry"

The opening gun of the convention, starting on Tuesday, was directed at the Senate committee in Washington investigating motion pictures. Interrupting the regular order of business after Colonel H. A. Cole, of Texas, national president, officially opened the convention shortly after 2 P. M., Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, introduced a resolution that had earlier been approved by the board, and was passed unanimously by the more than 200 delegates present.

The resolution, copies of which were forwarded to Washington and made public, read:

"Resolved by the motion picture theatre owners in attendance at the twelfth annual convention of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors in Philadelphia this sixteenth day of September, 1941, that we protest the tactics employed by the participants in the current proceedings before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in attacking the integrity and attempting to destroy the good will of the motion picture industry for political purposes; and, further, that we condemn and denounce the efforts of such participants and all others to stir up religious and racial antagonism and class hatred in the United States."

Asking for the floor to bring up this matter, Mr. Myers pointed out that Allied, in its 12 years organization, included among its membership and board, men of every race, religion and of every politic.

However, Mr. Myers continued, certain politicians in Washington, whom he did not mention by name, and who represent a "pitiful minority, have in recent weeks been fighting a rear-guard action against the nation's foreign policy by ringing in issues of race and religion."

"In their desperation, they have made a bid for support from the exhibitors by promising to extend their investigation to an alleged motion picture theatre monopoly."

Mr. Myers warned exhibitors not to be fooled by "their newly found and sudden interest in us. They did not vote for the Neely Bill. They did not help us when we needed them and their new found interest in us now is a falsehood." Asking that the resoultion be supported by the convention and the message sent out to the public, Mr. Myers explained that it would show that "designing politicians cannot drive a wedge in the motion picture industry by using the exhibitors."

In addressing his opening remarks to the convention, after the three-day program was outlined by convention chairman Sidney E. Samuelson, of Eastern Pennsylvania, Col. Cole emphasized the taxation problem.

"Don't get it into your heads that the tax bill just passed by Congress is the ultimate," warned Col. Cole. "It is just the start of what the Government needs and will ask from us. Necessity of revenue to our national government is tremendous, and it hasn't even started yet."

Col. Cole also touched on the consent decree and the new selling plan on features.

The taxation question was discussed in greater detail by Pete J. Wood, of Ohio, who reported statistically on "The Shrinkage of the Motion Picture Dollar or Why You Have to Buy Pictures for Less Money This Year."

Col. Cole outlined in detail the main points of discussion centering on Allied's "purpose of existence" and urged the delegates to "get down to business" and show an even greater active interest in their organization.

Mr. Myers struck a similar note when he pointed out that the convention was the first all-industry meeting since the Trade Practice Conference in 1927 which was held at the instigation of a governmental agency. "The eyes of the country will be fastened on Philadelphia," he declared. "If the other branches respond, the industry, united for the time-being, will be able to put over its message to the public at a most propitious time. If the meeting fails," he warned, "the whole industry will lose face, confidence in its ability to solve its own problems will shrink, and it will remain a prey to disaffection within and vulnerable to attack from without." Mr. Myers pointed out the reasons for planning "this new kind of a convention," saying, "The situation in which the industry finds itself is such that the need for an all-industry get-together must be apparent to all thoughtful persons—the logic of events argues for its success."

Allied's counsel said the purpose of the convention plan was to set up a national joint industry committee for liaison purposes for which the organization's leaders already had expressed a desire.

Urges "Farsighted View"

Urging that the convention "must not only address itself to internal industry questions," Mr. Samuelson declared, "It must also take a far-sighted view of the relationship of the motion picture business to the nation which has made our progress possible. The opportunity is now presented for a deliberate convention to consider carefully the many serious problems facing each and every one of us in the conduct of our business," he said.

The movement to create a national liaison committee of exhibitors and distributors, suggested by Mr. Myers, was proposed to the convention by Jack Kirsch, of Chicago, with final consideration of the proposition to be taken up at the closing sessions on Thursday. Mr. Kirsch proposed that the convention appoint a committee to take steps to create such a committee. A joint all-industry committee, Mr. Kirsch point out, would serve six purposes:

1) Act as a clearing house for the entire industry.

2) Arrange meetings throughout the country to properly acquaint exhibitors with the sales policies of distributors.

3) Set up sub-committees to report on the audience reaction to certain pictures and the effect of publicity and advertising.

4) Act as an agency to create a common front against any criticisms directed against the industry.

5) Handle all charity enterprises in which the motion picture industry participates.

6) Serve as a good-will committee to create more friendly relations among the various branches of the industry itself.

FDR URGES ALLIED AID FOR UNITY

Delegates to the national Allied convention gleaned special significance in the light of the present Senate committee probe, in the letter of greeting which President Roosevelt sent to Sidney E. Samuelson, convention chairman. The letter, dated August 25th, stated:

"In this time of stress and anxiety, wholesome amusements can play a big part in upbuilding and maintaining the public morale. In sending hearty greetings to the Twelfth Annual Convention of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors I do so in full confidence that this organization will exercise its powerful influence in advancing national defense and thereby safeguarding and perpetuating all of our cherished freedoms."

ranted legislation to separate production, distribution and exhibition, and said he would ask the subcommittee to consider it. If the industry is split up, he said, "we will destroy the war propaganda movies, inasmuch as testimony has established the fact that they have been box-office flops.

As the subcommittee reconvened Monday to hear two Hollywood gossip columnists, Jimmie Fidler and George Fisher, it appeared that the probe was still the best drawing card under the capitol dome. The Senate Caucus Room was again jammed with press, industry observers, and the flock of onlookers, chiefly women, which wrestles its way into the spectators seats whenever there are "big doings" on Capitol Hill.

The subcommittee barely mustered a quorum Monday. In addition to Senator Bone of Washington, who is ill and has attended none of the hearings, Senator Brooks of Illinois was absent. This left only Chairman Clark and Senator Tobey of New Hampshire to support the isolationist cause against the "sniping" questions of Senator McFarland of Arizona.

"Waste of Time "

Also disappointing to the large audience, in the committee room was the absence of Wendell Willkie, counsel for the industry, who sent word to the Capitol Monday morning that he thought it would be a "waste of time" to listen to the commentators.

At the opening of the Monday session, Chairman Clark delivered one of the speeches which the press table has begun to look for, this time charging the newspapers of the Nation with engaging in a "smear" campaign against the investigation.

Senator Clark asserted that 75 per cent of the "better known newspaper columnists" have "smeared" the committee.

"Let me say to all of these columnists now that in my judgment this just can't have happened," he said. "It almost smacks of a conspiracy. If that is true, it shows how far the gigantic engine of propaganda reaches.

"So far as this inquiry is concerned, it is going on."

Senator Clark read into the record a telegram from the Intermountain Theatre Association, Salt Lake City, endorsing the investigation and voicing "strenuous objection" to excessive war material in films.

He also read a letter from Fulton Cook, operator of the Bungalo theatre, St. Marys, Idaho, inclosing a communication from the Seattle branch manager for MGM to evidence "how the branch managers are pressing exhibitors to show propaganda films." Mr. Cook charged that "war mongers in the Government service" rather than the distributors, are responsible for the propaganda pictures, and alleged that MGM, pushing "Land of Liberty," wrote him that it was being distributed at the request of the Government and a report would be made to Washington of exhibitors who refused to show it.

Fidler is Witness

The first witness of the week was James (Jimmie) Fidler, film gossip columnist, who explained that he has a staff of nine persons and about 25 "spies." Mr. Fidler said he has lived in Hollywood 22 years, previously living in Tennessee, Missouri and "all over" the South. He explained that he started out as an actor—"not a very good one"—then became, successively, a press agent and fan magazine writer and finally, about seven years ago, a radio commentator and newspaper columnist.

The Fidler testimony was largely a tale of woe over the difficulties he experienced with the studios because of his "bell" system.

He told the committee that the big "blow-up" came when he gave MGM's "Conquest" only two bells. Louis B. Mayer, he said, protested to the National Broadcasting Company and, after conferences between Mayer and NBC and CBS officials, both chains ordered him to give A pictures at least three bells and B pictures at least two.

The break with the radio circuits came last month when, on signing a new contract with CBS, he was told he would have to observe certain restrictions and, among other things, could not say anything detrimental or harmful to the studios, Mr. Fidler continued. When Columbia refused to put on two "open letters" to George Brent and Laraine Day, he went with Mutual, he said.

Shortly after the change Mr. Fidler charged, industry representatives approached Mutual in an effort to censor him and expressed "surprise" that they were not being given advance copies of his material. Mutual, however, refused flatly to bow down to industry censorship, he declared.

Continuing, the witness explained that MGM also protested his newspaper columns and threatened to withdraw advertising from papers that carried them. However, he said, he was encouraged in his stand by "little theatre men," who approached him "in night clubs" and elsewhere to express the hope he would continue. Some of these unnamed exhibitors, he suggested, should be called by the committee. Chairman Clark assured him that "they will be here in droves."

Mr. Fidler went on to say that Y. Frank Freeman, Mr. Mayer, Harry Brand and other representatives of the "Big Four" continued to object to his column and that Mr. Mayer and the Los Angeles Times got into a fight over it. The film company withdrew much of its advertising upon the paper's refusal to censor him, Mr. Fidler said.

One of the items objected to, he explained, was an editorial critical of Alice Faye which, it was charged, was activated by a desire to "get even" with the actress, who had purchased a gown she later did not like in a shop run by the commentator's wife.

Mr. Fidler also told the committee had had been offered "large sums" to write things more favorable to the studios.

"Would you have gotten the money?" Senator Tobey inquired.

"Yes," said the witness, "because I would have collected in advance."

Mr. Fidler explained that he has "never questioned the right of members of the indus-

'Industry is Faithfully Performing Its Functions", Zanuck Tells Legionnaires

DARRYL F. ZANUCK

"LOYALLY, unselfishly and tirelessly" the motion picture industry is doing its full share in the national defense effort, Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production of 20th Century-Fox, told members of the American Legion on Monday at their 23rd annual convention in Milwaukee.

Asserting that the screen is a vital element of democratic free speech, Mr. Zanuck told the Legion that it is aware of its obligations and faithful to its trust. He denied categorically that the industry has fostered war propaganda. Motion pictures are giving aid in the national crisis by faithfully performing its functions of entertainment and information, he said.

"In this national crisis when the efforts of all are turned to national defense I can assure you that the motion picture industry is doing its full share—loyally, unselfishly, and tirelessly," he said.

"Motion pictures are produced to entertain and to inform: for the national defense requires both entertainment to lighten the cares and the worries of the day and information to aid and augment defense operations."

Characterizing the free American screen as a "watchdog of liberty," along with a free press and radio Mr. Zanuck told the Legion that it was a living proof of democracy. While it remains free the people cannot be betrayed or enslaved by dictators, he said.

"The motion picture in this modern world is as vital to the American way of life as is any other social, moral, economic and material factor," Mr. Zanuck told the veterans' organization.

"When this democracy was founded in the western hemisphere, the press—the free press—became the champion and the custodian and the symbol of our freedom as a people. Today, by the side of that loyal defender, each rendering a service in its own field, stand the motion picture and the radio.

"These three pillars of liberty not only protect, they must unremittingly receive the protection of free America."

In defense of the veracity of motion pictures he said:

"Through the truthful medium of the motion picture no hatreds, no poisonous ideologies, no monstrous doctrines of the Nazi, the Bolshevik, or the Fascist will find an audience in free America.

"In our own land the screen is the living spirit of liberty: and so it must and shall remain.

"The motion picture industry here is neither controlled, nor is it subsidized by government."

In reply to charges that motion pictures have been used deliberately to generate a war spirit, Mr. Zanuck said:

"Let me say this to you: Those charges are false.

"Those who make motion pictures realize and recognize the obligations and the responsibilities which are theirs. You will find that they have been faithful to their trust.

"The pictures themselves are the living record and the unassailable proof. Let the record speak for itself."

Mr. Zanuck, a Lieutenant Colonel in the U. S. Army Reserve, reviewed the industry's production of over 100 training films without profit.

"Can you name me even one other industry working for the Government without profit?" he asked. "Hollywood is proud to do it as part of its contribution to national defense. We consider it a patriotic duty."

try to have their own opinions" but has protested that the motion picture business is to produce entertainment and make pictures that the public wants to see. He charged the industry with "cheating" the public by charging for entertainment and delivering propaganda.

Chairman Clark questioned the columnist extensively regarding the reasons for various suspensions and retirements of actors and directors. Mr. Fidler, however, refused to admit that any of the cases cited were based on propaganda issues, and also said he knew of no differences between the heads of various companies over propaganda films.

Likewise, he refused to go along with Senator Clark's charge that a "half dozen" men control the industry, refusing to go further than to say that the field was dominated by groups of men at the head of several major companies. Mr. Fidler also refused to agree with the chairman that it was impossible for an independent to produce a picture and have it shown, although he admitted there would be difficulties. He pointed out that Monogram was getting distribution, although an independent, disclosing that he owns stock in that company.

CBS Answers

In reply to the Fidler testimony the Columbia Broadcasting System released its comment on the censorship charges, saying, in part:

"Columbia was beset by legal difficulties and dangers so long as Jimmie Fidler was on the air because of Fidler's desire to destroy values and reputations in order to build up a big audience to which his sponsor could advertise," the network charged.

"In addition, he was actually trying, on a one-sided basis, to get over into the realm of controversy and Columbia does not sell time for one-sided discussion of controversial issues.

"Columbia is well satisfied that CBS and Fidler have parted company and does not believe that Fidler will succeed in deceiving the public with a false issue of free speech."

Returning to the stand after the noon recess, in the course of which he changed his costume from a blue suit to a snappy green-striped outfit, Mr. Fidler immediately answered the CBS statement, sentence by sentence.

He said examination of his scripts for libel by both his and CBS lawyers protected the chain from lawsuits. He denied he had ever attempted to "destroy values and reputations," and asserted he never broadcast "scandal and gossip." Divorces and possibilities of babies, he asserted, are news, not scandal.

Wendell Willkie also issued a brief statement during the recess, saying "I haven't time to waste listening to one who makes his living purveying gossip even if the committee has. Every statement he has made will be disproved."

Mentions Pictures

Mr. Fidler's testimony ended with his puting the tag of "propaganda" on a number of pictures about which he was asked by the chairman. He classified these pictures as anything from "medium" to "very definite" propaganda, but mentioned only those which he himself had seen.

Chairman Clark asked the commentator whether he thought MOTION PICTURE HERALD was a "good, strong" trade magazine. Mr. Fidler agreed, and then the Senator read from a report in the August 16th issue of five Soviet pictures arriving in the United States, asking Mr. Fidler if he had heard they were about to be released. The witness answered "yes."

Senator Clark then referred to articles and reviews in MOTION PICTURE DAILY on "The Ramparts We Watch" and "World in Flames," both of which had run into censorship difficulties in Pennsylvania.

"Has it come to your knowledge of any powers of censorship insisting on cutting these so-called war propaganda films," Senator Clark asked.

"No, it has not," the witness responded.

Mr. Clark also asked about the "Hollywood blacklist." Mr. Fidler explained he had heard of it but could not say by whom it was compiled.

"If it develops in the course of this inquiry that a small group actually do have a stranglehold on the entire motion picture industry to the point where they are able to force upon independent exhibitors propaganda pictures, don't you think propaganda takes on an added sinister aspect?" Senator Clark asked.

"I don't think they have the right to take the stockholders' money to make propaganda pictures," the columnist replied.

Owns Stock

Drawing from Mr. Fidler an admission that he has not been in Europe since the outbreak of the war and cannot say whether the backgrounds of the propaganda pictures are true, Senator McFarland also elicited an admission that in addition to being a Monogram stockholder, he also owned stock in Warner Brothers, which at times has objected to this criticism of pictures.

"You and others like you are curing this propaganda by pointing it out to the public," Senator McFarland said, "so it is not necessary for this committee to do anything about it. You are doing it for us."

Mr. Fidler replied that that might be true, but that it could better be cured by requiring all propaganda pictures to be so labeled in advertising and on marquees. Asked who is going to label them, he admitted he did not know, drawing from Senator McFarland the comment "we had better be very careful about what kind of censors we make."

George Fisher, who has run a Hollywood film column on the air for the past seven years and before that was a radio announcer, press agent and "everything from automobile salesman to shoe clerk, almost," proved an unfruitful witness and was kept on the stand only a short while.

Mr. Fisher said that beginning September 28th he would be sponsored on 80 Mutual stations for a shampoo company.

He admitted that he had had only one or two film company complaints and that one of them was from Warner Brothers, following a criticism of the company's safety precautions for extras and bit players on its sets. The company proved it was taking every precaution and he made a "slight retraction," he said.

After Mr. Fisher left the stand, Senator McFarland declared he could not concur with Chairman Clark in his attack on the alleged newspaper "smear" conspiracy, and asserted that motion pictures should have as much freedom of speech as the press.

"I want the record to show that I do not concur in the statement made by the chairman in criticism of the press," he said, "and I do not concur in what was said about this investigation just being in its beginning. I had hoped it would end before too long; I cannot see that we are accomplishing anything. We haven't got any real evidence and I think we should see the pictures."

"I cannot for one moment concur in what has been said here in criticism of the press and this same argument goes to the motion picture. It is an expression of speech upon the screen.

"I want to say that we had better be careful and not have the burning of the books which Germany had in 1933; that is the beginning of dictatorship, when we burn that which we do not like," the minority member said.

As the hearing concluded, Senator Tobey commended Fidler's testimony to Wendell Wilkie, drawing from the latter the tart comment that in Mr. Fidler the committee had a witness to its liking—"a gossip writer, one who makes his living by unsupported and unproven statements about other people" and who, Mr. Willkie said, "accused the radio, newspapers, journalists, motion picture producers alike, of conspirary and misdemeanors, most of which were for the purpose of controlling his golden voice.

"Like witness, like committee," Mr. Willkie continued. "Chairman Clark is sure the country's most distinguished columnists are in a conspiracy to malign his committee, if that is possible. That makes Dorothy Thompson and General Hugh Johnson fellow conspirators. Those two must be having an amusing time together—perhaps discussing Colonel Lindbergh's and Gerald Nye's recent un-American talks. I have no doubt that they find themselves in agreement on that subject, as they did find themselves in agreement about the high-handed methods and improper purposes of this committee."

Chairman Clark adjourned the session Monday afternoon until September 23 when Nicholas M. Schenck is to start the parade of industry executives summoned by the subcommittee.

Flynn Testifies

At its final session last Thursday, September 11, before a long weekend recess the subcommittee heard John T. Flynn, economist, writer, and a director of the America First Committee, attack monopoly in the industry. This was later designated by Mr. Willkie as "the same old humbug."

Mr. Flynn satirically read promotion material issued by the distributors on a number of films which he proposed the subcommittee investigate for propaganda content.

His reading of and comment on the suggestions to theatre managers for promoting the pictures kept the crowded committee room in a gale of laughter. There was no doubt that the press book material on "That Hamilton Woman" was never expected by its authors to be the subject of discourse by a man with a cutting sense of humor.

In general, Mr. Flynn charged the "handful of men" named Monday by Senator Nye as having acquired a monopoly over the film industry and with having set up a private censorship, exemplified in the Production Code Administration.

The requirement that independent and major producers alike get a code seal before their pictures can be shown in any house controlled by the major companies, he said, leaves no doubt that there is censorship. And, he added, that censorship also can be used to put independents out of business by raising the fees to the point of extortion. He claimed independents now "are saying it is happening."

Mr. Flynn asserted that in 1936 Will Hays prevented the picturization of "It Can't Happen Here" because it was anti-fascist, and that a story on John Paul Jones now is held up because it "it wouldn't do to have a picture showing an American naval hero knocking over British ships."

"If a man can be prohibited by this censorship from producing an anti-fascist picture he can be prohibited by this censorship from producing any other kind of picture," he asserted.

As further evidence of alleged censorship, Mr. Flynn cited the appointment last March of Addison Durland to advise on scripts treating Latin America, declaring the industry has set up "a private international political policeman."

He charged flatly that the industry is engaging in concerted propaganda to involve the country in the war, and that film propaganda "is the most terrible form of propaganda," because the victim does not realize he is being influenced. Whereas he can shut off his radio, stop reading his newspaper or leave the hall where a speech is being made, he goes to the theatre for amusement, he asserted, and is sold something he did not intend to buy.

Hollywood has made no secret of its ability in the propaganda field, he told the subcommittee, citing statements of men in the industry regarding the power of the screen. But he said there is a wide difference of opinion as to whether the industry should engage in such activities, citing as among the influential interests against it MOTION PICTURE HERALD, which, he declared, "has carried on a continuous drive against propaganda in the films and has insisted films should be devoted only to entertainment."

Opposed to Censorship

Mr. Flynn declared himself unalterably opposed to Government censorship and contended that "the only way to deal with this problem is to break the power of these men to make this an exclusive, privately owned propaganda machine. "That ought to be done at all costs," he said. "There is an anti-trust law, but unfortunately there is a consent decree, but there is some doubt as to how far that decree is being complied with.

"The chief basis of the monopoly is the control of the outlets. This monopoly ought to be destroyed and the committee ought to seek ways in which that can be done most effectually."

Films cited by Mr. Flynn as material which the committee should see and then should investigate from the original script to the final product included:

"Confessions of a Nazy Spy," "Dispatch from Reuters," "Dive Bomber," "Murder in the Air," "Underground," by Warner Brothers;

"Convoy," "Nurse Edith Cavell," by RKO;

"Escape," "Flight Command," "The Mortal Storm," "Sky Murder," "Washington Melodrama," by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer;

"Escape to Glory," "Mad Men of Europe," "Missing Ten Days," "Phantom Submarine," "They Dare Not Love," "This Is England," "Voice in the Night," made or distributed by Columbia;

"War in the Desert," "Men of Lightship 61," "The Man I Married," "Manhunt," "Four Sons," by Twentieth Century-Fox;

"One Night in Lisbon," "Mystery Sea Raider," "I Wanted Wings," by Paramount;

"Foreign Correspondent," by Walter Wanger;

"Anzacs in Action," "After Mein Kampf," "Blackout," "British Intelligence," "Birthplace of America," "Our British Forbears," "Thumbs Up," "U-Boat 29," "Pastor Hall," "North Sea Patrol," "Night Train," "The Lion Has Wings," classified as "British" pictures;

"Ramparts We Watch," "Americans All," "China Fights Back," "Britain's R. A. F.," "Australia at War," "Peace Under Hitler," "War in Europe," "Men of the F. B. I.," "Gateway to Panama," "Crisis in the Atlantic," by March of Time;

And MGM's "News of the Day" and Columbia's "International Forum."

Nye in "March of Time"

The "March of Time," attacked last week in Senator Nye's testimony for presenting to the public films which were "part actuality, part fiction, part scenic, part fake and part acted," this week pointed out that Senator Nye had himself been an enthusiastic actor in a "March of Time" in 1935 during the Senate probe of munitions manufacture. It was titled "Munitions Makers."

Louis de Rochemont, producer, recalled that:

"Senator Nye in 1935 seemed to consider the reenactment as a legitimate means of portraying news. I wonder what has happened to make him change his opinion. The method of reenactment which we used with Senator Nye is the same that we use today. We insist on having the real people wherever possible and our reproduction of any news fact is as accurate as research and human diligence can make it."

A charge by Mr. Fidler during his appearance before the subcommittee that Russell Birdwell, advertising executive for David O. Selznick, had offered him "about" $2,500 if he would give a favorable review of "Prisoner of Zenda" brought from Mr. Birdwell a telegram asking for an opportunity to rebut the charge. Mr. Birdwell said that Fidler's opinions were "not worth 25 cents, much less $2,500," and denied flatly that any bribery had ever been attempted.

Exhibitor support of the industry defense, and a general denial that production or distribution had forced any propaganda on them meanwhile appeared from many places in the field. At St. Louis, Harry C. Arthur, Jr., head of the Fanchon and Marco circuit, and his brother Milton, circuit executive, in a three column advertisement in the daily press asked "Since When Is It a Crime to Support the President of the United States?"

Exhibitor organizations, including National Allied in convention at Philadelphia (see page 14), also condemned the conduct and objectives of the hearings. The Missouri Independent Theatre Owners sent a protest to Senator Clark as did the ITO of New York.

Selznick Moves to Goldwyn Studio

Samuel Goldwyn and David O. Selznick announced in Hollywood that they will occupy the same studio in the future. The staff of David O. Selznick Productions, Inc., will move within the next few weeks to the present Goldwyn studio at 7210 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, and the plant is to be known in future as the Goldwyn-Selznick Studio.

Music War Over, Ascap to Put on Big Promotional

The nine-months' war between radio broadcasting and the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers is forgotten, as far as ASCAP is concerned, it was indicated this week. Following its board of directors' ratification on Monday of new radio licensing agreements, ASCAP is clearing its decks for its biggest institutional promotional job since Victor Herbert founded the Society in 1914. With both NBC and CBS expected to resume ASCAP music simultaneously on their networks on September 28th, the Society, it is reported, is brushing away the legal tangles and debris from its music-war with radio and is settling down to execute a large-scale public relations job, not only to sell ASCAP to radio stations, but primarily to sell the Society to the American public.

To Build Culture

As one ASCAP official declared on Monday, "During the radio ban of our music, the true purpose of the organization was lost sight of by the public. We want the American people to know the real value of the Society and what it can contribute to the sum total of music culture in this country.

"ASCAP knows that no culture, music or otherwise, will come out of Europe for the next fifty years, therefore we have an opportunity to build up in America a musical culture that is purely western hemisphere in character, a culture of free men and free women that will endure. It naturally falls to ASCAP to encourage and to guide the development of this musical culture which can be used as a great force for national unity."

It was intimated that the Society would "work out a great many plans along these lines with radio," its erstwhile prize-ring rival. Detailed, specific plans were withheld for the moment, but ASCAP plans to make an official announcement shortly concerning its proposed activities.

The Society, it was said, hopes to achieve the kind of public relations job that "should have been done 20 years ago."

In the opinion of the Society, it was indicated, this extensive public relations plan will dovetail in the next year or two with the expected increase of musical programs on radio which some broadcasting survey specialists have put at a 40 per cent rise over current musical spots. The experts figure that with Quiz and other "participation" shows practically at the end of the cycle, there will develop in the next year an increasing demand for musical

Meanwhile, in New York Supreme Court on Tuesday, a motion was argued before Justice Aron Steuer to drop Broadcast Music, Inc., as a plaintiff in the suit brought against ASCAP and individual song writers by BMI and Edward B. Marks, music publisher. The suit originally was brought as a test case to determine the rights of a publisher in the performong rights of music.

Announcement was made by BMI on Tuesday that it was distributing $200,000 in royalties among publishers and composers for the quarter ending June 30th. According to the BMI statement, 12 publishers each received between $2,000 and $4,000 for the quarter and 12 writer teams each collected between $1,000 and $1,500. Distribution was based on 3,000,000 station performances. BMI also announced that 1,000 writers and nearly 300 publishers are involved in the royalties distribution.

FROM READERS

PRODUCER OBJECTS

To the Editor:

I am sorry that your readers were told that "The Forgotten Village" is an "anti-religious" picture, and that your reviewer described scenes of "damaged churches with barricaded doors" as evidence of bad intent.

"The Forgotten Village" is a drama of birth and death in a Mexican village, and of the struggle to save the lives of children dying from the infected water of the rainy season. Mr. Steinbeck and I made the film as a contribution to Pan-American understanding, and did not specifically deal with the question of religion as your reviewer implies.

First of all, there are no scenes of "damaged churches with barricaded doors." Our village church shows the signs of time, as it is an early Conquest structure. But it is remarkably well preserved and undamaged by man's hands, as you can tell if you trouble to look at the stills at our distributors office and check them against the film.

The "barricaded doors" are the commonly used wooden doors of Mexico's stone churches. Possibly your reviewer was misled by a fiesta scene which takes place in the plaza with the church in the immediate background. But a second look should convince you that this traditional fiesta scene could not be taken as a religious ceremony.

Far from being "anti-religious," our film is the first documentary to come from Mexico in recent years that shows scenes of the deeply religious character of the Mexican Indian peasantry. And the one religious scene, a village procession, is filmed with respect for the deep feeling and beauty of the scene.

Therefore, I trust you will print this letter explaining the facts as opposed to the mistaken notions about "damaged churches and barricaded doors" which simply aren't in this picture.

I am sure your readers will agree when they see the picture and will look forward to their comments, as we believe the anti-religious charge is completely unjust both to the picture and to the producers.

Ad Film Field Awaits Word on New U.S. Films

Suspense hangs high these days in the advertising and sponsored film business where 20-odd producer and corporate bidders are awaiting announcement from the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department of the U. S. Government's award for printing, distribution and promotion of 60 16mm. educational and vocational training films. The award involves from 12,000 to 15,000 prints and is one of the largest contracts ever to be considered for a single company in this field, as Motion Picture Herald reported on September 6th.

According to Herbert S. Houston who left Washington last Friday to return to New York, the award may be announced this week, but it is "unlikely." Mr. Houston is chairman of the Institute for the Advancement of Visual Education and Vocational Training, Inc., which non-profit organization was listed as one of the bidders for the contract and which aroused criticism, it was reported among producers and distributors of advertising and sponsored films.

Four Companies Members

The Institute consists of the following companies: Jam Handy Productions, Detroit; Ray-Bell Films, Minneapolis; Loucks and Norling Studios, New York, and Caravel Films, Inc., New York. All these firms received Government awards last spring for producing 30 of the 50 reels of the 16mm. training pictures projected by the Office of Education. Jam Handy and Caravel received 10 reels each; Ray-Bell and Loucks and Norling, 5 reels. Other firms which received awards for 5 reels each were: Emerson York, Audio Products, West Coast Sound and Calvin Company.

At the time the Institute bid for the printing award, criticism centered on the point that it was organized "expressly for the purpose of bidding as a unit"; that the organization was a "closed corporation" and that as it operated on a non-profit basis, it constituted an "unfair threat" to regular business firms in the race for the Government award.

Mr. Houston answered these charges, however, by issuing a statement last week which said: "There is no more mystery about the Institute than about any one of scores of other trade associations that are formed to serve the common interests of particular industries. The Institute, now that it is properly organized is already considering the enlargement of its membership. It is prepared to accept as members those qualified to subscribe to its purposes, providing they are solvent, have the tools of the trade in the form of technical and studio requirements and are experienced in educational film production."

U.S. JUDGE HITS DECREE, PROPOSES NEW NATIONAL CLEARANCE PLAN

Ruling Cooperative of Detroit Guilty of Anti-Trust Act Violation, Jurist Recommends Board to Study Problems

Already operating under a brand new system of trade practice, as imposed upon the 'Big 5' distributors by the United States Department of Justice under the consent decree, the industry, last Friday, was unexpectedly presented with another proposal, by a Judge of the federal court, that a new program be instituted, likewise by the Government, to establish a national board of zoning, clearance and protection.

This brand new approach to an already complex setup came from Judge Frank A. Picard, sitting in the U. S. District Court in Detroit, as he ruled that Cooperative Theatres, Inc., was guilty of violating the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and ordered issuance of an injunction restraining that buying circuit from interfering with the right of Midwest Theatres Company to buy product.

Declaring that the methods of selling and buying motion pictures are highly complicated, Judge Picard recommended, "A national board of zoning, clearance and protection with regional offices throughout the United States might well be set up with a carefully chosen membership so that various delicate problems presented in a very complex industry could be given proper consideration.

"The powers of the board should be manifold," he continued, "since there is need for a program instituted by the Government along these lines. In addition, the industry itself should devote further time to the study of means of self improvement."

Clearance Complaints Predominate

Under the industry's present system of arbitrating trade practice disputes, as established by the decree through the regional offices of the American Arbitration Association, complaints over clearance represent at least three quarters of those filed since the boards started functioning last February 1.

Judge Picard lashed out at the existing industry consent decree, declaring: "Weakness of the consent decree is that it seeks solution of situation presenting at least three main viewpoints by reflecting only two. There is a three-cornered relation in the picture industry, between producer and exhibitor, between exhibitors' relation to division of product, clearance and protection, and both situations as to Government concerning violation of the Sherman and Clayton laws."

The 31 regional motion picture tribunals of the American Arbitration Association as set up under the New York consent decree, have authority only to receive and hear, through arbitrators selected from their locals panels, specific complaints on clearance and run filed against the 'Big Five' under terms of the decree.

Although both parties to an arbitration proceeding bind themselves to observe the award, attorneys point out that in the event one or another party repudiates an arbitrators' findings or the decision of the final appeal board, the tribunal has no power to enforce its ruling, by fine or other penalty. Action against an abrogating party could come only through the Department of Justice. The latter receives records of all proceedings, and might, conceivably institute contempt proceedings to hold decree signatories, or voluntary parties to arbitration, to the ruling provided for under the consent decree. In such event, however, the administrative authority would reside in the injunctive authority of the federal court, not with the arbitrator or the administrative machinery of the AAA in charge of the records and mechanics of the field tribunals.

Midwest Denied Damages

Judge Picard's Detroit decision, which ended two years of litigation, denied Midwest any of the $200,000 damages it had sought in the suit.

Midwest, operator of five theatres on Woodward, main Detroit street, charged that Ben and Lou Cohen, operators of five competing houses, were using Co-operative to keep producers from selling pictures to Midwest until they had played in the Cohen houses.

Co-operative controls approximately 100 theatres in the Detroit metropolitan area. The Midwest owns the Colonial, Blackstone, Garden, Forest and Majestic theatres. The Mayfair, Rio, Roxy, Capitol and Hollywood theatres are owned by the Cohen Brothers, who were named defendants with Co-operative.

Judge Picard held that the defendants were engaged in interstate commerce and said, "the evidence further shows that the defendant has violated the Sherman Anti-Trust laws on several occasions."

"This is particularly true," he said, "when it stifles all competition by coercing distributors to break contracts, as it did in one instance, or when it compels distributors not to do business with anyone outside the select gates, except after clearance runs, on penalty of not being able to sell Co-operative at all."

The injunction which he ordered issued, would prevent: (1) the defendants from interfering with Midwest's right to compete for the purchase of all movies, whether used by the Cohen theatres or not; (2) prevent Co-operative, by coercion, threats or otherwise, from restraining any producer or distributor from negotiation with Midwest; (3) restrain the Cohen Brothers from purchasing more than the number of major pictures for either the Roxy or Mayfair theatres normally used, placing this number at two changes of double features for each theatre each week.

LOEW'S, WARNERS SWITCH THEATRES

Loew's and Warners will exchange a theatre each in Wilmington, Delaware, September 26th. On that day, the Loew chain will assume the Warners' Aldine, and the Warner ciruit will acquire the Loew's Parkway. The arrangements are for ten years. They were made by Joseph Vogel of Loew's, and Joseph Bernhard, for Warners.

Mr. Vogel said the deal would give his company a larger theatre in the city's downtown area and that the Parkway would be made into a Warner subsequent run.

The Parkway has approximately 1,100 seats. The Aldine has 1,900.

Warners have several houses in Wilmington. Loew's had only one.

On September 19th, the Aldine will close, and the new operator, Loew's, will inaugurate extensive improvements. It will reopen October 1st. Edgar Doob will manage it, as he managed the Aldine.

U. S. Plans to Start Schine Trial in November

The Department of Justice plans to start trial of its anti-trust suit against the Schine Circuit and the "Little 3" in U. S. District Court at Buffalo in mid-November.

Approval of the November trial date is contingent on approval by Federal Judge John C. Knight of Buffalo, however.

The Government has advised various defense counsel of its intention, which would indicate that trial of the Schine case will get under way prior to the closing arguments in the Crescent-"Little 3" anti-trust action at Nashville. Final arguments in the case are scheduled for December 1st.

Schad Case Is Called Off

After four days of testimony before Judge J. Cullen Ganey in U. S. District Court in Philadelphia, motion for a preliminary injunction in the anti-trust suit of Dr. Harry J. Schad, Reading, Pa., exhibitor, was withdrawn on Thursday, September 1st, by his attorney, State Senator Harry Shapiro. It was after the cross-examination of the plaintiff, Dr. Schad, by defense counsel, that Senator Shapiro asked the court to permit him to withdraw the motion for a preliminary injunction. However, the withdrawal was predicated on the understanding that when the hearings are resumed, probably in October, the proceedings shall be considered as a final hearing for the injunction.

Dr. Schad testified on Thursday, September 11th, as to his theatre operations in Reading. Filed in behalf of his Astor Theatre there and seeking triple damages of $750,000, the bill of complaint was brought against 20th Century-Fox, Warner Brothers, Warner Theatre Circuit and Wilmer and Vincent Theatre Circuit, charging them with conspiracy to take one-half of the Fox product from his Astor Theatre and to sell it to W-V's Embassy Theatre there.

Prior to Dr. Schad's day on the stand, testimony was taken the three days previous on cross examination of Ted Schlanger, Warner theatre zone chief in Philadelphia, and of Rudolph Weiss, of the Warner circuit's real estate department in New York; William Sussman, eastern division sales manager for Fox; Edgar Moss, Fox district manager in Philadelphia, and Joseph D. Eagen, general manager of Wilmer and Vincent.

The Astor Theatre, until last Spring, was operated by the Warner circuit on a lease, and upon its expiration, the house reverted back to Dr. Schad, the original owner. The house is presently being operated by Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia exhibitor and trade paper publisher, and Frank McNamee, former RKO branch manager in Philadelphia, under a pooling agreement. While both were prominently mentioned in the testimony, neither men are party to the action.

Charging monopoly and conspiracy, operators of the New Empress theatre in Atlantic

Empress Theatre Sues Circuit and Majors on Trust

City, and the E. M. Blatt Co., owners of the property, last week started legal action against the Weiland-Lewis circuit and major distributors. Plaintiffs charge monopoly practices to deprive them of pictures and conspiracy to keep them from showing current product.

The Empress opened several weeks ago with a single feature policy and then shifted to duals or revivals such as "Scarface" and "Hell's Angels," with business holding up well. The management has announced that pending the outcome of the suit the house would continue with the double bill revivals and is planning to stay the winter.

The Weiland-Lewis organization, which formerly controlled the New Empress, would make no comment on the situation. The circuit recently was a defendant in a similar suit brought by Harry Waxman of the Hollywood theatre. The action was later dismissed.

Albany Supreme Court Refuses Injunction

Vitagraph won the first round of a court battle in Albany, N. Y., when Justice Schirick of the supreme court denied the injunction motion sought by Abe Stone, an independent exhibitor, in special term. The action was predicated on Warners making their Albany theatre a subsequent run after Mr. Stone's Eagle theatre with their new neighborhood house, the Delaware, receiving product ahead of the Eagle from Vitagraph.

Twentieth Century-Fox, originally named with Vitagraph for prior delivery to the Delaware, settled their case by stipulation before Leonard L. Rosenthal, Troy attorney active in the New York unit of Allied, sought the injunction in special term in Mr. Stone's behalf.

Cocalis Takes Theatre In Suit Settlement

Cocalis Enterprises, Inc., has taken over the operation of the State theatre in Elizabeth, N. J., from the Battin Amusement Co. The deal was the outcome of a suit started by Mr. Battin against Cocalis and several distributors charging violation of the anti-trust laws. The suit was settled when it was agreed that the State would be sold to Cocalis.

Silverstones Hosts

Mr. and Mrs. Murray Silverstone were hosts at their estate in Scarsdale, N. Y., on Saturday afternoon, September 13th, at a party to raise funds for the establishment in England of a children's nursing home to be named for the late Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt. The party was sponsored by the Scarsdale Division of the British War Relief Society and the Interfaith Committee for Aid to the Democracies. A number of film personalities were among the guests.

USO Drive Successful

With the cooperation of Mayor L. Mason of Bunker Hill, Ill., and M. Baker, scoutmaster of the local Boy Scout organization, the United Service organization drive for funds was a great success, acording to a report from Thomas A. Baker, manager of the Lincoln theatre which sponsored the drive.

Buffalo Circuit Adds Stage House

The Dipson Theatrical Enterprises, operators of 25 theatres in Buffalo, principally motion picture houses, has taken over ownership and management of the Erlanger Theatre, legitimate house in that city, through the organization of a new company, Playhouse, Inc., headed by Nikitas D. Dipson of Batavia, the circuit president. The new company also assumed stage show bookings of the United Booking Office of New York, run by the Shuberts, and the New York Theatre Guild subscription series. The Erlanger was acquired from the Hotel Statler Company in Buffalo.

Richard W. Kemper, former manager of the Twentieth Century, is vice president of Playhouse, Inc., and Andrew Gibson, a Dipson associate of long-standing, is secretary-treasurer. Mr. Kemper will manage the Erlanger which is now being renovated for air-conditioning, decoration, acoustical engineering and seats' reupholstering at a cost of $30,000.

Mr. Dipson and his associates are planning to book dramatic and musical shows as well as films for the Erlanger.

RKO Fetes Jareck

Eighty-two persons from various departments of RKO's home office gathered for a luncheon last Thursday, September 11th, at the Maison Louis in tribute to Joe Jareck of the still department who resigned to join the New York Police Department. Lou Gaudreau was toastmaster and S. Barret McCormick, head of the advertising and publicity department in which Mr. Jareck has been employed for several years, made a short talk. A combined radio and victrola set was presented to the departing employe.

Wolcott Wins Tournament

Leo F. Wolcott, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska association, and a theatre operator of Eldorado, Ia., won the American Legion golf tournament and possession of the G. Warner Branch Opens

Warner Brothers' new Pittsburgh exchange, a two-story air-conditioned building at 1801 Boulevard of the Allies, opened formally Monday, September 15th, with many exhibitors in attendance. Harry Seed, branch manager, was host at the "housewarming." Alfred W. Schwalberg, supervisor of exchanges for Warners, and Roy Haines, Eastern and Canadian sales manager, represented the home office.

Networks Ask FCC to Lift Contract Ban

Adamant in their challenge of the authority of the Federal Communications Commission to make regulations for the control of network operations, NBC and Columbia last week proposed that the commission suspend its proposed rules for the duration of the national emergency and join with the industry in attempting to induce Congress to streamline the communications act.

The proposal was made at argument before the Commission September 12 on a petition of Mutual Broadcasting System for an increase from the proposed one year to two or three years in the time for which contracts could be made between chains and stations and extending from 28 to 42 days the period in which the chains could exercise options.

Improvement Admitted

Counsel for the senior networks admitted that the proposals were an improvement over the regualtions promulgated by the commission, but charged the idea back of them was to secure for Mutual a better position in the industry than it now enjoys.

John Cahill, counsel for NBC, contended that the abolition of option time, as proposed, would have the effect of increasing the network's expenses as well as those of its affiliated stations, and might bring about a reduction in rates and a loss in revenue which, in turn, would be reflected in deterioration in the quality of programs.

For Columbia, Judge John J. Burns agreed that the present high standards may be impossible of maintenance under the rules and charged that they paved the way for an "invisible censorship more frustrating than an open and acknowledged one.

"In no other field of governmental regulation is it so important that the boundaries of Congressional authority be carefully maintained and that there be no extension of power by muffled words smuggled into a statute," he said.

The Mutual proposal, he asserted, would put the industry in a "strait-jacket" and prevent future development.

The proposed regulations were also presented to the commission as reacting to the disadvantage of the Government itself. The national defense program is making increasingly greater demands upon radio time, it was pointed out, and, it was contended, if the proposed regulations are put into effect, it may be impossible for the networks to protect the Government's requests for space on the air.

NBC counsel also charged that the regulation regarding the operation of more than one station in a locality will have a "destructive" effect on network activities.

The Federal Communications Commission is holding in abeyance the radio network regulations which were to go into effect on Tuesday, following a postponement from August 2nd. The commission said it would wait until a decision was reached on the petition presented by the Mutual Broadcasting System for amendment of the rule governing option time.

In the announcement on August 28th of the hearing to be granted Mutual the commission said that not only the option time rule but all the network regulations not now in effect would be held in abeyance until after decision on the point to be argued at the hearing September 12th, and that even after rendering of such decision, time would be allowed for compliance by the networks with respect to contractual relations and the disposition of properties in accordance with the orders promulgated May 2d.

NEW PROMOTIONS HELD OR PLANNED ON 'TARZAN', 'NAVY', 'YANK', et al.

MGM Sends Performing Lion on Tour; Warner Bros. Have 'Navy Blues Sextette'; Others Send Stars to Openings

With Bob Hope and Carolyn Lee appearing in person on the stage of the Stanley theatre in Philadelphia Wednesday, Paramount premiered Mr. Hope's latest comedy "Nothing But the Truth" with the usual fanfare and floodlight demonstrations.

Meanwhile, other companies staged special promotions or disclosed plans this week for exploitation and ballyhoo on new product.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was preparing for the national release of "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" and to aid exhibitors in pre-selling the picture to the public sent on a cross-country tour a jungle exhibition complete with a lion, "King Tarz."

For the opening of "Navy Blues" at the Strand theatre on Broadway, Warner Brothers brought a group of six magazine cover models, the "Navy Blues" Sextette, to New York with much advance publicity as to their activities for the days prior to the film's opening.

Twentieth Century-Fox was busy at midweek laying plans for the opening of "A Yank in the RAF," at the Roxy theatre, Friday.

"International Squadron," a Warner picture, opened in Dixon, Ill., in conjunction with the celebration of Louella Parsons-Ronald Reagan Day, Monday.

Republic's Dorothy Lewis arrived in New York for the opening of the company's "Ice-Capades" in which she is starred.

Philadelphia Opening

Personal appearances of Bob Hope and little Carolyn Lee topped the elaborate program for the world premiere of Paramount's "Nothing But the Truth" on Wednesday, September 17th, in Philadelphia at Warners' Stanley Theatre. The premiere, the first holiday opening held in Philadelphia, was in conjunction with the national convention of Allied in that city. Searchlights showered the skies and the uniformed drum corps of American Legion posts, paraded to the theatre. William Stauffer, Philadelphia county commander of the American Legion, presented a Distinguished Service Citation to Mr. Hope on the stage of the theatre, in recognition for services rendered to disabled war veterans throughout the country.

In addition to making two stage appearances in conjunction with the picture, Mr. Hope greeted crowds in front of the theatre for whose accommodation a grandstand was erected. The Philadelphia Record sponsored a letter contest among children in conjunction with the opening, asking for letters on why they'd like to have dinner with Bob Hope. The one boy and one girl selected among the contestants were invited to attend the picture premiere, and with their mothers, were also invited to the industry dinner held prior to the opening at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

Bob Hope was expected to remain over in Philadelphia until Friday for the Variety Club annual golf tournament at the Philmont Country Club.

In preparation for the premiere of "Nothing But the Truth," an advance buildup was conducted which included special trailers on the screens of 30 Warner Brother theatres in the Philadelphia district, an elaborately decorated lobby in the Stanley theatre, a giant-sized cooperative newspaper display and advertising campaign, billboard posting on all elevated and subway stations in the city and special street ballyhoo stunts.

"Tarzan" On Tour

With the opening of the national convention of Allied in Philadelphia on Tuesday, Metro Goldwyn Mayer launched a national jungle exhibition on "Tarzan's Secret Treasure."

This ballyhoo was planned by Howard Dietz, executive in charge of promotion, and will be supervised on its cross country tour by W. R. Ferguson, director of exploitation. It will consist of a lion working on a tight rope made to resemble a heavy tree branch high atop the street crowds.

The outfit has been installed in a special caravan with a telescopic rear that emerges during the performances and gives "King Tarz" the jungle actor, 28-feet of walking space.

According to a company announcement, the important feature of the undertaking is that it is being sent out long before the national release date for the picture and will provide theatres with a strong showmanship factor in preselling the picture to the public.

The outfit, in addition to the special caravan in which the lion performs, consists of an advance car and a traveling home and exhibition cage for the jungle actor. A public address system installed in a side wall of the truck will bring to the public a description of the scene from the picture as the lion makes his way across the rope.

"Navy Blues" Sextette

The "Navy Blues" Sextette, magazine cover models chosen by vote of the United States Navy enlisted personnel, according to Warners, arrived at Penn station in New York Monday morning. On Tuesday their patriotic services began. At 12:30 P.M. the actresses visited the Treasury House in Rockefeller Center to help sell United States Defense Bonds. At three o'clock the same day the Sextette participated in ceremonies at Floyd Bennett Field in connection with the launching of the "Yale Blues," the first United States Navy college pilot unit. The twelve Yale men are receiving flight training at Floyd Bennett Field before leaving for advance instruction in Florida. On Wednesday the Sextette appeared at the Hotel Astor Defense Ball and on Thursday were scheduled to have dinner with six sailors at their hotel, the Ritz Towers.

The Sextette arrived in New York after a cross-country tour which took them to eight cities. They will appear at the Strand theatre in conjunction with the Broadway engagement of "Navy Blues," which was to open Friday.

Plans Set for "Yank"

Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, Governor Charles Edison of New Jersey, and other prominent public officials will head the list of sponsors for the midnight charity ball and open air carnival which will be held in conjunction with the world premiere of Twentieth Century-Fox's "A Yank in the RAF" at the Roxy theatre in New York on Friday, September 26th. Benefits from the premiere and the proceeds of its parallel functions will go to the British American Ambulance Corps, for air ambulances and medical supplies to be sent overseas.

Governor Receives Ticket

Numerous committees, including a group of this season's debutantes, are actively assisting in the arrangements and sale of tickets. Inasmuch as the premiere marks the beginning of a nationwide drive for the British American Ambulance Corps, plans are being made to reproduce the premiere in all of its details in cities throughout the country where the picture opens.

A committee headed by Mrs. William V. C. Ruxton and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., visisted Governor Lehman and Mayor LaGuardia Monday and presented them with the first tickets, especially printed on the fabric of a wrecked Messerschmitt plane, for the premiere. Tickets to the Midnight Ball, to be held after the premiere, and for the premiere as well will cost $10 each.

The sponsoring committee includes: Mrs. Ruxton, whose husband is president of the BAAC, Mrs. Fairbanks, Mrs. Palmer Dixon, Mrs. Francis Warren Pershing, Mrs. Paul Felix Warburg, Brenda Diana Duff Frazier, Mrs. Frederic Watriss, Elsa Maxwell, Mrs. Scales Leslie, Mary Andress and Mrs. James Spalding III.

A comprehensive collection of British wartime posters, registering virtually every phase of civilian and military defense have been placed on exhibit at the Roxy theatre in connection with the premiere of the picture.

The collection, representing the work of well-

SOMETHING TO WRITE ABOUT

David O. Selznick started it by paging the public for selections to play Scarlett in "Gone With the Wind".

Now everybody's doing it.

Paramount has got the columnists of the country soliciting reader-suggestions for principal roles in "For Whom the Bell Tolls".

Warner Brothers have the ladies and gentlemen of the syndicates wooing suggestions for a casting in "King's Row".

Samuel Goldwyn has not only the film columnists but also the sports editors of the nation circularizing their readers as to their choice of personalities to play Lou Gehrig in the film to be based on the life of the late Yankee star.

It's not bad tactics.

It gives columnists something to write about, and their readers something to write to them, and to studios, about.

It binds nobody to anything.

Producer Selznick scanned the thousands of letters and hired an unknown.

That's not a bad idea, either.

It's cheap and it makes no enemies.

In an era of talent shortages, why not?

known British artists and cartoonists, is designed to be of particular interest to civilian defense groups, ranging as it does from instructions to householders on air raid precautions, food problems and adjustment of wartime inconveniences, to detailed regulations affecting group life in underground shelters. The collection will be made available to defense groups following the Roxy exhibit, through the courtesy of the theatre and the British Library of Information.

"Squadron" in Illinois

"Louella Parson-Ronald Reagan Day," was celebrated in Dixon, Ill., on Monday in honor of those two natives of the city, in connection with the premiere of Warners' "International Squadron" at the Dixon theatre that night.

Accompanying them were Bob Hope and Jerry Colonna, George Montgomery, Ann Rutherford, Joe E. Brown, and Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon.

The Hollywood personalities were guests at a luncheon on the estate of Mrs. Charles R. Walgreen. A banquet preceded the premiere, and a Hollywood Ball at the local Armory concluded the program.

"Ice-Capades" Opens

Dorothy Lewis, star of Republic's skating spectacle "Ice-Capades," arrived in New York this week for the New York premiere of her new picture at Loew's Criterion on Wednesday, September 17th. The film marks Miss Lewis' screen debut under the terms of a contract with Republic, and although new to motion pictures she has established her position as one of America's foremost Ballerinas on skates.

For the past three seasons, Miss Lewis has been the star of the ice show at the St. Regis Iridium Room in New York, and will return ther October 8th for her fourth year.

Optical Committee Meets

Members of the Research Council Basic Optical Committee met Thursday, September 11th, in the Academy Board Room in Hollywood to complete plans for setting up a standard method of lens calibration. The new standard will help to improve photographic quality in production, will assist the laboratory to match photography between cameras and will result in an economy in production by facilitating the interchange in camera lens equipment, the Academy announced.

Transport Company Recognized

Motion Picture Delivery Company, Inc., of New Orleans, La., has been granted authority to operate in the transportation of motion picture film booked by the film exchanges in that city, between New Orleans and specified locations in Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida. The I.C.C. grant followed hearings in New Orleans April 10th and 11th with the Railway Express Agency and the Illinois Central Railroad intervening as protestants.

Wassom with National Screen

Lionel Wassom, with the A. H. Blank theatre enterprises for fifteen years when he resigned last fall to manage the Odeon and Casino theatres at Marshalltown, Iowa, owned by Mike Roskopf and Sam Horwitz, has resigned and joins the National Screen Service sales force at Des Moines, Iowa.

"Featurette" Series Begin Production in New York

Rock Productions, Inc., headed by Arthur Leonard and Maurice Duke, began production on Wednesday of the first of a series of "Featurettes" at the Fox Movietone Studios in New York City.

For the first picture, which is entitled "Miss Cast," the company has employed 40 actors, actresses and musicians, in addition to script writers, songwriters, arrangers, dance directors and a complete crew of studio technicians, cameramen, etc. Mr. Leonard was a director for Warner Brothers and later a producer of his own subjects. He also produced and directed the "Soundies" for James Roosevelt. Mr. Duke, recently arrived from Hollywood, has for some years been connected with the various branches of film production.

Four Film Firms Form

Four new concerns have been formed in New York State, three in New York and one in Buffalo, to distribute and exhibit motion pictures, according to Michael F. Walsh, Secretary of State. They are:

Cine, Incorporated, 200 shares, no par value, by Meyer Bornfriend, 274 Madison Avenue, Rudolph Allen and Miriam Kaplan, 565 Fifth Avenue, New York. Filing attorney was E. Louis Gothelf, 565 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Amusomatics, Incorporated, 100 shares, no par value, by Murray Ehrlich, Harry Orner and Charles T. Weintraub, 45 John Street. Altholz, Orner and Altholz, same address, filed the papers.

Greyhound Advertising Service, Inc., Buffalo, 200 shares, no par value, by Harold N. Reid and Bernard J. Dress, Buffalo, and James A. Zimmerman, Kenmore, with Edgar H. Hedley, Buffalo, filing attorney.

American Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Co., Inc., 200 shares, no par value, by Arnold B. Elkind and Gerald F. Finley, 545 Fifth Avenue, and Frederick Joseph Halton, 22 Washington Square, New York, as the directors. Finley filed the papers.

Stage Competition Foreseen

Indianapolis exhibitors, most of whom believe that stage plays at English's theatre don't cut into their grosses, may find that the coming season will offer more competition than normal. In addition to the regular offerings at English's at irregular intervals through the winter, the Theatre Guild has booked six revivals of Broadway shows and a subscription list is selling briskly. Civic Theatre will begin its season October 15th.

Construction Dooms Theatres

Plans for a 300-foot width along Hastings Street, disclosed by Alfred E. Cobo, city treasurer in Detroit, would wipe out the East Side colored theatre sector, mostly all-night houses. The theatres affected include the Madbury, Warfield, Castle, Dunbar and Arcade. Plans for a similar west side highway along Sixth Street in Detroit, would probably threaten the Coliseum, already slated for removal in a slum clearance project and the Amo.

Donahue Joins Buchanan

Joseph C. Donahue, formerly head of the William Esty & Co. radio activities on the west coast and also formerly with the Columbia Broadcasting System, has joined the radio department of Buchanan & Co. Mr. Donahue will supervise the Eleanor Roosevelt series for the Pan-American Coffee Bureau and will work with Paul Monroe, the agency's radio chief, on the Fred Allen show and the "Treasury Hour" when the Bendix Corp. starts sponsoring the show on September 30th.

Profits, Stock Deals Reported

Net operating profit of $10,897 is reported by Monogram Pictures Corp. and subsidiary companies for the 52-week period ended June 28th, after deducting all charges, including amortization, depreciation and normal income taxes. This compares with a net loss of $179,656 the year before.

Gross income after deductions of franchise holders' distribution percentages and agents' selling commissions was $2,030,459, compared with $1,945,879 for the previous period. Gross profits before deducting administrative expenses, interest and Federal taxes was $470,065, compared with $310,614 last year.

The report showed the company had $171,007 in restricted sterling deposits, accounts receivable and Australian stock.

SEC Studies Pathe Deal

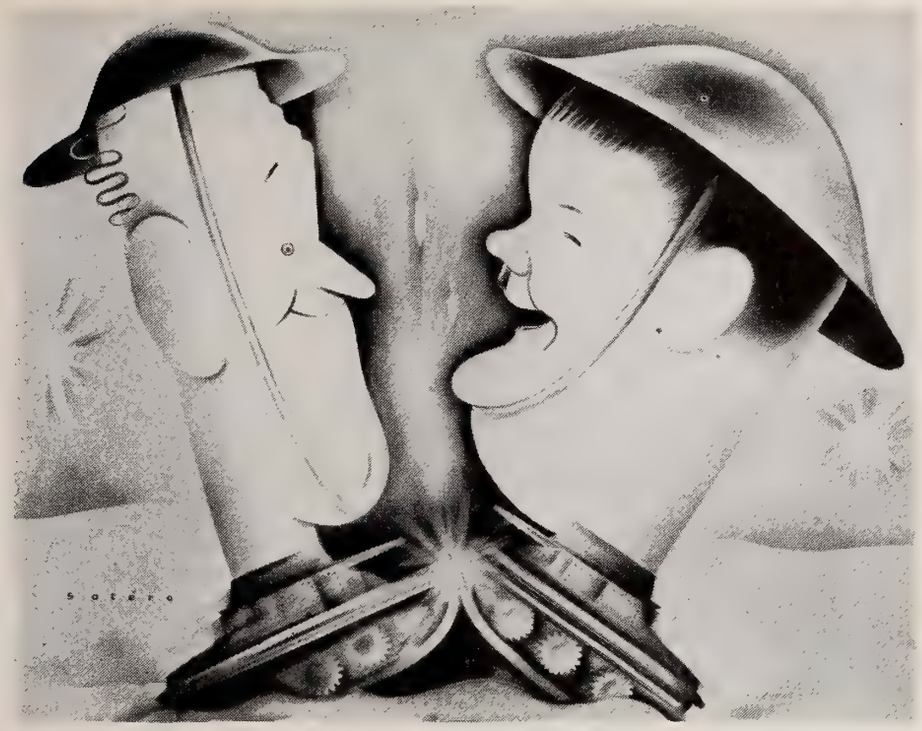
Plans for dissolution of Pathe Film Corporation were laid before the Securities and Exchange Commission last week with a request for approval before the proposed stockholders' meeting October 1st.

The matter was presented at a hearing September 12th by Colonel T. C. Davis, Pathe director, who contended that the proposed exchange of the company's holdings in Du Pont Film Corporation for stock in E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Company would be the "best possible arrangement for Pathe stockholders."

He explained that it is proposed to exchange Pathe's 3,500 shares of Du Pont Film common for 56,700 shares of Du Pont de Nemours common, dissolving Pathe thereafter. In this way it will be possible to eliminate unnecessary duplication of operating costs and taxes "inherent in any holding company" and avert the hardship on fast growing companies enjoying a high rate of return on their capital imposed by current taxation.

SEC counsel, delving into the question of the remuneration Col. Davis is to receive for his work, was told that in informal discussions a figure of $150,000 was suggested but that under the final arrangement he will receive 300 shares of Du Pont de Nemours stock, with a value of approximately $46,000.

Fox Declares Dividend



The board of directors of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation at its meeting last week declared a cash dividend of 37½ cents per share for the third quarter of 1941 on the outstanding preferred stock of the corporation, payable September 30th, 1941, to stockholders of record at the close of business September 20th, 1941.

Loew's Cuts Dividend Arrears

Preferred dividend arrears of Marcus Loew's Theatres, Ltd., Montreal, will be cut in half to $1.75 a share, following payment on September 30th of a dividend declaration of $1.75 a share plus $1.75 a share. In the two quarters preceding the company paid similar amounts on arrears while last year $7 a share on arrears was distributed, against $24.50 in 1939.

Associates Pledge Fund

About 75 members of the Motion Picture Associates, meeting at the Hotel Astor in New York last week, pledged contributions of about $1,000 to the organization's charity fund. This was in response to the request of Joseph Lee, organization president, that donations be made instead of at the association's annual dinner and dance Thanksgiving Eve.

FIRST SPECIFIC RUN DEMAND FILED BY EXHIBITOR UNDER DECREE RULES

Detroit Independent Files Action Under Section X, Raising Problem of Effective Date; Study Application of 90-Day Rule

The first arbitration action to demand specific run from the consenting distributors was filed by an independent exhibitor at Detroit Friday under the provisions of Section X of the consent decree, which became operative September 1st.

In the initial complaint to the American Arbitration Association specifically aimed at the buying power of circuit combinations Erving A. Moss, operator of the Parkside theatre, Detroit, named each of the Big Five distributors. He charged that, contrary to provisions of Section X of the decree they had denied him product since July 20th on a requested run, and alleged that the run had been sold to two Cooperative Theatres of Michigan houses and one United Detroit circuit house. This was done, the complaint asserts, because of the combined buying pressure of the circuits.

Specifically named are the Harmony and Aloma theatres, 1,000-seat key Cooperative houses and the 1,000-seat Rivola. Mr. Moss charges that since July 20th he had demanded in writing, second run after the downtown situations for his 900-seat Parkside on Warren Avenue. Mr. Moss asks equal run. The case is the sixth filed in the Detroit tribunal.

[A federal judge in Detroit this week also scored the Michigan Cooperative buying power in a Sherman anti-trust case decision, see page 33.]

Question Applicability

The demand for abitration under Section X raises a question as to the date on which applications become valid. According to the decree refusal to sell product on the run asked must persist over a three month period. The Detroit arbitrator will have to decide whether the 90 day period of refusal is retroactive or commenced September 1st.

If the latter is the case Section X complaints actually cannot be filed until December 1st. The executive offices of the American Arbitration Association at New York indicated that the question involved interpretation of the language of the decree and could be settled only by the arbitrator, as yet unselected, or by the Appeal Board.

Section XX of the decree states, however:

"The provisions of Section III, of subdivision (a) of Section IV, of Section V, and of Section X of this decree shall have application only with respect to features released in the United States after August 31, 1941."

The Detroit tribunal, long inactive, this week cleared its third complaint from the docket in short order with a settlement between all parties to a clearance action inaugurated by the Drayton theatre in Drayton Plains, Mich. The complaint, reported August 23d, named all five consenting distributors and the Butterfield circuit in Pontiac, Mich. Withdrawal was by unanimous consent.

Detroit received its fifth arbitration complaint, also on Friday, when Sol Winokur, operating the Ritz theatre in Watervleit, Mich., filed on clearance against Metro and Warner Brothers. He named the Heart theatre in Hartford and the Coloma theatre, Coloma, two and five miles, respectively, from Watervleit. The seven day margins they now hold is unreasonable, Mr. Winokur declared, asking for day and date.

21st in New York

New York received its 21st arbitration action last week when Skouras Theatres, Inc., through Metropolitan Playhouses, its subsidiary, filed a clearance action in behalf of the Ogden theatre, Ogden Avenue and Washington Bridge, the Bronx, naming Paramount and MGM. The complaint charges that the seven day margin of the Mt. Eden theatre, operated by the JJ Theatres Corp., at Mt. Eden and Inwood avenues, is unreasonable.

Portland, Ore., received its second case Monday when William Graeper, operating the Egyptian, Portland, filed a clearance complaint against Paramount, RKO, MGM, and the 20th Century-Fox. The Fox West Coast circuit Portland houses are also named. Mr. Graeper charges that the present protection of 91 days is unreasonable and asks for a reduction to 45 days.

Washington, D. C., received a seventh case on Monday, a clearance demand from Sam Millets, operator of the Dentonia theatre, in Denton, Md., naming Loews', Inc. Mr. Millets charges that a seven day margin granted by Metro to the Reese theatre, Harrington, Del., is unreasonable. He asks reduction. The two towns are 17 miles apart.

New Chicago Case

At Chicago a clearance complaint was filed September 11th by the K. & S. Theatre Corporation, operators of the Sheridan theatre, North Chicago, Ill., against Warner Brothers and RKO Radio. It is Case No. 7.

Complainant states that for a number of years its pictures were booked in the second week of release but during the past year the defendants had taken away such privilege and granted clearance to the Times theatre, Waukegan, Ill., prior to release date given the complainant and granted the Times theatre protection over the Sheridan. The Sheridan asks the same release as previously enjoyed.

Following five days of hearings the Portage theatre clearance case was adjourned until September 29th because of previous commitments made by counsel.

In testimony so far Mort D. Goldberg, president of the Portage Theatre Corporation and executive of the GCS Circuit, who brought the action, accused the film companies of favoring Balaban & Katz in all selling deals. He said his company had offered the distributors 10 per cent above any price paid by Balaban & Katz in order to get a run before their Gateway, Belpark and Will Rogers theatres, named in the action.

Delay will give attorneys on both sides time to work out stipulations regarding the valuation of properties involved, namely the Portage theatre and Balaban & Katz' Gateway, Belpark and Will Rogers theatres.

The Portage management claims film buying preference based on the priority of the theatre in its territory and says their investment is comparable to any Balaban & Katz theatre named in the dispute.

Detroit

Hearings on Detroit's first case, complaint of the Booth theatre, Detroit, filed in March and frequently postponed, will be heard October 2d before Jerome Thomas, head of the department of business administration at Wayne University, Julius and Milton London, owners, named Paramount, the DeLuxe, Eastend, Whittier and Michigan Cooperative theatres.

Buffalo

Michael Catalano, Buffalo attorney, has been selected to arbitrate the clearance action of the Dipson Theatre Corporation's Bailey theatre against the Big Five. The complainant asks that the Bailey get the same clearance it had before it was purchased by the Dipson interests two years ago. Hearings will begin September 22d. Meanwhile the Shea circuit, through subsidiary Buffalo Theatres, Inc., has intervened in behalf of its houses. Shea formerly owned the Bailey.

Kansas City

Wendell H. Cloud, Kansas City attorney, will arbitrate the board's second case, a clearance action by the Dickinson theatre, in Mission, Kan. No date has been set for hearing. On September 5th the Kansas City Operating Company filed as intervenor in the case in behalf of the Newman, downtown first run theatre. Jerry Zigmond, managing director, asserted the Dickinson demand would affect Newman business.

Decision by the Appeal Board on the Westway theatre clearance action, third Washington complaint, expected this week, has been postponed pending the return from holidays of Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger, members of the board.

Discussion of the administration and operation of the motion picture tribunals will occupy a prominent position in "Arbitration in Action," a study of the American Arbitration Association to be published next month by Harpers. Miss Frances Kellor, first vice-president of the AAA, is author of the work.

'Fantasia' Sets A Run Record

"Fantasia," the Disney-Stokowski cartoon and music opus playing at the Broadway Theatre in New York last week passed the 44-week mark hit by "Gone With the Wind" at the Astor. Since its premiere, recorded in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of November 16th, 1940, the film, as of September 7th, had played 649 performances in New York to 764,746 people, this "in spite of those who said it would die the death of a dog," in the words of M. J. Kavanagh, manager of the Broadway. Mr. Kavanagh opines, "This is a remarkable record for a picture which was supposed to 'flop.'"

The $2,200,000 production, according to one authoritative source who claimed anonymity, "has already showed a net profit of more than $350,000, notwithstanding the $290,000 Fantasound charges." Efforts to determine accurately how much the film grossed in its New York and other runs on a 55 cents to $2.20 scale, met with no success, however, for executives at the Disney office were reluctant to release figures.

Foreign Bookings Set

Other vital statistics concerning "Fantasia" are on the record. In addition to its 44-week Broadway run, the film is currently playing at the Carthay Circle in Los Angeles where it opened January 29th. In San Francisco, it returned for a three-week repeat engagement at the Geary, booked through RKO, following an earlier nine-week Disney run. During August, the picture opened in Sydney and Melbourne, Australia; Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, Brazil, and in Buenos Aires, Argentina. September openings are scheduled for Uruguay, Mexico and Toronto.

This week an RKO representative announced that within a few weeks that company would road-show the film in key cities, utilizing the single-track equipment rather than the more expensive RCA Fantasound or the modified methods. Ten of the 12 Disney key-city engagements (see listing below) used Fantasound and two had the modified equipment installation, at a cost of $10,000 to $15,000 for each.

Bookings, arranged through the Walt Disney office, are as follows:

Apollo, Chicago, 15 weeks.
Majestic, Boston, 15 weeks.
Aldine, Philadelphia, 12 weeks.
Geary, San Francisco, 9 weeks.
Wilson, Detroit, 11 weeks.
Hanna, Cleveland, 9 weeks.
Fulton, Pittsburgh, 8 weeks.
National, Washington, 7 weeks.
Minnesota, Minneapolis, 5 weeks.
Maryland, Baltimore, 5 weeks.
Erlanger, Buffalo, 4 weeks.
New Gallery, London, England, opened July 23rd; still playing.
Marble Arch Pavilion, London, England, Opened July 23rd; still playing.
Embassy, Sydney, Australia, opened August 15th; still playing.
Savoy, Melbourne, opened August 15th; still playing.
Cine Pathe, Rio, Brazil; opened August 23rd; still playing.
Cine Rosario, Sao Paulo, Brazil, opened August 26th; still playing.
Broadway, Buenos Aires, Argentina, opened September 9th.
The Rex, Uruguay, opened September 12th.
The Iris, Mexico City, Mexico, opened September 15th.
Royal Alexander, Toronto, Canada, opened September 29th.

Concerning the Broadway run, Mr. Kavanagh reported the following "items of interest": 55,196 children saw "Fantasia"; $110,000 was spent on newspaper advertising alone in New York and vicinity; $1,000 worth of tubes were used in the elaborate and complicated RCA fantasound set-up which resembles a small radio station; 23,906 feet of film were run for each performance, which according to computations, if laid end to end would approximate 3,000 miles of film. During the New York run there "were no accidents in the theatre and we had no law-suits." In any manager's language this constitutes a record in itself.

In connection with the forthcoming RKO bookings of "Fantasia," it was said that the road-show plan was postponed until autumn to avoid the usual summer slump at the box-office. One RKO executive hinted, however, that a primary difficulty was that RKO held out for reduction of admission prices in second-run houses in low-income localities where it was felt "Fantasia" would not be successful because of prohibitive prices. This and other difficulties will be ironed out, however, he prophesied.

If you have a holder for your Product Digest, kindly send me one. . . . I don't know why I spend the money for a half dozen motion picture publications—the Herald is the only one I ever read. . . . I have been an exhibitor since 1904 and, with all the faults in the business, I think it is a great business.

Increases Delivery Rates

Following a recent ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission which has allowed all common carriers to increase freight rates approximately 10 per cent, the Indiana Film Transit Company upped its rate on single reels from seven to eight cents and on double reels from 14 to 16 cents. The increases were said to cover mounting maintenance and labor costs.

Cincinnati Company Formed

The Chev Four-States Theatres, Inc., has been formed in Cincinnati by William and Peter Palazzolo and Deno A. Spaccarelli, to operate under a lease from the Chevwood and Woodlawn theatres. Located in Cheviot, suburban Cincinnati, formerly operated by John W. Loofburrow and J. Ebersole Crawford. The Woodlawn, after modernization, will be named the Chevron.

Release Hubbard Films

Maywood College in Scranton, Pa., has been selected as distributor by the Father Hubbard Educational Film laboratories for the eastern territory including New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. The material available to schools and other organizations are 16 mm sound films taken by Father Hubbard in his Alaskan exploration.

Bryan Foy for many years associated with Warner Brothers as producer and director has signed a term contract with Twentieth Century-Fox as an associate producer, the studio has announced. Mr. Foy, now in New York, will remain in the east for a short time before taking up his new duties October 1st.

Tri-States Theatres Sets Personnel Changes

The Tri-States Theatre Corp., at Des Moines, Iowa, is making a number of promotions and changes of managers in some of their theatres effective September 12th and October 1st. 'POLIO' CASES AND SCARE LOWER ATTENDANCE OF HOUSES IN 15 STATES

Most Exhibitors Bar Children Voluntarily in Territories Affected; Peak of Increase in Cases Reported Now Passed

Infantile paralysis epidemics of poliomyelitis, which have closed many a theatre since World War I, this week continued an interference and further threat to community health and business in widespread sections of the U. S. and Canada, with wholesale closings of theatres ordered by authorities for safety in many places, and voluntary closings effected by exhibitors in others.

Generally conceded to be the principal places of community mass assemblage, schools, churches, arenas, theatres and auditoriums of other kinds, have been shut by the scores, in Pennsylvania, Missouri, Tennessee, Mississippi, New Jersey, Alabama and in other states and Canada.

Figures released by the U. S. Public Health Service, however, indicated that the actual extent of the territorial epidemics was muchly exaggerated by persistent publicity—bringing about the usual scare. The incidence this year was said to be running about 15 per cent above last year. Moreover, health authorities report that the end is in sight, with new polio cases starting to disappear about October 1st.

Others Affected

Besides those states already mentioned, the U. S. Health Service lists New York, Georgia, Ohio, Minnesota, Illinois, Massachusetts, Kentucky, Maryland and Virginia as reporting infantile paralysis afflictions, with resultant effect of varying degree on school attendance and theatre-going, depending on the actions of authorities within the immediate vicinities. The largest block exhibition shutdowns have been in Tennessee, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Elsewhere, only certain communities have been hit.

The disease exists in some of the other states, but those mentioned all had reported 15 or more.

Theatre attendance along the Gulf Coast has dropped sharply.

In many places, attendance is being discouraged, rather than actually forbidden by authorities, pending developments.

All Hamilton Theatres Close

Every theatre in Hamilton County, Tennessee, was closed last week as a precautionary measure in the paralysis epidemic.

Chattanooga's 16 motion-picture houses, 13 white and three colored, were closed—suspending their regular programs for the first time since the flu epidemic during the World War. This was the first city in the stricken Southeastern states to take such a step. Other amusement places were also affected.

Theatre men met with Health Director F. O. Pearson, deciding to close all theatres for approximately two weeks to aid in preventing the spread of the epidemic.

Children under 12 have not been admitted to theatres for several weeks. Churches throughout the county postponed services under an agreement reached at an inter-denominational conference between pastors and health officials. Opening of schools again was postponed.

Attempting to check the paralysis epidemic raging through the Southeast, military authorities over the weekend issued orders forbidding civilian guests at the Fort Oglethorpe post theatre. The fort is about 10 miles from theatres in seven Bergen County communities Chattanooga.

In New Jersey, children have ben barred from by order of health authorities, who fear the spread of paralysis.

The restriction is in effect in Rutherford, East Rutherford, Hackensack, Englewood, Fort Lee, Cliffside Park and Bergenfield. Ten other municipalities have the ban under consideration.

The move does not affect adult attendance, which theatre men report is normal. Exhibitors in other parts of New Jersey have promised immediate and full cooperation with the authorities should the necessity arise.

Subsequently, this week, postponement of public school openings in 11 more Bergen County municipalities because of the prevalence of infantile paralysis was announced.

School Openings Postponed

School boards in Hackensack, Oradell, Bergenfield, Cliffside Park, Norwood, Wood-Ridge, Maywood, Fort Lee, Palisades Park, Bogota and Englewood set the opening dates back from Monday to September 22.

In 11 counties of Pennsylvania, theatre attendance by children has been forbidden. Other state theatres are being asked to voluntarily refuse admittance to children. In 10 counties of eastern and central Pennsylvania, the summer vacation was extended. The Harrisburg Board of Health warned exhibitors to ban persons under 18. Lancaster authorities took similar action.

Exhibitors in the Harrisburg area report decreases in attendance from 40 to 50 per cent as a result of the epidemic that is centered in 11 counties in Eastern Pennsylvania.

Attendance Drops

Theatre managers complain that it is not the drop in juvenile attendance that is hurting business as much as the alarms that has been created among adults.

Managers of downtown theatres invited Dr. Robert M. Hursh, city health officers, to station policemen in the lobbies to determine whether or not a patron is eligible. Move followed complaint by Dr. Hursh that some children under 18 were being admitted.

The infantile paralysis epidemic in eastern Pennsylvania has now hit the independent film exchanges in Philadelphia servicing the territory. Since most of the communities in the area ban children from attending the movie houses, there has been a decided drop in the buying of western pictures, which represents the bulk of the business for many of the independents.

Reports of new polio cases in Alabama are causing a letdown in attendance to the extent that children are hardly seen at all in theatre audiences. Cancellation of conferences in Montgomery and Auburn this week and postponement of college openings upon advice of state and county health authorities have reacted negatively on film houses.

SCHINE'S INAUGURATE LUNCH-HOUR SHOWS

On September 22nd, Schine's Capitol theatre in Ilion, N. Y., will inaugurate a noonday recreation hour in a bid for business of defense workers at the Remington Arms plant in that city.

The men, most of whom carry their lunches from home, will be permitted to eat them in the theatre during a 50-minute showing of short subjects. Admission will be 10 cents. Ronald Failes, manager of the Capitol, originated the idea with the cooperation of the factory management.

Warner Managers Meet

The annual general meeting of house managers of the Warner theatre circuit in the Philadelphia area will be held Sept. 24th at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel there. Highlight of the meeting will be the final prize awards in the past season's "Drive To Meet and Beat The Emergency," conceived by zone chief Ted Schlanger and dedicated to circuit general manager Joseph Bernhardt, culminating a 52-week contest to merchandise pictures, service and good will. Also the distribution of three new automobiles to the circuit's three outstanding showmen-managers, personally presented each year by Mr. Bernhardt.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

New Faces

The greatest event in the motion picture industry, outside of a boxoffice record breaker, is the discovery and introduction of a "new face." It should be an event for celebration by producer, distributor and exhibitor.

That's the opinion of Lester Cowan, producer, now engaged in a country wide-tour to show his Columbia production, "Ladies in Retirement," to exhibitors.

Suiting his action to his belief, Mr. Cowan is "press agenting" the debut of two players, Isobel Elsom and Edith Barrett, both of whom are recruits for the stage.

Should Add Value

"Every picture," he said last week before flying to San Francisco on the first leg of a four-week trip which will finally land him in New York for conferences with his production partner, Gilbert Miller, "should introduce at least one new face. There are many reasons for this.

"Every producer with each picture should add something to the value of the industry as a whole. The business is based on talent, and new discoveries are just like something in the bank for the entire industry.

"Exhibitors should welcome new faces and push them with the public. Producers should give newcomers every opportunity to make good and add to the total wealth of the personality file. Distributors should make special efforts to sell the newcomers to showmen who in turn sell them to the public."

By developing interest in new faces and grooming players for star roles, Mr. Cowan said, the casting problems so acute at the present time would be avoided, or eliminated.

"Top players are refusing to appear in more than a certain number of roles annually because of taxation and other reasons," he said. "This industry has neglected to develop public interest in new personalities during the past years and as a result, there is a real dearth of top player material.

"Had studios introduced new players on a concerted program to find the keys to public favor, we would not have the present problems in casting, and the 'typing' of players which is exhausting the public's temper.

"There is an obligation on the producer's part, in addition to making boxoffice pictures, to contribute something in the way of novice talent to the wealth of the industry as a whole."

Mr. Cowan, one time executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and credited with the development of the annual awards program, is still award conscious, despite the fact that he left the Academy eight years ago.

"There should be another Academy or industry award—and that should go to the producer who during the year introduces the most new personalities," he said.

His New York conferences with Mr. Miller, his production partner, will decide the future of Lester Cowan Productions, Inc.—whether it will continue to release through Columbia, or sign a deal with United Artists.

ALEX GOTTLIEB, 34-year-old producer, who is riding the tremendous wave generated by the Abbott and Costello pictures. He produced "Buck Privates", "In the Navy" and the forthcoming "Ride 'Em, Cowboy", to be released November 28th.

In each of the cities where he will have his own "trade showings" of "Ladies in Retirement," with the cooperation of Columbia exchange men, Mr. Cowan will endeavor to enlist the aid of exhibitors in his "new faces" drive.

Warners Lead

Tied last week for first place in the production race—which, of course, isn't in fact a race at all, unless there's a selling sprint in the offing—the Warner plant was out in front again this week with ten pictures shooting.

Race or not, the spurt makes a difference in the atmosphere around the studio and the pursuits of its pernonnel. "For the first time in the history of Warner Brothers," said an announcement issued at weekend, the studio's entire star roster, with the exception of Wayne Morris, now in the Navy, and Brenda Marshall, recuperating from an appendectomy, is employed in current pictures or making tests for productions scheduled to start soon."

Additionally, the studio had working on its stages the following outside talent: Henry Fonda, Robert Cummings, Monty Woolly, Lloyd Nolan, Constance Bennett, Bruce Cabot, Warren William, Betty Brewer, Peter Lorre, Conrad Veidt, Judith Anderson, half a dozen others.

Circumstances further denoting the nature of the flourishing activity are the announcement that the studio has abandoned production of "B" pictures entirely and released Bryan Foy, renowned "Keeper of the B's," who joined Twentieth Century-Fox forthwith.

The situation at weekend stood like this:

Harry Grindell-Matthews, famed inventor of the "death-ray," who died the other day, in London, once worked for Warner Brothers, in New York, in 1926-27, to where he was taken by that movie company as a special consultant in the early formulations of the synchronization of sound and action in motion pictures.

Mr. Matthews had been ill for several months in his lonely, carefully guarded laboratory and home on the top of a mountain near Swansea, Wales, a place surrounded with fantastic electrically charged fences and burglar alarms.

His 'death-ray,' it was claimed, could bring down airplanes at a distance, stopping the motor dead in mid-air. In recent years he had been developing a scheme for aerial defense of cities by 'mining' the air with bombs rocketed up to 30,000 feet and suspended from parachutes by thin steel wires. He had inventions for the wireless control of torpedoes, airplanes and motorboats. He had said that his radio conversations from the ground with assistants riding in airplanes, 'way back in 1911, were the first use of the radio telephone.

Columbia Pictures announces that its new motion picture, "Bachelors' Babies," originally titled "The Stork Pays Off," has been changed again to "The Stork Pays Off."

BOB HOPE and Paramount and Pepsodent have promoted funnyman Hope's 'autobiography' and will sell it for a dime. Its current publication has some connection with Hope's new Paramount picture, "Nothing But the Truth."

Bob was named Lester Townes Hope, and he didn't like it. So he changed it. He had a big beak (nose) even then. It was so long his mother thought that they had left the stork instead of a babe.

When he was but a youngster, the family moved from England, to these shores. "As the ship steamed into New York Harbor, we were yelling so loud you could hardy hear the cattle," Bob remembers. "It was the first time the Statue of Liberty ever thumbed its nose at anyone."

He was a beautiful youngster when they arrived at Cleveland. His mother had him kidnapped regularly twice a week just so they could see his picture in the papers. He had such long curls that it wasn't 'till he got his first hair cut that he had to wear a shirt. Bob says he got those closepin ears from his mother's frequent hanging him on the clothesline to dry.

He really was a bad little boy. In fact, Bob's father once spanked him so hard he went to a palmist and got his dad's palm read. He used to spend so much time in the woodshed, twice a year a man had to come over and treat him for termites.

"Our home life was very pleasant," Bob remembers, "except that father was somewhat absent-minded. Every night at ten o'clock pop would get up from his easy chair, kiss the cat 'goodnight,' put mamma out, take off his clothes and go down to the office."

Sunday is the home day that clings to his memory. "On Sunday morning we (there were seven little Hopes) would all stretch out on the floor and look at the funnies. But it wasn't until we stood up and looked at each other that we began laughing."

One of his childhood games was teasing the motorman of Cleveland's Euclid Avenue street car. Bob and the kids used to bend the car tracks so the trolley car would go right into the lobby of the old Regent Hotel. They did it so often the motorman finally took a room there.

In school, he was very thorough. He made the only spitballs that were ever approved by Good Housekeeping. He wore the dunce cap so much that when he was 30 years old his hair was still growing to a point.

Bob didn't go to work at an early age because he didn't want to build up a commercial career and have his life dramatized in the movies by Don Ameche or Paul Muni.

Bob Hope started in theatricals quite early. When he was a mechanic in the Chandler automobile factory, he met up with three other workers, and they formed a quartet, called the Crank Case Carusos. For years they were the only quartet that leaned to the left instead of to the right when singing "Apple Blossom Time." The Chandler General Motors people offered them five thousand a week to go on the Ford Sunday Evening Hour. One day the four had a jam session while working on the assembly line, and 72 cars went through without running boards. That was the real beginning of stream-lined automobiles.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, in New York, issues the following highly informative statement to the American public, through the American press:

" . . . Miss Stanwyck . . . portrays a fiery strip-teaser who, to avoid the police, hides out in a brownstone house habited by eight professors working on an encyclopedia. . . . "

John O'Donnell and Doris Fleeson, the Washington inside-politics columnistic team, tell about how President Roosevelt has made no secret of his belief that if he hadn't taken up politics he would have made a good managing editor. And about how he also has the quiet conviction that he might have been a success as a movie director. Well, the other night, after he had delivered his broadcast, the newsreel men gathered around to do their stuff as the President repeated the highlights of his address for the movie audiences.

Each newsreel chief had marked his copy of the speech to indicate what he thought were the key sentences for the President to repeat. White House Press Secretary Early had marked his copy. The boys went into a huddle. As they argued, the President leaned back from the microphones, puffed on his cigaret and remarked with a grin:

"All right, boys. No hurry. Take your time —and when you're all through, I'll do it my way."

With his pencil he swiftly marked the paragraphs he intended to repeat for the newsreel cameras, handed his copy to Early and the cameramen, and remarked:

"There you are! I know the punch lines of this speech."

National Theatre Supply Marking 15th Anniversary

Twenty-nine branches and 300 supply managers, salesmen and office personnel of National Theatre Supply Company are celebrating the firm's 15th anniversary this month. Anniversary greetings have been sent to the entire personnel by Walter E. Green, president, Oscar Oldknow, vice-president, and R. B. LaRue, secretary.

National was organized in 1926, amalgamating 54 individual supply dealers into one corporate set-up, "for the purpose of eliminating multiplicity and duplication of merchandising and in order to achieve greater service to exhibitors generally." Since the merger, the company introduced in the exhibitor field such technical equipment as the Simplex high-one kilowatt arc, the Simplex E-7 with one shot lubrication and double shutters, the Simplex four-star sound with extended volume range and the Walker plastic molded screen.

To New York in 1928

In 1928, National moved its headquarters from Chicago to New York in order "to effect greater efficiency for its customers." According to Mr. F. L. Friedman, sales promotion manager, "The company came into the picture when the industry was in a state of flux; the introduction of sound was just ahead; the big circuits were acquiring more and more theatres and the country, both economically and socially, was definitely in a transitional period." But National, Mr. Friedman pointed out, "weathered the storm and went through its growing pains. Today the organization is more compact, more stream-lined; its personnel richer in experience. Incidentally, more than half of National's employes are in the company's service from eight to 15 years."

National, Mr. Friedman pointed out, now has its own "finance affiliate for the financing of its customers' installment purchases; an Equipment Loan Service, backed by one half-million dollars worth of special projection equipment that gives exhibitors more than 1,000,000 hours of emergency service every year, absolutely free. Its manual on Projection Room Planning is the standard of the industry. It has held a series of educational meetings for projectionists in various cities designed to acquaint craftsmen with the newest development in projection."

Mr. Friedman also pointed out that National has fulfilled the prophecy made in 1926, at the time of the merger, by the EXHIBITORS' HERALD which editorialized as follows: "This consolidation is a sound and logical development in the equipment field. Having welded together a group of strong units, it is now in a position to render nationally a thoroughly indispensable service to theatre owners in matters of equipment, maintenance and operation. Progress in the theatre field has been so swift and uncompromising that the theatre owner faces a pressing need of the best possible service in equipment matters. The new organization will aim to meet this need, and with the facilities at its command it offers great promise of immediately becoming a substantial factor in continuing progress and development in the theatre field."

LABOR SEEKING A 10 PER CENT INCREASE FOR STUDIO WORKERS

Negotiations on Basic Pact in Newark Include Discussion of Wage Scales; Walt Disney Studios Open After Shutdown

Studio unions will bargain for an average wage increase of 10 per cent during the forthcoming labor conferences to be held over the weekend in Newark, N. J., with Pat Casey, producers' labor contact, here from the West Coast lending a hand in completing arrangements for the annual negotiations. The wage increase will be sought by the six unions which signed the studio basic agreement and the IATSE. It is expected that a six-hour call and other changes in working conditions are to be considered. The latter demand, if granted, would raise annual studio payrolls another 10 per cent.

Another point of discussion at the basic agreement negotiations will be the demand of Studio Photographers Local 665 that its jurisdiction be extended to cover first cameramen on all major lots, a field held since 1933 by the American Society of Cinematographers.

Francis Carothers, secretary of the internationals' basic agreement committee, headed the group of representatives of carpenters, electricians, teamsters, plasterers, laborers and musicians unions who came East for the meeting. David Lory, business representative, and John Martin, vice president of Studio Laboratory Technicians Local 683 also journeyed Newark-ward for the conferences. Local 683, it was said is opposed to re-entry of the IATSE into the basic agreement.

Meanwhile, the Sound Technicians Local 659 went on record this week that unless the basic pact meeting results in a satisfactory agreement for that local, it will consider a strike vote. Their demands include extension of jurisdiction over some workers now represented by the Electrical Workers Brotherhood.

Labor Violation Suit

Last week a suit was filed against Twentieth Century-Fox in Los Angeles Federal district court by Dave Poyer and Leonard de la Cuesta, Jr., the first recovery suit on record, charging a studio with violation of the fair labor standards act. The plaintiffs claimed a total of $1,866 due in back pay, overtime pay and penalties for work as wranglers in "How Green Was My Valley." No union is involved. The plaintiffs allege the Fox studio did not pay them for overtime under the 40-hour week limitation and also certain sums under the week limit.

Following a four-week shutdown, 650 strikers and non-strikers returned to the Walt Disney Studio on Monday. Company executives said that only 65 per cent of all employes would be re-employed by the end of the week and that no increase would be made until new productions were started. The lay-off resulted from the recent Screen Cartoonists Guild strike for which Department of Labor conciliators in Washington worked out a plan acceptable to the Guild and the studio. The agreement is said to provide for a proportionate re-hiring of strikers and non-strikers with consideration given to seniority and to special skills. About 1,100 workers were on the payroll prior to the strike but the studio claimed there would not be sufficient work for the entire force.

Primary consideration before the Screen Publicists Guild convention which opened in New York on Monday, was the question of possible affiliation with the C.I.O. Nat James and Robert Joseph, official Hollywood Guild delegates, arrived in New York for the convention on Saturday. New York Guild representatives were Steve Freeland and Carl Rigrod.

Last Thursday, at a Guild meeting held at the Hotel Piccadilly, John Stanley, national secretary-treasurer of the United Office and Professional Workers of America, C.I.O., addressed the members, stating the C.I.O.'s case and explaining that if the Guild decided to go with that labor body, it would become a part of the U.O.P.W.A., as the latter has jurisdiction over publicists in the film field. An A. F. of L. representative was expected to argue his side before the group on Thursday.

Meanwhile, Guild negotiations with the eight major companies are progressing, although the talks are still general in character. Despite the fact that free-lance artists were excluded from the recent NLRB vote, the SPG is seeking the right to represent them on the grounds that their work necessarily affects the status of salaried artists.

The Columbia Film Office Workers Guild voted unanimously last Thursday to join the United Office and Professional Workers of America, a C.I.O. affiliate, which move was recommended to independent unions by the Screen Guild Council of New York, comprising unaffiliated guilds including the SPG, Screen Readers Guild and office workers groups at Loew's, Paramount, Warners and Twentieth Century-Fox.

The Columbia Guild also filed a petition with the State Labor Relations Board for collective bargaining, stating it was formed two months ago and had a majority of the 280 home office employes.

Readers Guild Contracts

The Screen Readers Guild mailed proposed contracts to home offices of the six major companies exercising the NLRB decision that the Guild is the sole collective bargaining agency for screen readers. It was reported that the contracts call for a weekly pay of $85, a closed shop and provisions covering free-lance readers. The latter were excluded from the bargaining unit by the NLRB. However, the Readers Guild claims that free-lance readers affect the bargaining power of salaried readers and that the Guild should have the right to represent such readers as a necessary protection for salaried workers.

Empire State, Allied projectionists union and Local 306 of the IATSE engaged in warfare last week, reminiscent of the '30's, with picketing and counter-picketing of theatres foreseen if the fighting continues. The situation broke out when Lambroso and Tomassino opened the New Delancey, at Delancey and Allen streets in Manhattan, and engaged Empire State projectionists in place of Local 306 operators who were previously employed there. The latter union picketed the theatre and Empire retaliated by picketing Loew's Delancey, whereupon 306 reached the ad absurdum stage by picketing the Empire pickets. Another Manhattan theatre, the Midtown, at Broadway and 100th Street, formerly an RKO house and now operated by Fred J. Dollinger, also hired Empire operators in place of Local 306 men. The picketing pickets altercation then ensued.

Negotiations for a new contract between Chicago theatre managers and the Chicago Moving Picture Operators Union have been postponed until after the annual meeting of the American Federation of Labor at Danville, Ill., and the Allied convention at Philadelphia this week. Talks will be resumed next Monday.

Claiming rising cost of living, the stagehands' union of Detroit completed a one-year agreement through its business agent, Ed King, Local 38, sending up the wage scale. The Detroit musicians' union also is increasing its scale based on the high cost of living. Stagehands' scale for straight picture houses remains unchanged, however, but overtime is increased 15 cents per hour to $1.50 and $1.75. Downtown popular priced theatres with film-vaudeville combinations will now pay $10 per man.

Grips and spotlight operators in combination and legitimate theatres are raised 50 cents per show while all stagehands in houses running stage shows only a few nights a week and neighborhood theatres with stage shows also are raised 50 cents per show.

Motion picture operators who refused to cross a picket line thrown by the stagehands' union at the Maffitt Theatre, a North St. Louis neighborhood house operated by Fanchon and Marco-St. Louis Amusement Company, forced the closing of the theatre last week.

Stagehands began picketing the house after managers refused to hire a union stagehand at $75 a week.

George J. Kamm, projectionist at the Fulton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., was re-elected president of the Lancaster Central Labor Union for the 17th consecutive term.

Picketing in Texas

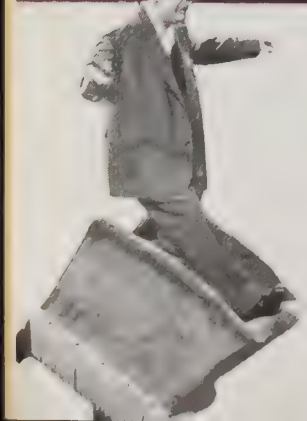
Members of MPMO Local 526 at Orange, Texas, an A. F. of L. unit, began picketing three theatres operated by the Jefferson Amusement Company, following their reopening, the Strand, Bengal and Gem, where a strike of the operators was provoked. Contracts with the company expired on August 31st and six operators walked out the next day. A. M. Avery, city manager for the Jefferson firm said that the shows in all three houses would continue pending signing of new contracts.

OCTOBER 6TH SET FOR BIOFF-BROWNE TRIAL

On application of United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa, Federal Judge John Holland in New York, postponed, until October 6th, the trial of William Bioff and George E. Browne on charges of alleged $550,000 extortion from four major film companies. It is reported that the District Attorney's office expects to proceed with trial on that date without seeking any further delay.

"Time" On the Air

"The March of Time," sponsored by Time Magazine, is returning to the airlanes again on the NBC Blue Network starting Thursday, October 9th, from 8:00 to 8:30 P.M. The station line-up is not as yet complete. The program will be in behalf of Time, Inc., with Young and Rubicam handling the program.



Blasko Heads Club

Al Blasko, manager of the Parthenon theatre in Hammond, Ind., has been elected president of the Warner Employes Club.

September Blitz

Major highlight of "Unpublished Story," which Harold French is directing at Denham for Two Cities, is a graphic and ruthless recreation of the Blitz on London during the dark days of September 1940. On one of the major stages there, a dockside set has been created which is claimed to be the last word in sordid realism. Devastated streets, charred warehouses, rubble and glass, twisted girders and shattered homes create a fresco of macabre devastation such as the East End knew—and still knows after that grim period. One sequence depicts the bombing and firing of a dockside area.

To aid in infusing realism and accuracy into the scenes members of the Auxiliary Fire Service, with their trailer pumps, engines and rescue apparatus, who and which had done valiant work during the bombings of London and cities such as Portsmouth, Coventry and Bristol, went to Denham and acted over again the grisly part they had played against Hitler's Luftwaffe.

"Unpublished Story" is a film about Fleet Street and the Blitz, a dramatization of the role of the British reporter in the Battle of Britain. Richard Greene and Valerie Hobson are the leading players in the drama. Alan MacKinnon and producer Havelock Allen devised the story, Pat Kirwan and Sidney Gilliatt are responsible for the script and Anatol de Grunwald for the adaptation.

The renewed activity on the part of Two Cities has been marked by the return to the arena of Margaret Marshall who is handling the press and publicity affairs of the company. Miss Marshall was hitherto associated with Herbert Wilcox and Julius Hagen.

Following the decision to change "The Big Blockade" into "Siege," Michael Balcon, Ealing Studios impresario has now made up his mind to go still further, and change "Portrait of a British Foreman" to "The Foreman Went to France." In this Clifford Evans, Tommy Trinder and Constance Cummings appear.

One of the matters dealt with in this new Ealing production is the evacuation of the refugees from the French battle zone. In these sequences evacuees from London, now quartered in the West Country, Cornwall, Devon and thereabouts, as well as the local peasantry themselves, have played real life roles. While scenes were being shot with the evacuues, the air raid siren sounded in earnest, adding a touch of realism to some shooting.

A two-reeler which proved prophetic of the Roosevelt-Churchill eight-point charter has been made by Leslie Howard and a production unit, World in Action. It is "Common Heritage," made before the Atlantic Fact formulated an international thesis, which recent events have, so to speak, materialized. It will be distributed here by Liberty Films.

This month Ian Dalrymple has completed his first year as producer to the Crown Film Unit, now an integral part of the Films Division of the Ministry of Information.

During his first year with this unit, Ian Dalrymple has produced a number of highly successful films, including "Front Line," "London Can Take It," "War and Order," "Air Communique," "Christmas Under Fire," "Heart of Britain," "Words for Battle," "Merchant Seamen," "Ordinary People" and "Target for Tonight."

Films now in production by the unit include "30 Thousand Men," the story of the Libyan campaign, "Ferry Pilot," dealing with the ferrying of American bombers across the Atlantic, "The Pilot Is Safe," a film of the Air Sea Rescue Service, and "Venture Adventures," dealing with the Auxiliary Training Corps.

"The White Eagle" is the new title of a film which Concanen Films are making for the Polish Government and which was previously known as "Nation in Exile." The White Eagle is the national emblem of the Poles.

Donat Injured

Despite the absence of Robert Donat who has been laid up as a result of an accident, work has been and is still proceeding without cessation on "The Young Mr. Pitt," which Carol Reed is directing at Shepherds Bush for Twentieth Century-Fox release. Donat, though he also plays the minor part of the older Chatham in early sequences, has the role of the famous Prime Minister of Britain, at one of the most colorful and dramatic periods in her history.

Downing Street in the time of George III, the House of Commons, the "Victory," the carnage of the French Revolution, Trafalgar—these are but a few of the more spectacular subjects recreated in the film, one of the most ambitious and grandiose yet attempted by Twentieth Century-Fox on this side.

Wilfred Lawson has the role of Napoleon, Stephen Haggard is Nelson, and Frank Bettingell, Muriel George, Hugh McDermott, Robert Morley, Phyllis Calvert, Jean Cadell, are but a few of the names in a considerable cast.

Photography has been entrusted to Freddie Young, and art direction to Shepherds Bush's own Vetchinsky.

Whilst work goes on at the Studios, another unit, under cameraman Roy Fogwell, has been at work on location in the Chilterns securing exteriors in the brief and elusive passages of sunshine which mark the English summer.

Three Active

Despite the mechanical difficulties of production and the constant state of political and military uncertainty, three of the seven American major corporations in this country are engaged in active production—all of them making films of more than the despised single quota brand. Columbia has a numerical lead, at present, with two films on the floor.

Most ambitious in expense and general appearance are those being made for Twentieth Century-Fox and Paramount. The former's "The Young Mr. Pitt" is on the floor at Shepherds Bush where a first month of active work has been completed. At Denham, David Rose's baby, "Hatter's Castle," is nearing its latter stages. Columbia's duo are the Formby comedy, "Double or Nothing," which is well under way at the Rock Studios Elstree, and "Unpublished Story," made under the Two Cities marque at Denham. For RKO Herbert Wilcox threatens a life of Amy Johnson. The Walter Wanger-Schoedsack film on the Eagle Squadron is not strictly a British subject, even though it is being mainly made here. Warners suffer a temporary holiday. Metro's Ben Goetz and Clarence Brown are awaited to launch the next Metro-British production.

Despite the difficult situation other units are also at work in the near London studios. Gainsborough have concluded "Hi Gang" and the Bebe Daniels-Ben Lyon duo have left for a flying visit to New York and Hollywood.

With the labor situation still obscure but potentially due for a worsening, with technicians being called to the colors, more being requisitioned, and the production companies asking just exactly where they stand and what the Government intends to do finally and unequivocally, studios still held by the Government departments and materials rationed, it cannot be wondered that many units are withholding formal or final announcement of production plans. A residue of feature production is, however, certain during the forthcoming months—unless the military situation becomes more acute.

Most active of all are the documentary producers who, mainly with the manifold blessings of the M.o.I. Films Division, are turning out an unceasing flow of pictures aimed for the most part at propagating the British case, appealing to the public or instructing them on various matters and subjects of war import; creating instructional films for the services; covering the whole field of propaganda education and instruction with an intensity never before known in the industry here. To a great extent the mechanical processes of production have been turned from entertainment to documentary. The field, however, is probably more active than lucrative.

FIRST SKIRMISH WON BY INDUSTRY IN BRITAIN ON LABOR RESERVATION

First Projectionists Are Held Reserved; Ministry of Labor To Hear Individual Pleas on Calling Apprentices, Women

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Though the dislocation which the exhibiting section of the industry will suffer as a result of the Government decision not to reserve second projectionists and usherettes is calculated to be considerable, there is no small gratification among exhibitors at what has already been preserved.

The retention of first projectionists in the reserved category, and the expressed willingness of the Ministry of Labor to hear the picturehouse viewpoint before the young usherette is called to warwork, together with some evidence of governmental readiness to co-operate actively, all these are taken as the best of a bad job, but an acceptable best none the less.

Most notable development since the Ministry of Labor decision, is the creation in the London area of a trade committee which will examine all cases where picture houses claim exemption for members of their staffs. Applications for reprieve will go through this committee, upon which it is expected a Government official will sit. Though this particular Committee will cover the London area alone, it is the first of a complete series which will in due course operate in all the twelve regions into which the country is divided in the present emergency.

Training Is Problem

Out of the tangle emerge also two problems, the training of women to take a further and more intensive part in the projection booth, and the "poaching" of employes by cinemas in a position to offer higher wages. Both are being tackled with some vigor.

The callup of second projectionists will not affect more than 784 men of military age. Out of the country's present total of 4847 picture houses, not all of them operating of course, the bite is not thought to be considerable, and the opinion is found that though the callup will greatly hit individual picturehouses, the sum total of sacrifice demanded of the industry is less than it might have been. There remain 790 first projectionists within the military age limits who will not be touched.

To replace these second projectionists who are being called to the colors it is certain that a considerable number of women will be trained. Already second and third positions in boxes in many parts of the country, including the London area are held by women. Exhibitors have been advised by their Association to put selected women into full-time training at once, the Ministry having given a virtual guarantee that they will not touch either trained women or those now in full-time training. There is a three-month period of approval for the latter. If at the end of the three-month training period any are found to be inexpert or unskilled, they will be subject to registration and callup The training has to be serious, and exhibitors who merely put usherettes into the boxes for part-time training will have their girls summoned for MOL interview.

Meanwhile as the younger girls are called to warwork from the picturehouses older women will, it is hoped, replace them in the aisles.

To formalize and coordinate the whole position of women employes in regard to registration for warwork the London and Home Counties Branch of the C. E. A., which covers an area far wider than the capital itself, has, with the approval and collaboration of the authorities, set up a committee which, as already suggested, will be the virtual parent of a dozen which will in due course cover the whole country. Exhibitors who consider they have justification for asking that their women employees be retained in their work, on grounds of irreplaceability or vital work, or otherwise, will place their claims with the committee. To the committee, on which probably a regional officer of the Ministry of Labor will sit, will go the task of deciding whether such a claim is justified and, if so, of passing it, with formal benison to the local Labor Exchange. There is no guarantee whatever that such a blessing will be accepted by the Labor Exchange as reason for exemption. That it will carry considerable weight is none the less certain.

To Aid Replacements

Exhibitors will state just what staff they have available, whether in any instances women are replacing men in particular jobs, and when desirable ask the Ministry of Labor's assistance in obtaining either older women or younger girls to replace those to be called up.

Exhibitors face the likelihood also that many second projectionists—one estimate is 90 per cent—will go out for jobs as first projectionists, with consequent drainage of the reserves of labor.

Another minor snag lies in the existence of certain Home Office regulations which demand that the box shall never be left in the charge of anyone under 18. What will happen when the first projectionist takes his half day, and leaves the box to the second projectionist, in many cases a young boy, or now a young girl, is not clear. The Ministry of Labor has, however, agreed to approach the Home Office in order that the regulation may be amended or allowed an elastic interpretation.

Chief internal problem within the wider problem of manpower is that of "poaching." With the shortage of men and the decrease in the reserves of available labor some houses are, it is suggested, luring first projectionists and seconds of over military age, with high salaries. In other instances projectionists knowing they have the key to a difficult situation within their own hands are canvassing more highly paid jobs—and getting them. To the dangers of this exhibitors are becoming increasingly alive, and the matter has been discussed frankly in more than one exhibitor group. To counter this process of rot, many suggestions have been made. The most reiterated is a system of registration of staffs. Others have been that all chief projectionists coming on the trade union wage rates schedules should not be allowed to leave a post without an approach being made to his employer. The Ministry of Labor can do little in this regard since the industry is not classed as essential. "Poaching" will come increasingly before exhibitor councils in the near future. It is obviously an exhibitor problem to be solved by the exhibitor himself.

To Adjust Opening Time

The Government plans a complete readjustment of film theatre operating hours, especially in industrial and metropolitan areas, for the Winter, it is understood.

It is believed the Government plan calls for the staggering of the hours of employment, sports and entertainment. It is thought the aim is to ease the transportation problem. One suggestion considered was for all film houses to be closed in London and other key cities between four and six o'clock every afternoon.

However, exhibitors are sharply critical of the plan, since that period is one of the busiest of the day.

The General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association last week expressed dissatisfaction with the proposal of Western Electric that exhibitors pay all premiums for war damage insurance.

Exhibitors plan to approach the Board of Trade for a solution to the problem. The CEA has reported success in obtaining the necessary exemptions from military service for employees to carry on theatre operation.

PRODUCTION FACES MANPOWER LOSS

Although exhibition in England has succeeded in placing the problem of manpower at least on a discussion basis, production is very much concerned following increased demands for manpower by the services and by the Ministry of Labor. Despite a virtual guarantee from the Government that the recent demand for 100 technicians represented the maximum, the new demands vastly exceed this figure and will practically cripple production. The demands have paralyzed current plans on the part of American companies to spend their frozen funds making world market films.

Home for Industry's Needy Opens Sunday

A country home for the needy of the motion picture industry will be opened Sunday, September 21st, in Hollywood. Many Hollywood celebrities will be present for the official opening and the proceedings will be broadcast over the Columbia network.

Jean Hersholt, president of the Motion Picture Relief Fund; Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Producers Association; Edward Arnold, president of the Screen Actors Guild; George Stevens, president of the Screen Directors Guild, and Sheridan Gibney, president of the Screen Writers Guild, are to be speakers. Mary Pickford, one of the founders of the Motion Picture Relief Fund, also is to be heard.

Discussed for years, the home became an attainable goal in January, 1939, when the Gulf Oil Corporation assumed sponsorship of the "Screen Guild Theater," a weekly radio program of the Columbia Broadcasting System. Members of the five mentioned organizations contributed their services to the broadcasts and $10,000 was turned over to the Motion Picture Relief Fund each week the show was presented. To date, the fund has received $800,000. The series, off the air through the Summer, returns to the Columbia network September 28th.

See Film Strike Against Mexican Majors Inevitable

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

Extension of the film workers strike to major distributors other than Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Columbia on Wednesday, the union's deadline for further action, appeared inevitable earlier this week as the union declared that all conciliatory efforts were useless unless the distributors were prepared to yield to labor's demand.

In a surprise move on Wednesday, however, the laborites called a strike against Warner—an unexpected move since it was thought the strike would be called against the remaining six companies at once.

The strike against MGM and Columbia which began September 2nd, has been declared legal by the Federal Board of Conciliation and Arbitration. The ruling means that the companies must pay the wages of the workers during the strike.

The film unions have advised the Confederation of Mexican Workers that they are preparing to launch a series of short strikes in the near future against all branches of the Mexican film industry, including theatres, in an effort to bring the strike against the distributors to a successful conclusion.

Increasing anxiety among exhibitors is apparent already and predictions are heard that wholesale closings of theatres will follow the threatened ending of film service by American distributors on October 5th. Notice that film service will be halted then has been given the exhibitors by the distributors in line with the 30-day notice clause in exhibition contracts.

The Confederation of Chambers of Commerce, pessimistic about the settlement of the conflict between the Mexican film union and the major American companies, foresees the closing of all of Mexico's 958 theatres within six weeks after October 5th.

Time Extension Expected

With MGM and Columbia exchanges closed September 2nd, the general strike has been announced by labor leaders to take place September 29th, but it is believed that only two more American exchanges will be closed and a new period of grace granted by the strikers to the remaining four. The American distributors, however, are sticking by the 30-day notice given Mexican exhibitors expiring October 4th when all shipments of prints will be stopped and exchanges closed.

Among those standing to lose heavily if the strike succeeds in closing all theatres is the Federal Government which will be deprived of about 10,000 pesos now collected daily for admission taxes. The National Treasury will also lose about 100,000 pesos a month for uncollected import duties on American film plus 5% on gross income paid by the American companies, the latter amounting to about 50,000 additional pesos per month.

There are about 12,000 wage earners directly depending on the 958 theatres affected by the proposed general strike, plus the personnel of the allied interests such as the press, printing houses, advertising agencies, transportation, etc., that would naturally suffer as well.

Allied Charges Unfair Exchange Treatment

Two exhibitor groups convened last week at widely separated points, each for the purpose of airing industry problems confronting them. Allied of New Jersey met in Camden, N. J., and the Independent Owners of the Coast, comprising owners and operators from California, Oregon and Washington, assembled at Seattle.

A serious charge was made at the Allied meeting, that exchange employes are meting out discourteous treatment to exhibitors. A proposal was set forth that Allied request the general sales managers of all distributor companies to appoint a "goodwill ambassador" for the purpose of checking alleged ill treatment accorded to exhibitors by bookers, salesmen and branch managers. An Allied spokesman indicated that the charge would be brought into the open at the national convention of Allied in Philadelphia this week.

Directors of the ITA of the West Coast convened to discuss the theatre tax situation and general problems growing out of the new selling plan under the consent decree.

Among those present at the Seattle meeting were: Rotus Harvey, operating a circuit in Northern California; Hugh Bruen of Whittier, Calif. Jack Berman, operating several theatres in Los Angeles; Ben Levin of San Francisco; W. O. (Bill) Ripley of Longview; Bob White, Portland; Wes Johnson, Eugene, and Bob Poole of Los Angeles, and L. O. Lukan, Seattle, and James Hone, executive Secretary.

Rapp Brothers Plan New Suburban Chicago Theatre

Plans are being drawn by C. W. and George L. Rapp, Chicago, for a 1,600-seat theatre to be built in Maywood, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, by Paramount Pictures, Inc. The theatre, to be called the Paramount, will be located on a site 135 by 135 feet, a block south of the Lido Theatre, Maywood's largest playhouse operated by the Simansky and Miller circuit.

Construction may be started about November 1st with the expectation that it will open about May 1st, 1942. It is said that the land and building will represen an investment of $225,000. According to reports, the house will be operated by Paramount and not through Balaban and Katz as are other Paramount houses in the Chicago territory.

Abbott and Costello Film

Jules Levey, producer, who recently completed the film version of "Hellzapoppin'," is preparing two more films for Universal, one to feature Bud Abbott and Lou Costello. The other production probably will be "Butch Minds the Baby," the Damon Runyon story. Mr. Levey, who arrived in New York from Hollywood on Monday, said he had two stories in mind for Abbott and Costello but has not yet decided which one to make.

C. A. Roeder Transferred

C. A. Roeder, Paramount salesman in St. Louis, has been transferred to Los Angeles, and will be replaced by E. W. Bishop, formerly for Cincinnati. Roland Minon has been added as booker at the exchange.

FWC Newsreel Chain

The Fox West Coast circuit is planning a Southern California newsreel chain. Locations are reported selected in San Diego, Long Beach, Oakland, and Phoenix. Houses are to be remodeled, at $25,000 to $35,000.

Famous Players Uses Ad Campaign

by W. M. GLADISH
in Toronto

In view of the theatre chain developments in the Dominion during the past three months, more than usual attention has been drawn to the preliminary announcement of Famous Players Canadian Corp. for the new season in which emphasis is laid on the strength and scope of the circuit headed by J. J. Fitzgibbons. The announcement accompanied the staging of a new advertising venture in a handsome exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, which had a two-million attendance before its close September 6, this being the first occasion on which a branch of the moving picture business has presented a direct display at Canada's annual fair, now being held for the 63rd year.

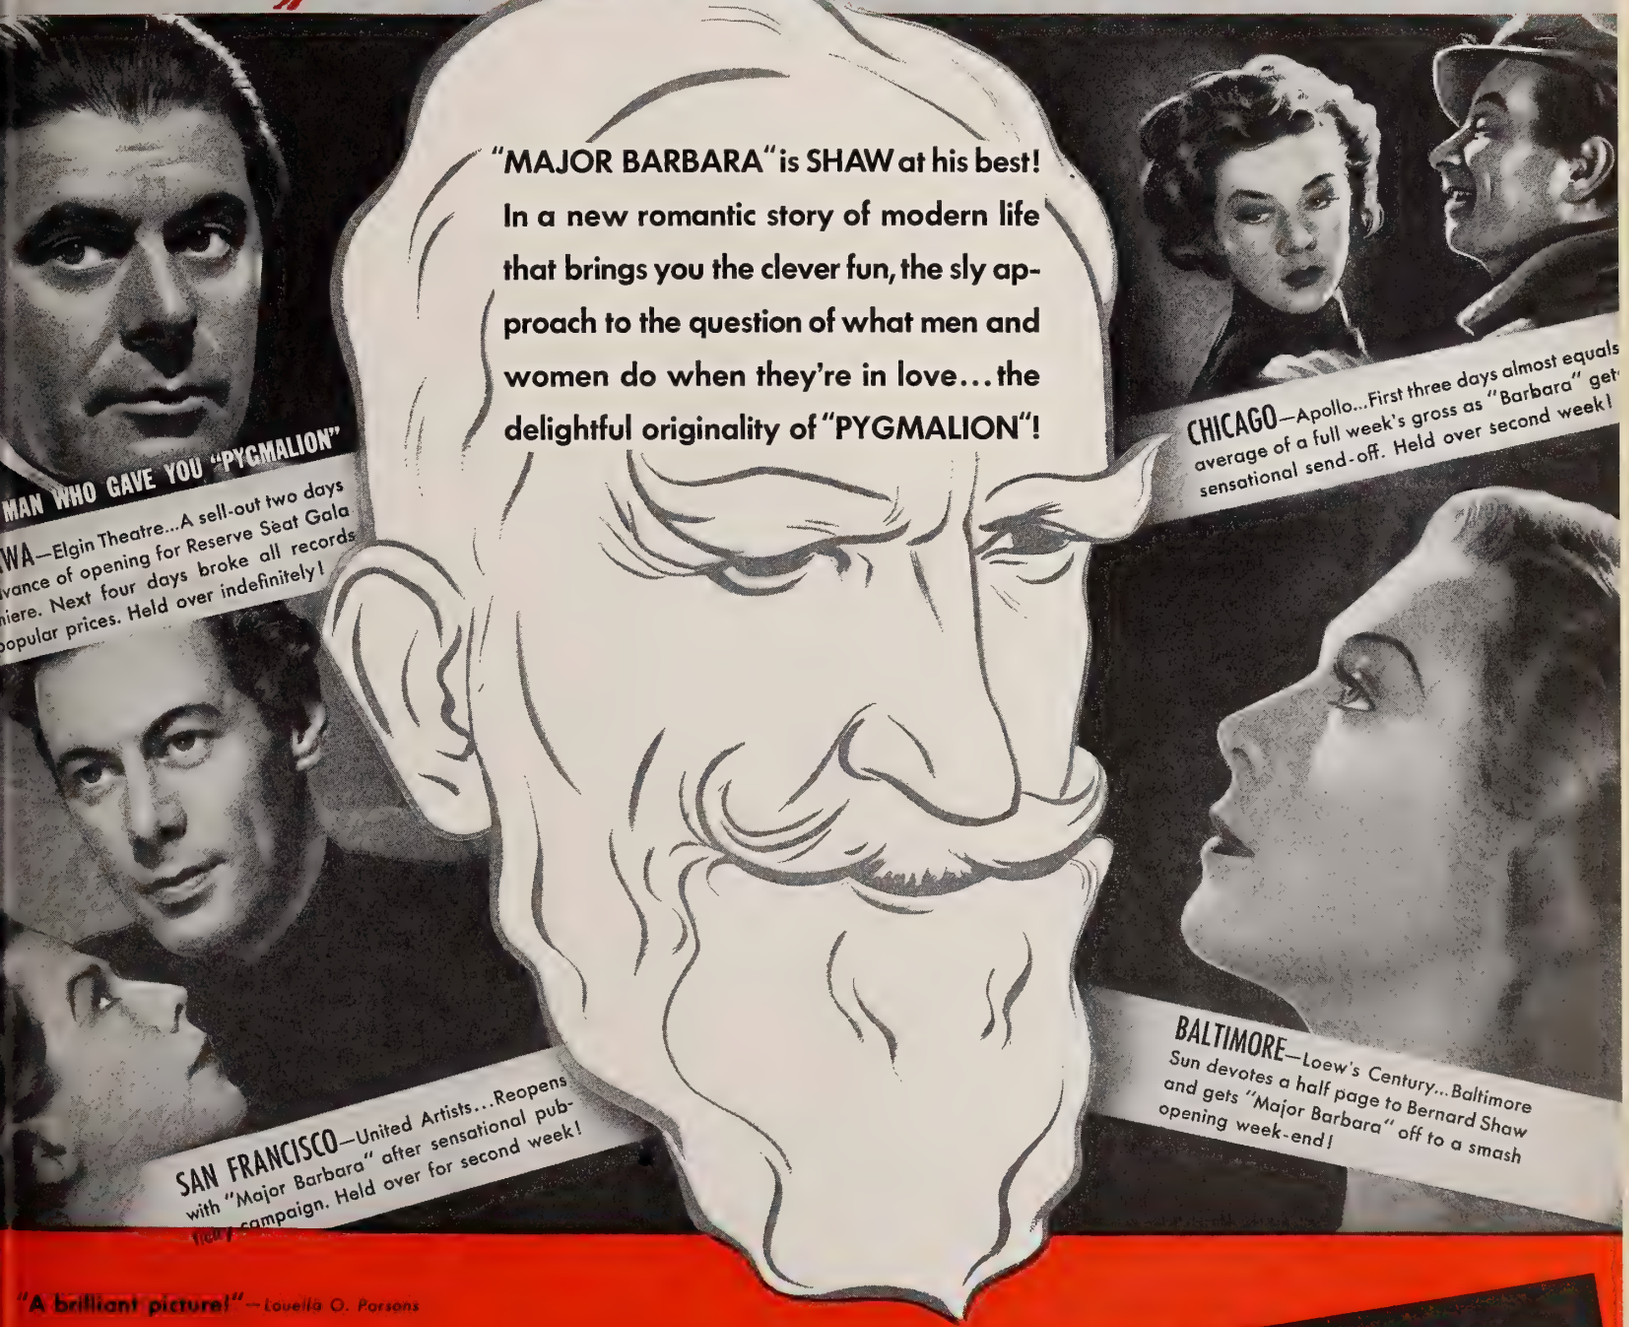
The announcement started with "Famous Players Theatres are hosts to more than a million Canadians every week. For years it has been the proud privilege of Famous Players Theatres to bring to the Canadian theatregoing public the highest type of service . . . and the finest in motion picture entertainment. Today, with an average attendance of more than a million persons a week, the prestige and popularity of Famous Players Theatres and affiliated houses across Canada command first choice of pictures from the leading studios of the world."

Seek Variety in Films

The proclamation pointed out that "to keep faith with our millions of patrons we have contracted with the leading studios for their most elaborate spectacles, classics of literature, dramatic masterpieces, musical and comedies . . . a variety to meet every taste and preference.

"The new season starts now . . . Attend a Famous Players Theatre this week . . . every week. Relax in luxurious, healthful and comfortable surroundings . . . See how smoothly Famous Players' service functions for your pleasure . . . and above all be assured of the finest motion picture programs our money and your money can buy."

The individual announcements include references to early releases of Paramount, Warner Bros., 20th Century-Fox, RKO Radio, M-G-M, Columbia, Universal and United Artists, with a further listing of short subjects. Among the number of single features announced for the circuit are "Citizen Kane," "Sergeant York," "A Yank in the R.A.F.," "When Ladies Meet," "Our Wife," "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," "Dive Bomber," "Bahama Passage," "Hold That Ghost," "Major Barbara," "You'll Never Get Rich," "Skylark," "How Green Was My Valley," "Father Takes a Wife," "Hold Back the Dawn," "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," "Aloma of the South Seas," "Captains of the Clouds," "Before the Fact," "Wild Geese Calling," "The Man Who Came to Dinner," "Fantasia," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Reap the Wild Wind," "Look Who's Laughing," "New York Town," "The Great Man's Lady," "One Foot in Heaven" and "The Little Foxes."



The naming of these pictures indicates that Famous Players Canadian Corp. is proceeding with the booking of product from practically all studios for the new season. The announcement concludes with a grouping of chain units from Coast to Coast according to Provinces, with a breakdown to cities, the theatres of subsidiary companies being added to make a fortable surroundsings . . . See how smoothly compilation of approximately 300 theatres.

New circuit rivalry has obviously encouraged this promotional work, which will probably have widespread effectiveness—with benefit to the industry as a whole, whether linked with Famous Players or not.

PRE-FABRICATION PLAN LATEST IN HOLLYWOOD

Talent Agent Offers Cast, Director, Script Written to Fit; Two Now in Production

Pre-fabricated pictures are the latest factor in Hollywood production.

Scripts already prepared, the top roles already cast and directors thoroughly acquainted with the material, all wrapped up and delivered to studios for the erection of sets and the grinding of cameras—that's the aim of Charles Kenneth Feldman, one of Hollywood's top agents and chief exponent of "package deals" in motion pictures.

One released, two in work and quite a number of others coming up to bat, is the score thus far of Mr. Feldman, representative of many of filmdom's highest-paid players, directors, writers and executives.

The one released is Universal's "Model Wife"; the two in work are Columbia's "The Lady Is Willing" and Universal's "Paris Calling."

Sees New Trend

Mr. Feldman last week in his Beverly Hills office, from which he directs the activities of the Charles Kenneth Feldman Corp., the Feldman-Blum Corp. and the Famous Artists Corp., waxed enthusiastic over his "system" of prefabrication of pictures, pointing out the various reasons for their probably becoming a fast growing trend in film making.

"First of all, I am not in competition with the studios.

"The practice of package deals eliminates much difficulty in production, and at the same time creates opportunities for acting, writer and director talent not afforded it ordinarily.

"The system of having a heavy studio overhead assigned to pictures even before they enter production is eliminated entirely. My writers, whom I pay out of my own pocket, prepare the scripts to the point where no re-writing is necessary. The studio need only build the sets, hire the camera crew and other technicians, cast the other roles in the picture and start shooting.

"No time is lost in studio preparation of the story. The months which are sometimes spent in shaping the parts to fit certain players who, when the script is ready, are unavailable, are cut out.

"The top players whom I set and the director whom I choose are my clients and they work on a percentage to be paid from the returns of the picture. I pay my writers their regularly established wage scale for the preparation of the screenplay, having first acquired the property myself.

"In this way, it is possible to put almost all that is expended in the budget on the screen for audiences to see. The studio is protected in that the first grosses are given it to pay for the amount expended. Then the actors and directors are paid, with the percentages split after that."

The method of operation under Mr. Feldman's plan is simple. Should a story by one of his writers be turned down by all the studios, and they have first chance at it, Mr. Feldman buys it himself, if he thinks it fits his purpose. He calls in his script writers—some of the people he has under contract—and they go to work on it. Usually assisting in the preparation is the director Mr. Feldman has in mind for the job. The scenario is shaped to fit the client-actors Mr. Feldman visions in the roles.

"Then the scenario is offered with the services of the director and the players to the studios," Mr. Feldman said.

"In this way, we get away from 'type' casting. In the Columbia picture, 'The Lady Is Willing,' fans will see a new Marlene Dietrich. She plays a farce comedy role in which most people would imagine Carole Lombard. Mitchell Leisen, another of my clients, is producing and directing the picture.

"When the picture is released, a 'new' Marlene Dietrich will be born. She needs still another change, and a future 'package deal' on which I am working is a remake of 'The Spoilers' in which she will have the starring role.

"A good actress, with capable direction, is able to handle any type of role on the screen. 'Type' casting by studios has made many a player's life too short on the screen.

"Experimentation in developing the full talent of players is possible through the percentage deals.

"There is no risk involved, as far as money is concerned. The players and the director are paid out of the returns. But if the picture is a hit, all realize more from it.

"In this way, too, unknown screen writers, who, on the basis of past performance, can't get into the studios, have a chance of acquiring the much needed screen credits." Mr. Feldman pointed out that the returns to Joan Blondell, Dick Powell and to director Leigh Jason on Universal's "Model Wife," were more than they would have made on a straight salary deal.

Elisabeth Bergner needed a vehicle for her American film debut. Mr. Feldman represented the actress. He also represented Benjamin Glazer, producer, and Edwin L. Marin, director. There was in Mr. Feldman's files a story, "Paris Calling." Universal wanted the story and Miss Bergner. It's in work now. Benjamin Glazer is the producer and Edwin L. Marin is the director. Chief support to Miss Bergner in her American debut are Randolph Scott and Basil Rathbone, also Mr. Feldman's clients.

Monarch Acquires Theatre

Charles M. Olson has sold his 2,000-seat Lyric theatre in Indianapolis to the Greater Indianapolis Amusement Co., operator of the Circle and Indiana. Greater Indiana is controlled by Monarch circuit.

Forty Roadshows Set

Forty community theatres will produce Paul Green's next untitled play, simultaneously with its Broadway opening, Barcley Leatham, executive secretary of the National Theatre Conference, revealed in Pittsburgh.

Most Theatres Reopen for Fall

With the new 1941-42 motion picture season under way for some three weeks the small number of theatres throughout the country which closed during the summer months, for the most part, have reopened. However, unusual brisk business during the summer months kept most of the houses open which ordinarily close.

Loew's kept all theatres open during the summer months, while RKO closed seven in the midwest territory, all of which have reopened.

The Fabian circuit closed three theatres but they too have been reopened. In Newark, N. J., the Adams, operated by A. A. Adams, has opened for the new season with a stage show policy. Warners reopened the Aldine theatre in Philadelphia and the 69th Street in the same city after renovations. William Goldman plans to reopen his recently acquired Erlanger, former legitimate stage show in that city. While in Allentown, Pa., Albert A. Moffa, operator of the open-air Central in Central Park has completed a deal with Daniel Shimer to take over the long closed Astor and Ridge theatres.

Building in New Orleans

As the New Orleans territory prepares for what is believed will be a good season, reports show three new houses under construction, and several others built or renovated during the summer. United Theatres is building the Nola in New Orleans and the Lake in Lakeview. A third house is being constructed at Gulfport, Miss.

In the Wilkes-Barre territory, five houses closed for the summer, have been reopened and a new house is scheduled to open in October. Four Comerford circuit houses, the Strand, Wilkes-Barre; the RCA and Manhattan, Scranton; and the Lyric, Shenandoah, Pa., were reopened during the Labor Day weekend. The Key, West Hazleton, Pa., was reopened August 4th, after extensive alterations by the Hersker circuit. Jerome Engel, owner of the Family, Glen Lyon, Pa., and the Lincoln, Plains, Pa., expects to open the new Plains theatre now under construction by October 1st.

From Toronto it is learned that the Park, Welland, Ont., was reopened Labor Day by 20th Century Theatres in association with Famous Players Canadian, with Joseph Paul as manager. Martin White has been named manager of the Community, Welland, taking Mr. Paul's former post. Twentieth Century has taken over the Geneva, a new theatre at Orillia, Ont., previously operated as a unit of the former Hanson Theatres Corp. Patrick Dunne, formerly at the Orillia, has been named manager of the Marks, Oshawa, Ont., replacing Roy Miller resigned. Frank Reid has been appointed manager of the Park, a new house opened by Twentieth Century at Sarnia, Ont.

In the Milwaukee area there is considerable activity with renovation of old houses and opening of new theatres. Recently opened were the new Pix, Whitehall, the Eskin Theatres, and the new Falls, Menomonee Falls, by Ray Zahn. The old Menasha, Menasha, Wis., has been renovated and renamed the Valley while the Fox, Stevens Point, Wis., has been acquired by a local group from Robert Fox and re-

In the New Haven district, three summer theatres, the Strand, Sound View, operated by J. P. Glackin; the New Colony, Sound View, operated by Adolph G. Johnson and Albert Poulton, and the Tower at Walnut Beach, operated by Albert Smith and Mrs. Smith were closed on Labor Day.

The Theatre Service Corp. has been organized by a group of independent exhibitors to operate the Colonial, Westside Milwaukee neighborhood. Suit Brought to Test Ticket Law Constitutionality of a new New York State law prohibiting a theatre owner from refusing admittance to a ticket holder is headed for a court test in Albany, N. Y.

The action, brought by Robert W. Christie of Niskayuna, Schenectady County, is directed against the 46th Street Theatre Corporation of New York City, and the Select Operating Company, which Mr. Christie claims refused to allow him to see the stage production, "Panama Hattie," on May 27th, although he had a ticket.

The theatre contends the statute passed by the 1941 Legislature is unconstitutional because it permits, "undue, unwarranted and unreasonable influence with the defendant's property."

Trinz Heirs Charge Circuit Mismanagement

Hearings in the suit of the heirs of Joseph Trinz, head of the old Lubliner & Trinz circuit, who died in 1926, against the Chicago Title & Trust Company were resumed this week before Master in Chancery Louis J. Behan. The heirs charge the company with negligence, the suit objecting to the final accounting of the estate, showing a value of less than $500,000. Concluding arguments will be heard on a motion to dismiss the suit, the trust company denying charges of the plaintiffs.

Restraint of GE in RCA Case Denied

Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora denied a temporary injunction in New York on Tuesday which was sought by Benjamin Ascher, a stockholder of the General Electric Company, to restrain that company from carrying out a proposed settlement of a consolidated suit brought by stockholders of RCA against General Electric, Westinghouse and other defendants. Under the proposed settlement General Electric and Westinghouse would pay $1,000,000 to RCA, with $600,000 as GE's share.

Justice Pecora declared that the injunction would be premature, since the proposed settlement was being considered by a special referee. He also said that the settlement, in any case, had been approved by GE's entire board and that the court would not interfere with discretionary acts of corporate directors.

According to charges in a stockholders' suit filed Monday, September 15th in White Plains, N. Y., in the Westchester County Clerk's office, assets of the Radio Corporation of America have been depleted by an alleged conspiracy that has benefited individual officers of the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

Bennett E. Siegelstein of Scarsdale, N. Y., plaintiff, said that he was suing because he considered the proposed $1,000,000 settlement in parallel suits in New York to be inadequate.

Restraining Order Granted To Dennis Film Bureau

The Wabash circuit court, Wabash, Ind., has granted a temporary injunction and restraining order in the suit of the Dennis Film Bureau, Inc., regarding a daily "wagon show" tax of one dollar for free movies.

The court told County Treasurer Bricker, State treasurer James Givens and other defendants not to collect from the film bureau or any of the people showing the free movies pending the outcome of the action.

Asks Griffis Testimony

Benjamin Blumenthal has filed an application in the New York supreme court for an order directing Stanton Griffis, chairman of the board of Paramount Pictures, to testify before trial in Mr. Blumenthal's $965,000 damage suit against Paramount. The plaintiff charges the defendant with refusing to go ahead with the deal for the sale of the Paramount theatre interests in England after Mr. Blumenthal had obtained a buyer. Meanwhile, the court has ordered the suit to be stayed pending a decision.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

ADAM HAD FOUR SONS: Ingrid Bergman, Warner Baxter, Susan Hayward—Excellent picture to good business and it held up three days.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LONE WOLF TAKES A CHANCE, THE: Warren William, June Storey—This series seems to have a nice following; suitable for double billing.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF THE CAMPUS: Ruby Keeler, Ozzie Nelson, Harriet Hilliard—A nice musical that proved very refreshing. Did nice business.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

First National

KNOCKOUT: Arthur Kennedy, Olympe Bradna, Cliff Edwards—A good and fast picture on the fight racket. Should go over most anywhere as boxing is a national sport. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 22-23.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

THREE SONS O' GUNS: Wayne Morris, Tom Brown—Good comedy about three sons caught in the draft, which pleased week-end business. Running time, 65 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sidney, Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—A good picture that pleased, although it was poor in drawing power. Another picture that the trailer helped kill. Did fair Friday-Saturday business. Played August 29-30.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Brothers, Tony Martin, Six Hits and a Miss—Good picture and good business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

BITTER SWEET: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—A very swell show with good music and color, but decidedly not a small town and community picture. Rental too high. These stars mean nothing to the farming community. Would not recommend this one for a spot like mine. This class of picture won't even help pay the taxes. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 6.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—An excellent performance by Spencer Tracy and Mickey Rooney and the entire cast. Did outstanding business, in fact, set a new house record for attendance and gross. If you have not already done so, you should play this one at once. Its age did not keep it from drawing. Much better than "Boys Town" was. Played August 24-26.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

PENALTY, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Edward Arnold, Gene Reynolds—Plenty of action and comedy here. Almost any type of patronage will enjoy this. Give it a good chance, good billing with a few shorts. It may surprise you. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 3-4.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

RAGE IN HEAVEN: Robert Montgomery, Ingrid Bergman, George Sanders—Rather odd type, but a good change from regular routine. Running time. 85 minutes. Played August 20-21.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

THEY MET IN BOMBAY: Clark Gable, Rosalind Russell—A well produced picture that missed fire in attracting attention and money. A poor trailer on this one helped kill it. Picture was much better and different than trailer indicated. Pleased those who saw it. Played August 27-28.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE, A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas, Conrad Veidt—Was a good show and was enjoyed by all. Was the type picture that your eyes could not leave the screen. Joan Crawford really did some good acting. Played to good crowds both nights. Played September 3-4.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—The way this dragged along, it would have been a wash-out, if it were not for Judy Garland. Billed as big stuff most places, only fair all around in this part of the country. Running time, 134 minutes. Played August 31-September 2.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—This one sure did lay an egg. My patrons did not like it and took great pains to tell me so. Had numerous requests for money back. After seeing, could not blame them. If it was cut down to 45 minutes, would have been good short show. Jimmy Stewart out of place in this one. Low gross. Running time, 131 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

Monogram

DRUMS OF THE DESERT: Ralph Byrd, Lorna Gray—Just a program picture. Played as a double feature with "Law and Order" on week-end. Seemed to satisfy. Business good. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 5-6.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour, Lynne Overman—Here is one that they all enjoyed. Good comment on it and did fair business. Had played all around us and many had already seen it. Small town patronage.

FORCED LANDING: Richard Arlen—Good action picture and good business. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 26.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—Not what they expected and they went out disappointed. Too long was the chief complaint. Many did not like the new girl. If I had it to do over again, would have paid for it and set it upon the shelf. Disappointed customers do not help in this business, Paramount. Running time, 130 minutes. Played September 3-4.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

PIRATES ON HORSEBACK: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—A "Hopalong Cassidy." About the weakest western we have had. These have been one of the best series of westerns. Andy Clyde does not belong in them. This one had no story and Clyde had the lead.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

POWER DIVE: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Helen Mack—They sure ate this one up. Good Friday-Saturday business. Played August 22-23.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—Very good picture which pleased all and business was away above average. Running time, 95 minutes. Played September 3-4.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

THREE MEN FROM TEXAS: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—This is about the best of the "Hopalong" pictures yet to date. Andy Clyde is the best replacement Paramount has made for "Windy." More like this, please. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 15-16.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

VIRGINIA: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—If this picture don't win some ribbons, then Hollywood better start to examine somebody's head. Good for any day you have got. Beautiful in color. Good dialogue. Running time, 110 minutes. Played August 24-26.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

Your product is a box-office tonic without comparison, as our folks from the country flock in to hear you sing. I also have heard many comments on the write-up of your life in Liberty, published lately. I can recommend your product to any small town exhibitor to be the tops in box office attraction. But one mistake, why the poor advertising accessories? Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 30.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Colonna—Good picture that did not draw very well. Pleased those who saw it and the comments on it very good. This was Judy Canova's first picture to show here and that was the principal reason that it did not do better. Am looking forward to her next picture. Played August 17-18.—Bryan Turner, Jr., New Royal Theatre, Archer City, Texas. Small town patronage.

SUNSET IN WYOMING: Gene Autry, Smiley

DEVIL AND MISS JONES, THE: Jean Arthur, Robert Cummings, Charles Coburn—Jean Arthur was sent a mammoth postcard with 400 names on it direct to Hollywood by our local citizens and town folks. She never even recognized it. And our people never forgot it. She just can't be good. Other stars have acknowledged our fans. So, naturally, the picture died. Anyway, it wasn't anything to write home about.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

The Day-In and Day-Out Values

The motion picture prospered in the beginning because it was considered novel entertainment. As technique and story interest improved, it became less "novel" and more "entertainment". Folks said "let's see a movie".

As the motion picture grew in importance, players became known by name. Certain names in pictures brought more customers than attractions without. "Epics" came into production and the public told about them. Fan magazines appeared to publicize personalities and individual attractions. Publicity and advertising departments whooped it up. The whooping was confined to stars, to pictures. There was little whooping-up for the institution of the motion picture, its day-in and day-out entertainment values.

Educated thus to differentiate, the customers were weaned away from "entertainment", as such, and nourished upon individual picture entertainment content. Magazine and newspaper criticism developed to add to the confusion with "stars" and such. Exhibitors did themselves a disservice by going to town on pictures with favorable ratings, keeping quiet on the others, often proving better boxoffice. So, obviously, attendance varied.

Institutional advertising was brushed off, considered a waste. Few took the long view, that this entertainment was not confined to the screen, that motion picture theatre entertainment was compounded of many constant factors of appeal.

Now, hastened by war jitters, alarming business dips and other causes, long-delayed recognition of theatre institutional values is coming about, nationally. More than ever, this year notes the spread of institutional promotion. What the theatre has to sell, every day in the week, has been expressed in these pages in the campaigns inaugurated by such leading circuit operations as Interstate, Griffith, Loew's, Schine, Western Massachusetts, among others. Currently, it is splendidly expressed in the elaborate theatre exhibit of Famous Players Canadian activities at the Canadian National Exhibition, in Toronto. Over 200,000 visitors jammed the display, received copies of Jim Nairn's institutional booklet, "More Than a Million Each Week".

On the eve of Western Massachusetts Theatres "Movie New Year" campaign, President Nathan E. Goldstein gave this message to his managers:

"The theatre is an institution dedicated to furthering the pleasure, health and happiness of its patrons. It should be sold to the public as such. This is a fact which most theatre operators have lost sight of in recent years. Now the industry begins to see the light—to realize that shows and pictures come and go, but the theatre lives forever.

"Showgoing is a habit which must be nourished and stimulated if it is to be kept alive. Patrons must be made to say more often 'Let's go to the Paramount Theatre,' knowing that whatever the program may be, it will be good entertainment—which they are certain to enjoy because the theatre itself provides an atmosphere of courtesy, friendliness, beauty, comfort and relaxation.

"Today it is our most urgent responsibility to sell the theatre as the one restful retreat where care and worry are forgotten and where perfect diversion always can be had at a price within the reach of all.

"It is expected that each manager will carry on a continuous program of supplementary activities designed to promote the theatre as an institution indispensable to the welfare and happiness of the community."

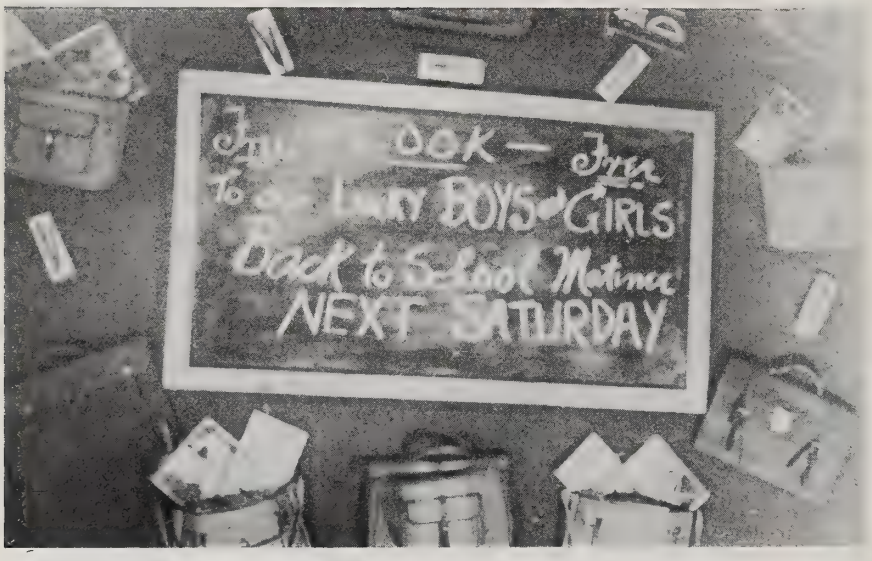
READY FOR FOOTBALL

Soon, sports pages will be overflowing with gridiron stuff. Soon, stadia will be overflowing with hysterical fans. In anticipation of all of this, and with his usual speed and dispatch, the showman has his football campaigns under way.



Set down on a following page are the first promotions reported to "ride with the tide". It is evident that theatremen intend turning that tide somewhat, and profitably, in the direction of the boxoffice.

Round Table In Pictures

Ahead of "In the Navy" at the United Detroit Broadway Capitol, in Detroit, Manager Stanton Morris dressed his entire staff of girl ushers in sailor uniforms. In addition, theatreman promoted use of speed boat which was stationed in lobby with giant cutouts of Abbott & Costello in character planted in the boat.

In an effort to attract the young folks, Round Tabler Julius Lamm at Warner's Uptown Theatre, in Cleveland, constructed attractive lobby display illustrated above. School bags, pencil boxes, pen and pencil sets were placed around an old-fashioned blackboard. Board itself carried copy announcing the "Back to School Matinee."

Launching his New Movie Season with a miniature battleship planted in the lobby of Loew's Theatre, in Houston, Texas, Round Tabler Francis Deering dubbed it "Loew's Flagship of the Entertainment Fleet" and surrounded it with sock copy and picture titles. Star photos were visible from portholes.

Utilizing window of empty store adjacent to theatre, Bill Burke at the Brant, in Brantford, Ontario, covered it with white paper into which were cut portholes. On peering through the portholes, folks were greeted with 24-sheet of Wallace Beery as he appears in "Barnacle Bill."

Crowd-stopper that pulled for Jack Granara at the Keith Memorial, in Boston ahead of "Hold That Ghost" was stiltwalker who covered business area with back copy reading: "You'll scream at Abbott & Costello in," etc., etc.

"Sun Valley" Sold With Ace Tieups

It was a mass of pointed exploitation executed by Manager Jerome Gordon of the Palace, in Newport News, Va., on behalf of "Sun Valley Serenade", the crowds gathered with various devices as represented for instance, by the display of an actual shooting script procured from the studio and used as the basis of a co-op contest with one of the department stores. The public was invited to study the script displayed at the store and submit advertising copy headlines to run no more than 35 words, including the title. Store gave Victor recordings of the song hits, autographed photos of the stars and guest tickets for the show, entrants supplied with blanks for their copy.

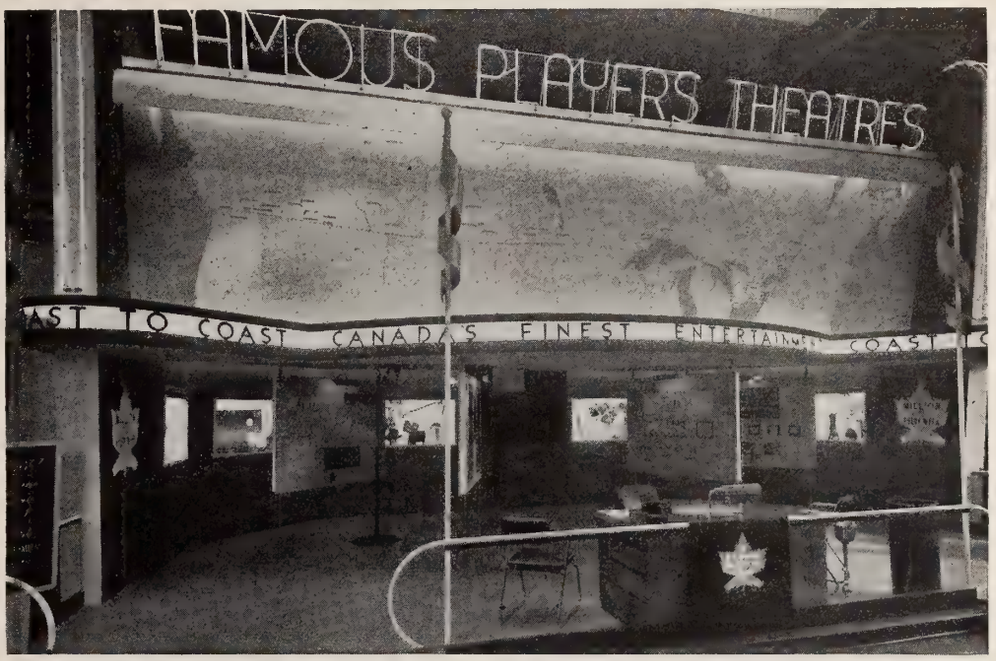
Several nights ahead, at the nine o'clock break, usher dressed in Western Union outfit made the aisles calling "Telegram for Mr. Smith", who planted in the audience replied and requested that the boy read the wire to him. Boy then did so, loudly, which of course, was a plug for the picture. Ushers distributed "pardon me" cards, stating that they had few occasions to address patrons personally, but wanted to tell them about the great picture, etc.

Swimming Pool Promotion

At municipal swimming pool, Jerry launched two lettered waterproof balls, kept in action by the swimmers. The theatreman also got a lot of laughs with donkey ballyhoo on main street with animal carrying sign banner reading "I'm the only one in town who isn't going to see, etc. and you know what I am". Also gathering attention was a model spinning wheel in a knit goods shop window with tiein copy "We aren't spinning a yarn when we tell you," etc.

Scenic postcards of Sun Valley were addressed to mailing list and shipped to the resort to be mailed direct. and four days ahead all change given by cashier was placed in small envelopes reading "Save your change so that you can see" etc. Since the picture was current on Labor Day, Gordon planted cards in all windows reading "Closed on Labor Day so we can see" etc.

The Round Tabler even hooked up the barber shops by tacking cards on ceilings above chairs with copy "Guaranteed to raise hair, the thrills in" etc. The seven o'clock filling station closing was also put to work with cards reading "We close at seven for National Defense, then we are going to see."



Featured newspaper display was a reverse ad with directions for readers to turn page and hold up to light. Identical space on reverse page was left blank so that the ad would read correctly, when directions were followed.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Tompkins Masks Front For "A Woman's Face"

What proved to be an eye-arrester was slant used ahead of "A Woman's Face" at the Elco, in Elkhart, Ind., by Chick Tompkins, who completely masked the front of his house with cutouts of Joan Crawford with suspense captions. Entire campaign was centered about the female scarface angle, 5,000 heralds were distributed house-to-house and numerous teaser windows in women's stores and beauty shops featured.

Famous Players Canadian Featured at Exhibition

THOUSANDS VISITED THIS "FIRST-TIME" THEATRE DISPLAY

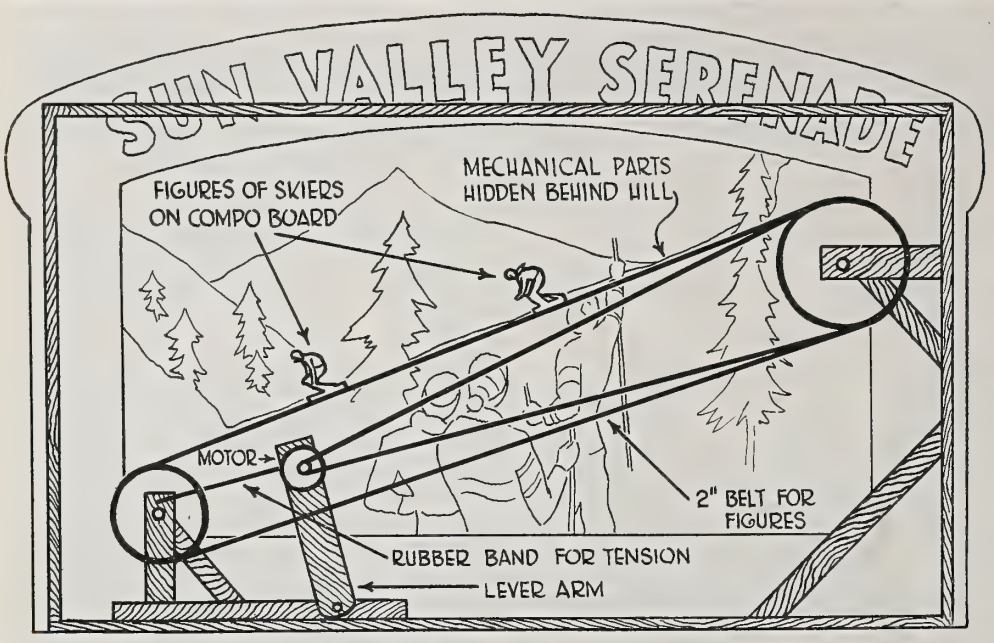
DESIGNED to stress the service, product and nationwide locations of theatres operated by Famous Players Canadian and affiliated companies, and to sell the motion picture industry to the public, was the display taken by the company at the Canadian National Exhibition, in Toronto. It was a first-time that any theatre company had been so represented, according to James R. Nairn, circuit ad head, who created the exhibit in cooperation with his assistant, Jack Barker, the design executed by Art Worden.

Located in the Manufacturers' Building, one of the best spots in the exhibition, the display had as its front a modern theatre marquee, topped with a brilliantly colored map of Canada. Red dots on the map indicated every city and town in which Famous Players and affiliated companies have theatres. Across the 33-foot top of the display were green neon letters reading: "Famous Players Theatres." Double strips of red neon ran down the sides of two huge pylons. The inside of the booth itself was carpeted in broadloom and the front was decorated by a modernistic glass railing supported by three 20-foot flag standards, topped by metal banners. (See cut.)

Around the back wall of the exhibit were built-in showcases. One contained original puppets sent from Hollywood by George Pal. In another showcase were exhibited Walt Disney's original models used in a variety of his cartoon creations. On lighted panels were displayed the original celluloids used in making "Superman," "Mr. Bug Goes to Town," several Disney features, and an interesting layout on "How Cartoons Are Made," illustrated by Leon Schlesinger's art.

Hollywood stars sent in dozens of articles used in making their pictures, such as daggers, swords, hats, skates, dresses. The articles were displayed with the announcement that they would be later sold by the Lions' Clubs of Toronto in aid of the Toronto Telegram's War Victims' Fund.

Another feature of the display was continuous presentation of the latest Paramount news. As the show ran more than two weeks, three new issues of the news were presented on a miniature screen. Special 16 mm. prints in sound were made and to them were spliced Famous Players Theatres' institutional trailers, advertising coming productions together with copy stressing Famous Players' service. Walls were framed with autographed star stills with the caption: "The Stars Shine Brightest at Famous Players' Theatres."



The exhibit was managed by Jack Purves of the Village Theatre, Toronto, who looked after all the many details of running the show. Managers from towns near Toronto were brought in each day by the company to assist Jack Purves in his duties as greeter.

All visitors received copies of a booklet prepared by Nairn and Barker entitled, "More Than a Million Each Week," built around the fact that Famous Players' Theatres are hosts to more than a million Canadians every week. The booklet contained institutional copy and attractively illustrated the pictures that are to be shown within the next few months.

Also offered by the circuit was a contest open to children, 15 years and under, wherein the youngsters were invited to complete in 50 words, or less, the sentence: "I like to go to a Famous Players Theatre because." Entry forms were distributed, reverse side containing a complete list of the circuit's houses from coast-to-coast. First prize in the contest was a year's pass for two, good for Saturday matinees.

Besides the thousands who saw the display from the outside, on an average of more than 10,000 people visited the booth daily. It has been estimated that more than 200,000 visited the exhibit during the run of the exhibition.

A TERRELL ANIMATION

Bathing Beauty Contest Inaugurated by Helson

Running for two weeks, was Ray Helson's recent bathing beauty contest held at the Indiana-Illinois Voge, in East Chicago, Ind. With 31 girls entering, 10 were used each week in the three elimination contests on stage and four winners picked each week who then competed in the grand finals. Eight leading merchants in the neighborhood were tied in for two hundred and fifty dollars in cash prizes and merchandise promoted.

Photos of contestants were featured on lobby easel, tinted heralds were distributed and cooperating merchants featured displays in their windows and plugged the event in their ads.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Displays Highlight "Hills" for Kidwell

Three local windows were promoted ahead of "Shepherd of the Hills" by Ed Kidwell at Schine's Kent, in Kent, Ohio, one of which was with neighborhood druggist, who tied in his photographic stock with the technicolor of the picture. Department store gave full window to new fall colorings for clothing and public library okayed special display of other books by the author, new copies of "Shepherd" purchased by the library for the occasion. Library also used major portion of bookmarks with additional ones distributed to rental libraries.

Special ads and heralds were used in rural towns, the latter also distributed house-to-house. Two six-sheets, mounted on a perambulator and headed by sound truck, was used three days ahead in surrounding territory. Local grange leaders were notified of playdates and in exchange for a couple of passes, they followed through with announcements at their various meetings.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Teaser Slants Aid Berezin on "Jordan"

In advance of "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" at the Elgin Theatre, in Ottawa, Canada, Bob Berezin distributed small teaser cards with copy "If you lost at races, take a tip. Here's a sure bet that will please you, see" etc. Also bumper strips with suspense copy were gotten out and used on cards ahead.

Street bally for "The Great Dictator" as used by Berezin was promotion of a horse and buggy which was bannered with copy "Save gasoline for the war effort. Drive this way to the Elgin Theatre to see".

Paramount Shorts Given Premieres

Exploitation for Paramount shorts recently executed and reported by Manny Reiner, department publicity manager, details promotion in Chicago for the inaugural "Quiz Kids" reel at the Chicago. The campaign featured a special edition of the Herald-American, front page of the special given over to a banner head and cut of the kids, column of questions and answers by the talented youngsters and headline stories about the opening.

For "Hedda Hopper's Hollywood" premiere at the Palace, in Milwaukee, Wis., coincident with the American Legion convention, the Mayor of Milwaukee was prevailed upon to issue a proclamation inviting the industry to witness the picture. Hookup was used variously and extensively for publicity, stressing that the short was the only individual picture booked as one of the features of the Legion convention.

The buildup on the "Superman" series, Fleischer animated cartoons released by Paramount, features a 20-page two-color pressbook which is made up for exhibitor attention. Book lists all nation-wide tieins such as newspaper, magazine, kid club, radio licenses tieups, etc. Names of all stations, newspapers, radio stations, licensees and products are enumerated plus various kid promotions and other exploitation ideas.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Sklar Inaugurates "Green Archer" Club

To usher in his new serial, "The Green Archer," at the Roxy, in Clearfield, Pa., Wilford N. Sklar distributed promoted fan photos of Gene Autry to children at school. In addition, teaser "Green Archer" color cards were available for kids, those holding cards that turned green on blowing on them received a free admission. Membership cards were also handed out, with last admission free to each child attending all 15 chapters. Entire campaign was costless to the theatre, local dairy tying in on the event defraying all expenses.

For "Carolina Moon" also starring Gene Autry, Sklar promoted local drug store on an Autry sundae, each twentieth order receiving a pass to the show. Counter displays were featured here and in other stores.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Novel Contest Arranged By Kalberer for "C.O.D."

Front page break was accorded A. J. Kalberer's "Bride Came C. O. D." at Switow's Indiana, in Washington, Ind., through offer of guest tickets to local brides whose initials were "C. O. D." Only requirement was that the brides must have been married since this January first and "Kal" reports handing out but eight passes, "which was a steal considering the amount of free publicity landed."

Ahead of "Mr. Jordan," each patron was given a piece of string on entering theatre. At conclusion of trailer they were told to put the string around their fingers as a reminder to see," etc. Since it was a "first-timer" for that situation, Kalberer reports much favorable comment.

It's Time-Out Now for Football So Theatremen Go to Town

Round Tablers Line Up in Box Office Formation for Ticket-Window Touchdowns

The annual pigskin promotions pursued vigorously by Round Tablers, as here noted, takes on a nationwide aspect in the Norman Sper "Football This Week" shorts, tied to a patron weekly score-guessing contest. Currently reported by Les Kaufman is the plan in execution at the Fanchon & Marco St. Louis theatres, wherein over $5000 in cash prizes are being awarded over a 12-week period. In advance each week, the theatres play a Sper short giving the expert's predictions as to the winners of certain games. Patrons are given entries to cover these games, with the same games listed plus leading local games and spaces alongside for score-guesses. Reasons must be given for selections of winning teams. The prizes are given on a point system covering all games, each participating theatre offering weekly prizes, with other awards for best circuit guesses and grand prizes for best seasonal guesses.

The F&M campaign covers special trailers, lobby posters, ads and publicity. Exploitation ideas suggested in the pressbook put out by the Myke Lewis organization, distributors of the Sper shorts, are being executed by the theatremen under Kaufman's supervision.

Tompkins Builds Football Shorts With Previews for Sports Heads

In Elkart, Ind., Chick Tompkins also has the "Football This Week" series under way at the Indiana-Illinois Elco, providing for publicity by starting his campaign with a screening of the first short for the sports editor of the daily and radio sports commentator. Next followed another screening for the high school squad and coach for added publicity. At the opening game of the season, Tompkins announced the series over the p.a. system, inviting the fans to match their guesses with Sper predictions.

Other football promotions arranged by Chick take in a monster pep session and jamboree on the eve of the most important local game in October. The activities will start with a torchlight parade and continue at the theatre, where the teams, coaches and cheer leaders will occupy the stage. Since the contest is to be the big homecoming game, the Manta-man is inviting leading alumni, Mayor and Governor to be on hand.

Bickerstaff Opens Closed House With Reception to College Team

To signalize the reopening of the L. & J. Palace, in Athens, Ga., on Sept. 18, City Manager "Bic" Bickerstaff introduced from the stage the entire football squad and coaches of the University of Georgia. Since it was the first public appearance of the players, attendance was big. Additional audience thrills were provided by the Mayor, one of Georgia's pigskin "greats" and other former football stars. For further gridiron atmosphere, Bic booked "Football Thrills of 1940."

For the big three home games, the L. & J.-man is planning a number of events, starting with a midnight show after the first. Banners and other aids will be used in the pre-game parade. The homecoming game with Dartmouth is to be featured with a showing of "Harmon of Michigan" and on stage, after the game, a cup given by leading jeweler is to be awarded to the outstanding local player of the day. The Round Tabler is also set for display in the main window of the Kress store for all three games and is offering prizes for best score-guesses in these contests.

DINNY TIES STAGE STARS TO LEADING HOME TEAMS

Incorporation of stage stars appearing at the RKO Cincinnati theatres into local pigskin excitements is usually worked by "Dinny" Dinerman, having the stage names introduced between the halves at big local games.

In the same direction, "Dinny" makes it a point to secure shots of the football captains with women headliners appearing currently on programs following the games.

"Kal" Kalberer Given "Exclusive" On Score Cards for Home Games

As has been the practice in the past, the printing of the official score and line-up cards for the high school home games in Washington, Ind., is again an "exclusive" for the Switow houses in that sector, according to City Manager "Kal" Kalberer. Line-up of both teams is secured from coaches and printed, a good portion of the space devoted to the theatre current and coming attractions. Last year, to tie in with "name" band date following week, Kal ran cut of leader on program, with copy that the maestro would autograph programs brought to the theatre on opening night. Nice returns, he notes.

The pep session is another reliable to be used this year before the opening game with coach, players and cheer leaders on stage. Publicity is garnered in the dailies and school publications, and students attracted with special rate for the show.

On the night of Sept. 26, Bic is holding a free show for the college freshman at the L. & J. Strand, when the teams and coaches will be introduced, as will other local L. & J. managers. The freshman will be required to wear their "rat" caps for admission and cheer leaders will be on hand to teach the new students the various college yells. This is intended as a goodwill builder among the freshmen to encourage their attendance at the circuit's houses. Also booked for October is "Sweetheart of the Campus," with the school paper promoting a contest to find the school's "campus sweetheart," to be introduced from the stage and also at the weekend game.

Thomas Offers Passes to Players For Touchdowns During Season

Before the season opens, Malco City Manager Hal Thomas, of Fulton, Ky., offers the high school team, five passes for each touchdown. Reaction to this is big, says Thomas, with lots of comment around town spotlighting the theatre. The Malco-man also provides the school with 100 window cards for each home game, lower half of card imprinted with picture copy and top half with game copy. School officials work hard to get the cards into favorable positions in best local windows and in surrounding area.

As each class has its own team, Thomas finds it advantageous to put on a series of Class Nights in advance of game. He also has an arrangement with the daily on a score-guessing contest, the paper running blanks each week in advance. In addition, contest heralds are distributed at schools tabbing games of interest in the area besides the local contest. Score cards for each game carrying listings of individual players are also distributed at games, with space left for the theatre attractions. In the parades held night after games, Hal secures position for a theatre bannered car and each season for a week before the final game, he holds a "most popular player" contest, winner elected by patron votes. Merchandise prizes are given, with stores contributing and printing ballots distributed at theatre.

Charninsky Holds Saturday Matinees With High School Squads as Guests

Already started by Louie Charninsky at the Interstate Capitol, Dallas, is a series of Saturday morning matinees in honor of the different school squads and coaches. Each week, another school will be headlined, with students admitted at a special price. Pep talks and other devices are employed, and Louie anticipates the same warm reception as greeted these events last year.

The Interstater is also set for the Norman Sper shorts tiein, using the entire advertising and exploitation campaign to put it over. In addition, winning teams of the big games are set as his guests on Saturday nights after the contests. For the kids, small footballs have been promoted for giveaway at Saturday matinees.

Stoltz Invites Preview Guests To Suggest Fourth-Down Play

One of the best space-grabbers used by Arnold Stoltz for football publicity was had by the Utica Warner-man on a preview of a pigskin picture for local players and sports writers. Film was stopped at the game's high-spots—a third down—house lights were put up, and each guest given paper and pencil to detail the play he would use for the fourth-down pinch. After answers were collected, picture was continued with description nearest to the play in the picture winning a gold football charm promoted by Stoltz from local jeweler. Committee of sport writers selected winner, whose picture and drawing play hit the sports pages.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Promoted by George Laby from the new army air base located in Holyoke, Mass., was a motor from a giant bomber which, appropriately bannered, was placed in front of the Victory Theatre ahead of "I Wanted Wings." Laby reports that word-of-mouth comment brought hundreds to the theatre to inspect the motor, with a large number of them going inside to see the film.

Promoting five and dime store for window display, George Balkin at Warner's Vernon, in Philadelphia, ahead of "Penny Serenade" filled bowl with pennies and offered guest tickets to those coming closest to guessing correct number. Newspaper coverage included insertion of ad asking for odd one-cent pieces.

Week before opening of "Underground" at Warner's Grand, in Lancaster, Pa., Bert Leighton made three records at WGAL radio station using Eric Sevaried's talk as published in the pressbook, winding up with plug for picture and playdates. Special "V" heralds were distributed at factories, office buildings, etc., and record player attached to loud speaker was used in theatre lobby.

Entirely costless to the theatre was tieup made by George Irwin for "Pot o' Gold" at the Paramount, in Grand Forks, N. D., with nearby restaurant. Cooperating merchant distributed cards with copy "For the perfect after theatre snack by Blank and for perfection in entertainment see," etc.

Stunt that is reported to have proved an attractor was that used by Irving Cantor at the Schine Palace, in Syracuse, the theatreman promoting a 55-piece accordion band. Window cards plugging the event were used in surrounding towns.

The capsule gag was used by C. B. Dortch ahead of "Men of Boys Town" at the Dixie, in Picayune, Miss. Boys on streets distributed copies of Boys Town Times, crying out "Latest edition of Boys Town Times" as they handed out the papers to passersby. In addition, "Bart" promoted editor of local paper to write an editorial on the need of a local "Boys Town."

Determining upon a "strong meat" advertising campaign for "Jekyll and Hyde", Earl J. Hudson's United Detroit ad forces went "horror" for the date at the United Artists, as represented by the two-column, 140 lines reproduced above.

A walking ballyhoo that attracted much attention during the "Big Store" campaign executed by M. D. Davis, Fischer Theatre, Danville, Ill., was an usher dressed in heavy fur coat, white shoes, spats, earmuffs and straw hat, and carrying appropriate copy. Lewis also arranged for a nut-guessing contest, tying in with a leading store which used a large bowl of nuts in its window.

An "Andy Hardy Sweethearts" contest was one of the highlights of the campaign for "Life Begins for Andy Hardy" executed by Francis Deering, Loew's Houston.

Contacting local actor, who had been doing Chaplin impersonations for 15 years, Al Blasko at the Parthenon, in Hammond, Ind., secured his services for street bally ahead of "The Great Dictator." Bannering car with muslin streamers, bally was taken to bathing beaches, parks, main stem and wherever crowds congregated. For "In the Navy," Blasko tied up with the local council of Sea Scouts, who furnished him with a lobby display. Opening nights, lad dressed in sailor suit with pants rolled up and barefoot, swabbed the lobby floor in front of card reading: "I'm clearing the deck for action for the hundreds of folks who will see," etc.

A full-page tieup was landed with local paper on their bargain page ahead of "Blondie in Society" by Jack Cotter at the Colonial, in Erie, Pa., guest tickets going to those persons whose names were listed on the page. A plug ran above the comic strip of the same name in the cooperating paper. A two-column cut of Blondie was run in Sunday's paper on the children's page with passes to kids dressing Blondie the best. Further tieup was effected with paper, tickets going to those who phoned in news tips.

Street slant on "Time Out for Rhythm," featured by George D. Irwin at the Paramount, in Grand Forks, N. D., was a man sitting out front with large bannered umbrella and placarded deck chair with copy to the effect that he was taking Time Out for Rhythm and would remain there until the picture opened. On "White Zombie," man dressed in skeleton outfit picketed the theatre with "unfair to organized zombies" copy.

Teaser cards on "The Devil and Miss Jones" were distributed by Pearce Parkhurst at the Orpheum, in Danvers, Mass. One side carried cut of the devil, the other picture copy, cast and playdates.

A number of giant cardboard single passes were distributed by Francis Schlax at the Warner Kenosha, in Kenosha, Wis., to sell his double horror show of "Chamber of Horrors" and "King of the Zombies." Slant in this connection was that passes had to be carried to the theatre without being folded in order to be good for admissions.

During the first week of the "V for Victory" campaign in Canada, George Shafer, publicist at the Palace, in Calgary, planted large "Vs" atop his marquee which were illuminated at night. In addition, his double feature ad was made up in the form of a "V" outline, with copy in the center.

Jig puzzle gag was used in a co-op page form by Hiram M. Meeks at the Malco Ritz, in Russellville, Ark., ahead of "They Met in Bombay," with a piece of a star still of Clarke Gable in each merchant's ad. Guest tickets went to those correctly assembling all the cutout pieces. Top of page carried large scene still covering six columns.

NEW SEASON PROMOTIONS FIND MANAGERS "SPREADING THE WORD"

Philadelphia Warnermen Tieing Special 'Weeks' and 'Months' To Merchant Groups; Loewmen Break with Page Layouts

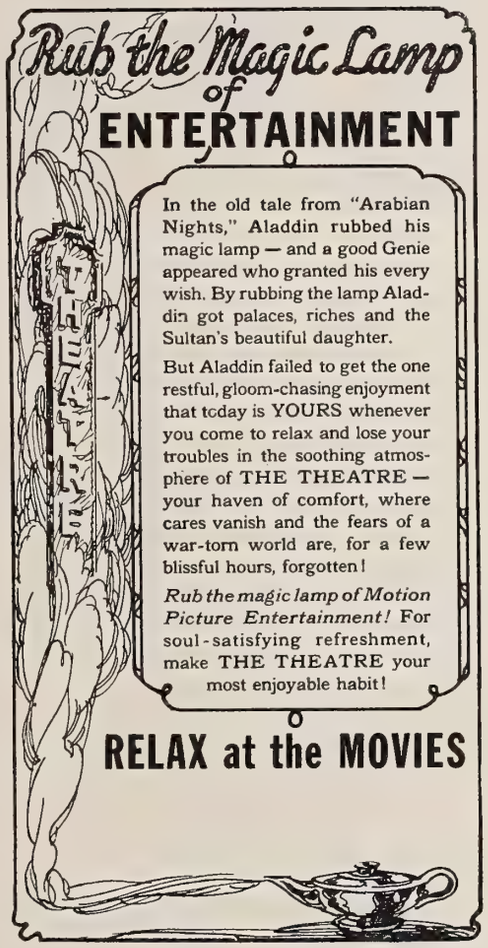
The circuit conventions have now been held and the boys out on the firing line are putting into execution the promotions decided upon for new season drives. Among the reports received, such organizations as Warners, Loew's, Schine and Western Massachusetts Theatres, for instance, are diligently at work. In Philadelphia, the Ted Schlanger forces are developing plans for the fall, the initial effort directed to "a business men's campaign" to include cooperation throughout the zone on such community devices as Lucky Star Month, Boost City Week, Home-Coming Month, Business Men's Association Welcome Home Month. Tieins between certain attractions and merchant sales are planned, with prizes of cash and merchandise contributed by merchants. The business men's campaign is to run four weeks, with coupons for prize participation distributed by stores and theatres to stimulate sales. Following this promotion are three other ideas, Kiddie Amateur Matinee, Patriotic Matinee and Request Night.

Defense Stamps as Prizes

Kiddie Amateur Matinee takes the form of a neighborhood "Kiddie Amateur Follies" in cooperation with music, dramatic and dancing schools, enlisting cooperation of public schools and parent-teacher organizations, as well. Tie-up with a local merchant will provide for prizes.

Patriotic Matinee calls for cooperation of local school supervisors and principals as well as the patriotic groups and parents organizations. Sponsored by the principal and teachers, defense stamps are to be given as prizes to those youngsters writing the best essays at school after they have seen the patriotic show. The principal and teachers will be allowed to make a selection of shorts and the program for the special matinee.

Request Night, which may be called "Take a Chance Night" or "Surprise Night," is a repeat on the "Hollywood Preview Night," which proved popular in many of its try-out situations last season, and is to be confined entirely to a popular re-issue. Suggestion is made that house managers eliminate the picture title and just mention stars where they are box-office, or tease it along for a week.



Benefit Drive Endorsed

A "Benefit Drive" is aimed at organizations that have disbanded for the summer months and will be looking for new revenue. Mr. Schlanger suggests that with school and fraternal organizations seeking extra money for their fall activities, house managers can set aside October as "Benefit Month."

Li'l Abner Matinees call for a revival of the feature as a special matinee buildup in conjunction with a costume prize party based on the newspaper comic strip. Assistant Managers's Week, when full sway in operation of the house is turned over to the assistant manager, is also planned. Sunday Matinee Shows are an effort to convert Sundays to "family day at the movies" rather than directing the appeal exclusively to youngsters. As a result of the current defense activity in this area, Sunday remains the only day of the week when the entire family can enjoy a movie together.

Another "first time" reported for the New Season is the full page planted by Matt Saunders in the Bridgeport Post on behalf of Loew's Poli in addition to a similar page break in the Times-Star. The planting was further localized with a three-column shot of the entire house staff and publicity in keeping. More buildup was had with art and interviews on coming product with Joe R. Vogel and Harry Shaw.

In Indianapolis, Ind., Bill Elder also broke out with a lot of New Season publicity by promoting multi-column stories and photo layouts of what was promised in the Loew programs. Elder's top New Season contest was classified ad tiein with the Star, wherein guest passes are to be given right along to "names" taken from city directory and scattered through the want-ad section. In exchange, paper is running two-column theatre ads on individual attractions.

Schiners Develop 'Pleasure' Plans

The "Movies for Pleasure" theme announced at the recent Schine managers' convention, finds wide expression in the individual campaigns already in work and illustrated by the full-pages reported by Harold Sliter and Lou Hart for the Gloversville houses. The pages headed with a "Schine Theatres Provide 'Movies for Pleasure' banner were given over to stories and art on the coming product. Promotion was arranged with theatres paying for half page, the papers donating the rest. Another full-page promotion for the new season is reported by Manager Harold Koren, for Schine's Arcade, in Cambridge, Md., headed with a streamer and featured with mayoral proclamation.

Cornell Lands Proclamation

For the State, Tupper Lake, New York, Manager Clayton S. Cornell also broke out with a "Movies for Pleasure" page and secured a proclamation from the Mayor carried by the papers. Extra posting and window cards were used and Cornell arranged with a leading dairy for bumper strips on all delivery trucks in the area. The campaign slogan is carried in programs and out front, the lobby also redecorated in keeping. Working with the police and paper, Cornell has arranged for weekly publication of 10 numbers of license plates, drivers selected for careful driving to receive tickets.

In line with the new season plans, the Schiner is emphasizing his newsreel showings with a special board out front highlighting the various news clips. For the date on "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," Clayt tied in with the Plymouth car shown in the picture with preview of the 1942 model, the car placed out front and dealer advertising the event to bring the crowds.

Manual Aids "Western" Managers

The institutional advertising campaign determined at the recent Western Massachusetts Theatres convention is speeded by a home-office manual prepared for the Nathan E. Goldstein managers to sell the circuit's "Movie New Year" drive.

A number of layouts are offered including some of the two-column displays and "It's Showtime" ad slugs found effective by the Interstate Texans, described in a recent issue. Institutional herald, trailer and window card copy is also provided as are exploitation suggestions. These include newspaper tiein for daily front-page box referring to the regular theatre ad on amusement page. In exchange, theatre runs a one-short trailer after newsreeler showings with some such copy as: "You have just seen the latest news in pictures. . . . Be sure to read the latest news in the Union."

Endorsement of motion pictures by prominent local physician is noted for newspaper feature handling and a yarn about the theatre personnel is another possibility.

Western with Sex Appeal

This is a Western of parts, packed with shooting and sex, in about equal measure, and enacted by a cast that gets a maximum of effectiveness out of a story that gave them plenty of scope.

It's not for kiddies but it's stocked with the stuff of which Hollywood believes the grownup adults of the nation get never enough, a belief supported by box office records covering the span of motion picture history.

Here is Clark Gable as a confidence man and Casanova who takes over a Nevada town and builds it up so that he can dominate its citizenry in a legal manner while robbing the population in all the other ways.

Here is Lana Turner as a beauteous and moral Boston maiden who gets the hero drunk so that he'll marry her and then sticks to him no less ecstatically because her efforts to reform him fail.

Here are Frank Morgan as the girl's father, himself a crook but noble enough to die in a futile attempt to save his daughter's happiness, Claire Trevor as a dance hall girl carrying a torch for the hero, Marjorie Main as a knowing widow active on both sides of the ledger and Albert Dekker as the bad man from whom the stronger character takes over control of the city.

The story synopsized on page 235 of your Product Digest, comes under the heading of "strong meat" and is told without restraint in any particular. It is told as forthrightly in the bed room as in the bar room, the two places where most of the high points are reached, and without conditioning to the possible presence of juveniles in the auditorium.

Production, by Pandro S. Berman, is on the grand scale and potent.

Direction by Jack Conway extracts the last ounce of performance from every player in the cast and ties the whole together solidly, his handling of Lana Turner establishing without question, if anybody had any, the young lady's right to stellar billing.

A picture filmed without limitations as to expenditure or freedom of speech, it fits with a nicety all of the Hollywood concepts of what the adult public wants to pay to see.

It's too outspoken (the sequence in which the stricken wife tells her husband "I've lost your baby" and then assures him "We'll have another" is a first of its kind) for exhibition to children.

Previewed at the studio for a small press audience which pronounced it bang-up box office material, both as to six-guns and sex, for theatres large and small but not for the juvenile trade.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER

Suspicion

(RKO, 1941-42)

Drama

This absorbing drama of a woman's tortured imagination is played against the somber background of a provincial English town. That the skeleton of the story is the trite situation of a cultured girl married to a charming wastrel is barely discernible in the brilliant treatment given it by Director Alfred Hitchcock and the fine performance of Joan Fontaine.

The focus of plot and incidental photography and background music is the woman—and so, perhaps, it is a woman's picture. But it should have a powerful appeal for all save those who attend the theatre exclusively for comedy. "Suspicion" will amuse no one.

There are a few laughs to relieve the mounting tension—wry laughs supplied principally by a foolish friend, insensitive to anything below the surface of brandy and horseplay, whose ugly death causes the wife hysterically to suspect her husband of murder. All this is so cleverly suggested, almost entirely unspoken, and so carefully motivated, that one is caught with "Lina" in the web of fear and distrust until, in the last hectic moments, sanity and balance return in the face of death.

The whole cast is excellent. Cary Grant is given capable support. Even quite minor roles are graced by such able performers as Dame May Whitty, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Heather Angel. In fact, every one connected with the production has contributed to the concentrated effect, although the music at times dominates a scene with unnecessary emphasis.

The whole achieves a tight perfection that needs only a broader field of action and interest for the wider audience this experiment in character analysis deserves.

Look Who's Laughing

(RKO Radio, 1941-42)

Radio Comedy

The millions who listen to Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy and to Fibber McGee and Molly over the radio are expected to be a ready audience for this film which resembles a long radio comedy in structure and content. Into the hour and a quarter of running time there has been packed many lines calculated to bring smiles and laughs to theatre patrons.

Allan Dwan, producer and director, has constructed the picture in such a way that the featured comedy teams are given ample opportunity to show their talents. Just enough emphasis has been given to a plot to make the various skits hang together.

At the end of a radio season Bergen and McCarthy start on a vacation, leaving behind "Julie Patterson" (Lucille Ball), Bergen's secretary and aide, to marry his manager, played by Lee Bonnell. They land at Wistful Vista, a small community where McGee is having many troubles as head of the Chamber of Commerce. Bergen and McCarthy stay with McGee and Molly and at length everything is straightened out; Bergen is to marry his secretary; his manager has married another girl; the McGees own an airport and a new plane factory will restore prosperity to the town; only Charlie McCarthy, who takes the acting honors, is not satisfied.

In addition to the teams mentioned, others in the cast which are known to radio listeners are Gildersleeve and Mrs. Uppington. With the start of the Autumn season the various radio performers starred in this film are back on the air and the most natural exploitation would be radio tieups.

Let's Go Collegiate

(Monogram, 1941-42)

Campus Comedy Plus Songs

This item from the Monogram setup is in the nature of an answer for the showman wondering what he can do about the slump in the quality of secondary product supplied by the larger studios since the inception of Consent Decree selling. This comedy with music, produced on a budget which wouldn't get the camera started on a so-called major lot, outstrips the majority of supporting material offered by the signatories in point of freshness, spirit, liveliness, humour and the essentials of entertainment generally. It lacks nothing but some sure-fire names for the electric lights to get the customers into the house.

Humour is the principal business of the players and they derive a lot of it from a script full of funny situations and crisp dialogue. The proceedings have to do with the substitution of a thug for the stroke of a varsity crew and with the complications which follow upon his deciding to stay in college under his assumed identity. Millions have been spent on less worthwhile college plots with a fraction of the results obtained with this one.

Frankie Darro, Jackie Moran, Keye Luke, Frank Sully and Mantan Moreland stand out in the action, with Marcia Mae Jones and Gale Storm supplying the feminine interest and some singing.

Direction by Jean Yarbrough is a confident and knowing job.

Lindsley Parsons, producer, rates another feather for his cap.

Previewed at the California theatre, Glendale, where it followed the highly successful "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" and kept the audience in high spirits throughout its running time.—W.R.W.

Unexpected Uncle

(RKO Radio, 1941-42)

Poor Girl and Rich Boy

"Unexpected Uncle" is a love story with a Cinderella quality, unfolded against the gayety and tropical splendor of Florida. It is light entertainment with its only fault a quality of implausibility.

Anne Shirley is a poor but honest working girl who is befriended by Charles Coburn, a millionaire traveling incognito. She is in love, or will be, with James Craig, another millionaire, and the picture is devoted to the vicissitudes of this love affair, with its now-it's-on, now-it's-off quality. At first, there is difficulty because Mr. Craig insists on drinking too much. When that problem is liquidated, and they become engaged, Miss Shirley finds herself neglected because Mr. Craig insists on working too hard, due to a sense of social responsibility to his many employees. Mr. Coburn, mentor and friend, advises Mr. Craig to walk out on his responsibilities because the business would go on just the same. He knows because the same thing happened to him. The advice is taken and love lives happily ever after.

Mr. Coburn is presented here in a role similar to the one he had in "The Devil and Miss Jones" but with not as many histrionic opportunities. However, he gives an ingratiating performance, and exhibits remarkable skill in horseshoe pitching. Ernest Truex is excellent in the role of a butler. Anne Shirley is earnest and sincere as the heroine, with a suggestion of Olivia de Havilland about her, which isn't bad either. James Craig, although the hero, is not given as interesting a role as he had in "Kitty Foyle," but does as well as could be expected.

The musical motif throughout is "Wishing Will Make It So."

It is a program picture.

Previewed at the company projection room before a trade-press audience who laughed at the few comedy touches, but otherwise seemed restless.—IRENE SMOLEN

Bad Man of Deadwood

(Republic, 1940-41)

West Is West

Roy Rogers, the hero, is not a bad man at all; he is the singing and shooting crusader who helps rid the town of all its bad men, during the process of which "Deadwood" becomes very much alive.

Roy Rogers, as a singer, western style, and expert marksman in the traveling medicine show of "Professor 'Gabby' Blackstone" (George "Gabby" Hayes) and his daughter "Sally" (Sally Payne), comes to the town of Deadwood, where law and order are mythical terms and where even new business enterprises are not tolerated. Evil flourishes, but Rogers finally has an opportunity to expose it, roots when the "Professor" is robbed of a large sum of money, to which he had just fallen heir. Rogers has to break into the bank and hold up the gold coach in order to ascertain the identity of the villains, the ringleader of whom is the editor of the Deadwood Clarion, "Ted Carver" (Henry Brandon), an ostensibly honest man. Rogers is made sheriff.

The hero is amazingly adroit with a gun, sings a number of songs pleasantly and is the possessor of an engaging smile. George "Gabby" Hayes provides a bit of comedy and Henry Brandon is a handsome villain. Sally Payne is a friend to Rogers, but Carol Adams is the girl who gazes fondly into his eyes at the close.

There is an abundance of action and shooting as another town in the West is cleaned up.

Previewed at the company projection room before an audience of trade-press and professional reviewers, mostly women, who didn't react audibly. One woman, however, did complain of the wall-paper in one scene.—I. S.

Harmon of Michigan

Sports Story

There are numerous items of interest to exhibitors in this Columbia picture. First, of course, the star is Tom Harmon, the all-American gridiron hero of last year. Second, it is a fast moving, action-crammed sports story which tosses the narrative cliches out of the window. Third, it appears to be the only football picture on the horizon from Hollywood this year. Fourth, it aims at appealing to the non-sports fans.

What happens to a football hero after graduation with plaudits ringing in his ears is told in the story. Harmon, playing himself, finds his first job as assistant coach lost because of the antagonism of his superior. After playing pro-football, he becomes an assistant to a gridiron veteran, but leaves to coach a rival college. Through the use of an illegal play, he defeats his mentor's team and resigns, after realizing that there's something more than winning games of football.

Harmon, who delivers well both on and off the field, is supported by Forest Evashevski, another gridiron hero; Anita Louise, as the college girl who becomes his wife; Oscar O'Shea, Warren Ashe, and others.

Charles Barton, the director, and Wallace McDonald, the producer, both handled their tasks admirably, turning out a most satisfying piece of entertainment.

The Feminine Touch

(MGM, 1941-42)

Rosalind Russell Entertains

Not since in "The Women" has Rosalind Russell entertained with such a display of sparkle, wit and charm as sets this comedy of manners apart and above its contemporaries. Other characteristics distinguishing this film from its fellows in the field of dressed-up comedy are freedom from innuendo, an absence of suggestiveness and an adherence to the line of humor in situations which could have gone overboard under clumsier handling.

Grouped around Miss Russell and affording her plenty of competition for acting honors are Don Ameche, Kay Francis and Van Heflin, the four of these stoutly supported on occasion by a cast of seasoned performers. There are no soft spots in the personnel.

The story, originally titled "The Female of the Species" concerns a college professor, his wife, a book publisher and his secretary, who are drawn together by their interest in a book on the aspects and implications of jealousy which the professor has written. Upshot of a sequence of situations in which the professor conforms to the text of his book while the others, try as they will, continue to act like human beings, is the professor's reversion to form in the happy ending.

A polished production by Joseph L. Mankiewicz, directed with razoredge nicety by W. S. Van Dyke II, the picture is tops in entertainment.

Viewed for purposes of this report at a first-grade theatre in a representative city where an audience attracted by "Hold That Ghost" laughed heartily throughout this politer variety of comedy, a circumstance arguing its success in any setting and in proximity to any other entertainment.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Riders of the Purple Sage

See the West by Horseback

Mighty pretty country around there, where they made this remake of a Western that made money for showmen when the star of this version wore rompers, and some mighty pretty horseback riding occurs by way of giving the customers a good view of it. The same could have been and was said for the original, which suggests saying it again in advertising for this edition.

George Montgomery, starred also in this block as hero of "Last of the Duanes," demonstrates again in this adventure that he's a right handy man with a six-gun and at home aboard a pony. It may be of special and particular point for showmen to remark to their patrons, additionally, that Mr. Montgomery does not sing.

As directed by James Tinling for executive producer Sol Wurtzel, the picture keeps moving, from start to finish, and the principals keep shooting, generally with lethal effect, these circumstances tending to offset some meandering and confusion as to just what the trouble is all about. Gist of it seems to be that the hero has a bit of avenging to do and doesn't give up easily.

Week-end in Havana

(20th Century-Fox, 1941-42)

One of Those Cruises

The new film of the Alice Faye-Carmen Miranda tour of Latin America is as gay, colorful and improbable as the Cuban capital itself. Ernest Palmer, as photographic director, working in Technicolor, has presented a tourists' paradise, with a few excellent shots of the Islanders, whose Cuba it barely resembles.

But this is a Hollywood-New York product from the glamorous hosiery salesgirl whose cherished vacation is almost ruined by a steamship mishap, to the charming bounder who agrees to provide Latin romance for a fee, and who, incidentally hails from Brooklyn. The week-end of the title is underwritten by a steamship company on the girl's promise of a waiver of liability if it lives up to her dreams. That it ultimately does is incidental to the audience's enjoyment. For meanwhile there is Carmen Miranda with her locomotive Portuguese and equally expressive English. Several beautifully-staged song and dance numbers interrupt her hot pursuit of the Brooklyn boy who lives by his wits—and in this capacity Cesar Romero turns in the best performance in the film. The romance between Alice Faye and John Payne is necessarily a little tepid, but the pair are attractive enough to keep the thread of story running through agreeably, with the help of director Lang.

William LeBaron, who produced the film, was not primarily interested in cementing Pan-American relations, but "Weekend in Havana" should do much to improve the tourist trade.

Previewed at the projection room before an appreciative audience of exhibitors and members of the trade press.—E. A. C.

Great Guns

(20th Century-Fox, 1941-42)

Return for Laughs

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy return to the screen with "Great Guns," a Fox all-out drive to see how many laughs can be condensed into 74 minutes of running time. The pantomime and the slapstick which are the trademarks of the pair are given full swing against a background of the newly enlarged United States Army, and the preview showed that they are just as funny as they ever were; that their antics provoke hilarious outbursts from audiences, and that their appeal has not diminished.

Supporting them are newcomer Dick Nelson, Sheila Ryan, Edmund MacDonald, Charles Trowbridge and a host of character players, with Nelson and Miss Ryan providing the romantic interest.

The story has them as servants in a household, the young master of which has been thought ill for years. When he is drafted, they enlist to take care of him. Following them to the Army encampment is a pet raven, which manages to complicate their lives. The climax comes at maneuvers when the bird enables the troops to win a mock combat. The narrative supplies excellent pegs for the Laurel and Hardy antics, and director Montague Banks, in his first American film assignment, gives the pair full play. Their gamut runs from elaborately built gags to simple buffoonery, best sequence being that in which Hardy disgraces his company at inspection when the raven gets in his trousers.

Previewed at the Alexander Theatre, Glendale, to an audience which, having just viewed "Hold That Ghost," laughed itself into near hysterics at this.—V. K.

The Gay Falcon

(RKO-Radio, 1941-42)

Criminology With a Flair

The George Sanders who was "The Saint" in the melodramas of that series is here "The Falcon" in a melodrama of the same general pattern but with somewhat more emphasis on humor at no sacrifice to the thrill equation. It makes an hour go by a deal more pleasantly than most pictures of its general kind and leaves no threads dangling at the finish.

Direction by Irving Reis for producer Howard Benedict keeps the action flowing smoothly and the humor packed into the crevices of the interwoven incidents in a manner to eliminate lulls and those pauses for substantiation which so often clog a detective story fatally. Both gentlemen rate praise for their achievements.

Mr. Sanders plays the criminologist with his usual suavity and Allen Jenkins furnishes just about the right shade of amusing discomfiture as his associate. Wendy Barrie and Anne Hunter portray the two ladies whose emotions complicate the detective's life and there is effective performing by Gladys Cooper, Edward Brophy, Arthur Shields and the other members of the cast.

The story, synopsized on page 218 of your Product Digest, is a snugly snarled affair about some murders committed in connection with a scheme to bilk a jewel inurance company. The time is the present and the scene is any large city.

Previewed for the trade press at the Alexander Theatre in Glendale where an audience attracted by "Dive Bomber" responded to the preview in a manner indicating complete satisfaction.—W. R. W.

Produced and released by RKO-Radio. Howard Benedict, producer. Irving Reis, director. P. C. A. No. 7362. Release date not set. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 60 minutes. General audience classification.

Outlaws of Cherokee Trail

(Republic, 1941-42)

Western

This one contains all the necessary ingredients—outlaws, Indians, horses, Texas rangers and a pretty girl—but somehow the dough doesn't seem to rise. Perhaps it's because the murders are too cold-blooded and the legal barriers to justice too abstruse. In any event, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler and especially Rufe Davis do an efficient job of cleaning up old Indian territory and saving the Captain's daughter, in spite of thin material. There are numerous disguises including an attempt by "The Three Mesquiteers" to pass themselves off as Cherokees. There's a good poker trick too, but you need a papoose.

Previewed at the projection room before a trade press audience.—E. A. C.

Produced and released by Republic Pictures. Directed by Les Orlebeck. Associate Producer, Louis Gray. Photographed by Ernest Miller. P.C.A. No. 7589. Running time, 56 minutes. Release date, Sept. 10, 1941. General audience classification.

He Found a Star

(John Corfield—General Film Dist.)

Musical Romance

First commercial consideration here to strike the British exhibitor will be that two well known names top the cast list, Vic Oliver, an allround favourite of stage and radio—more notably the later—and the daughter of Britain's Prime Minister, both saleable assets. Other than that the film, which is adapted from a novel by a lesser known British journalist, has been briskly handled by director Paddy Carstairs, has a constant vivacity, some neat lines, and an intermittent element of song, dance and spectacle. Longer than it need have been, it has qualities of entertainment in that category loosely known as "popular."

Oliver's role is that of an inconsequential vaudeville agent who fights for the lesser lights of the profession, but falls for the glamour girls, puts on a topline show and is saved from a first night anti-climax by the devotion of his secretary, Miss Churchill, who saves him from himself, and incidentally for herself. It is a familiar theme which has been done better a hundred and one times by American studios, but Oliver is amusing without making any bid for the Beauty Stakes and Miss Churchill graceful and sweetly spoken in her patrician way. The cast also includes the mercurial and sinuous Evelyn Dall, one of America's gifts to British swing music, and the polished Robert Atkins, who steps off the ladder of Shakespearean production to give life to the character of an old time heavy baritone.

The atmosphere is British backstage and backchat, there are plenteous songs, dances, and cabaret and vaudeville scenes, some glittering orchestration from Ben Frankel, and a spot of rich vocalism by a Negro discovery, Uriel Porter.

Seen in a London trade show theatre where a matutinal audience obviously enjoyed it and relished particularly the quizzical humour of Mr. Oliver, though some of the males also were moved by the physical and vocal curves of Madamoiselle Dall.—AUBREY FLANAGAN.

The Kid From Kansas

(Universal, 1941-42)

Start of a Series

This first in a series of action pictures featuring Dick Foran, Leo Carrillo and Andy Devine sets no precedent to test the ability of the studio to carry on and upward. On the contrary, it pitches the entertainment in a key so moderate that there is ground for expecting nothing but improvement of its successors.

The players featured handle themselves well but are given little in the way of a script to engage their talents.

The tale, told on page 221 of your Product Digest, is about some trouble in a banana republic. It provides reason for some fighting and opportunity for Mr. Foran to sing a couple of songs, but not much else of interest occurs.

Ben Pivar, the producer, and William Nigh, director, could have used some help from the writing department, which supplied them with almost nothing in the way of subject matter to work with.

Previewed at the studio to a gathering of trade press people who found other things to converse about on their way off the lot.—W. R. W.

This month, we at NATIONAL THEATRE SUPPLY COMPANY are celebrating a birthday. Our 15th, to be exact.

If you think we're pretty proud to be 15 years old, you're right. We are. We're proud, happy and tremendously thankful. We hope you've enjoyed doing business with NATIONAL as much as we've enjoyed doing business with you.

As all of us know, this is an industry of constant shifts and changes; the currents of popularity build up swiftly and tear down with even greater speed. Glance back at the names that made news in the trade papers 15 years ago and you are struck almost immediately by the terrific mortality even among the greatest.

But through all these years NATIONAL THEATRE SUPPLY COMPANY, piloted by a shirt-sleeved personnel that understands the exhibitors' problems, held to a course that has brought it leadership in its field.

We like to believe that we have fulfilled the prophecy made editorially in the Exhibitors Herald of 1926 when it said that "National . . . is now in a position to render nationally a thoroughly indispensable service to theatre owners in matters of equipment, maintenance and operation."

Today, as then, NATIONAL's 29 branches and 300 employees are dedicated to the proposition that "day or night, wherever you are, there's a NATIONAL branch nearby to serve you better."

Plastic Changeable Letters

SLOTTED ATTRACTION panel letters of plastic material, instead of metal, providing colored changeable advertising letters for silhouette type attraction boards, have been brought out by Wagner Sign Service of Chicago. At the same time that the plastic letters give the legibility of the silhouette display, they introduce, by virtue of their translucence, luminous color. Many hundreds of colors are theoretically available, and a large proportion of these can be obtained on special order; however, the manufacturer announces that at least for the time being, five colors will be made available—opaque black (having the same silhouette effect as metal letters), red, green, blue and amber.

Development of the all-plastic letter follows introduction some months ago by the same manufacturer of a duo-color letter, having a translucent inner section with metal border. A still earlier development was the Wagner "duo-silo" letter with a plastic center in an aluminum frame. The latter proved impracticable on account of the cost; the Government's demand for metal suited to attraction letters, on account of the defense program, has made feasible the purchase of the necessary molds for manufacture of the all-plastic letter, and they are now available in 10-inch sizes, with the 8- and 4-inch sizes to follow, and the larger sizes to be added later. Incidentally, among the larger sizes, instead of a 16-inch letter, a 17-inch letter will be manufactured so as to effect a perfect line-up when combining several sizes of letters in a "typographical" display on an interchangeable panel.

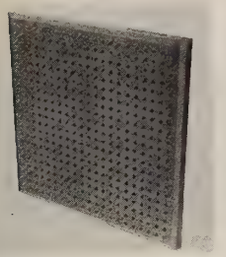
An interesting feature of the translucent letters is the possibility of changing the color tone of the panel intermittently, giving the attraction advertising the effect of animation. For example, if red letters were used with the panel lighting consisting in both white and green light sources, on flasher or dimmer circuits, the red letters, would appear red when the white light sources were on, and black when the green sources were operating (the method was explained with reference to the duo-color letters in the issue of May 3rd). A similar flashing or slow-changing effect could be produced with any complementary colors.

The manufacturer explains that the plastic material is forced into molds at a pressure of 40,000 pounds to the square inch, and the resulting letter will not warp at temperatures to which they are subjected on the attraction panel. The weight given is less than half that of aluminum letters, and tests at 60-mile wind pressure are cited as demonstrating stability, it being also pointed out that the slot method of mounting means that wind pressure forces the letters firmly against the rods.

The design of the plastic letters is the same as that of the Wagner aluminum letters so that the plastic may be substituted for metal letters in use.

The plastic letters are also designed for interior signs without regular attraction panel equipment. For placement above poster cases and elsewhere for announcement of coming attractions, the letter may be mounted by means of a heavy steel spring that extends into the flange of the letter.

Dating L. I. Lamps



A NOVEL method of indicating the obsolescence of low-intensity projection arc lamps was used recently by the Strong Electric Corporation of Toledo, in a mailing piece entitled "Buggy Whips, Base Burners and Low-Intensity Lamps." Illustrated by old-fashioned wood cuts, the folder described changes which have taken place in projection since the introduction of low-intensity arcs—and frankly disclosed to the theatre operator what will happen to his own eyesight if he keeps looking at a screen illuminated by light sources less competent than the high-intensity arcs of today.

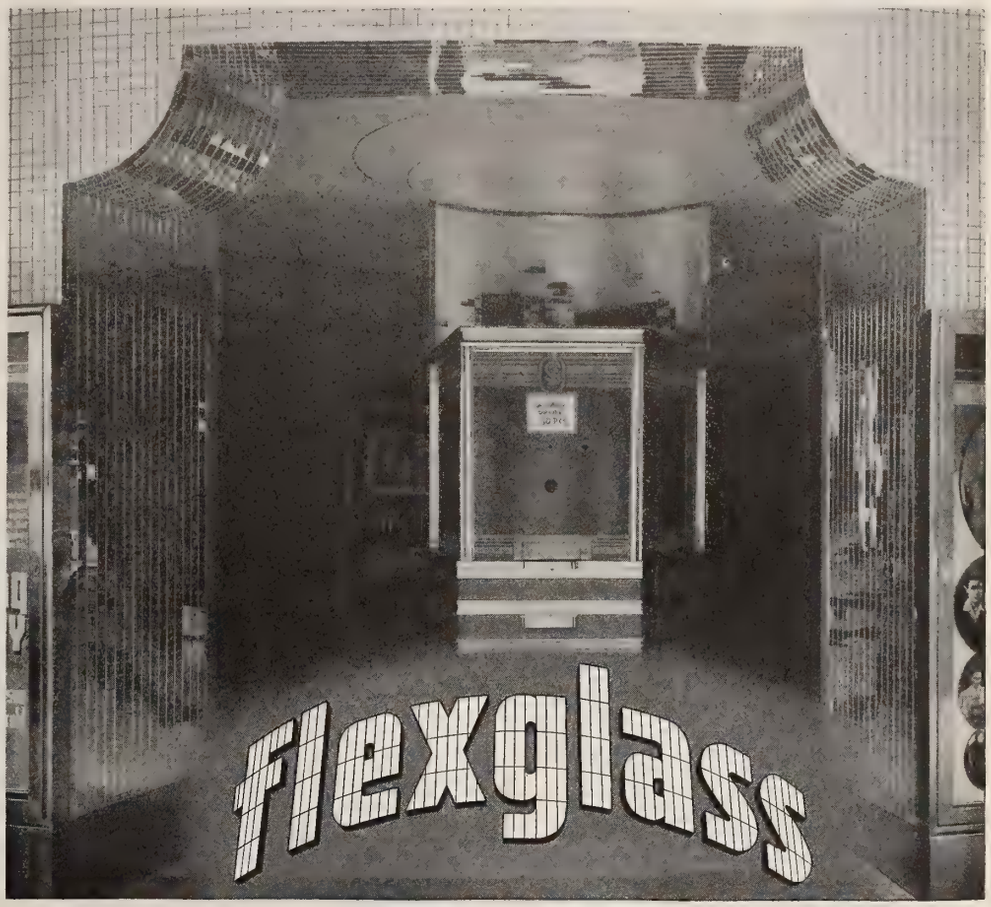
Composition Acoustic Material

A NEW ACOUSTIC material of fibrous composition has been developed by the Armstrong Cork Company of Lancaster, Pa. Called "Cushiontone," it is of perforated type. There are three standard thicknesses —½-, ⅝- and ⅞-inch; the first two are installed on rigid surfaces; the thickest one may be erected to furring strips by nailing. Standard unit sizes are 12x12, and 12x24 inches.

The regular color is ivory; however, the material may be tinted with oil paints. It can be cleaned with a vacuum cleaner or wallpaper cleaner.

Emergency Light Units



NEW EMERGENCY lighting power sources have been brought out by the Electric Storage Battery Company of Philadelphia in capacities from 3,400 to 10,000 watts, augmenting a line which includes similar equipment with capacities up to 100,000 watts. The smaller units are capable of providing emergency lighting at exits, in the auditorium, at stairways, on fire escapes and similar critical areas at a time of power line failure.

Each unit is used in connection with an Exide battery of either the "Chloride" or the "Flat Plate" type, and has an automatic switch for instantaneous transfer of current feed from the main a.c. supply to the emergency line. When the main supply is restored, the emergency line automatically cuts out of operation.

Charging is also automatic, for when the main supply is cut in, the battery is automatically placed on high-rate charge and continues thereon until fully charged, when the recharging is automatically cut out. Life of batteries is rated at from eight to fourteen years, depending on the type of battery used.

WILTON-WEAVE CARPETING

In Wilton weaving, yarns already colored are woven, according to the design, on a Jacquard loom. The design is made on checked paper, number of checks determining quality of weave. Following line of checks (above, center) across design paper, weftwise, the stamper inserts steel punches in plate of a press to cut round holes in strip of cardboard, thus forming Jacquard cards which select colors of yarn according to design. Above, right, is shown large-quantity dyeing of raw stock in vats.

Skein yarn dyeing is pictured above, at left. When the rack is loaded with skeins, they are submersed in heated dye liquor for prescribed period of time, the liquor being agitated to achieve uniform dyeing. At right, above, is shown Jacquard loom weaving of Wilton carpeting. Thousands of surface yarn ends are threaded through eyes in lift wires connected to Jacquard mechanism. Yarns to form the surface design are lifted by Jacquard control; yarns not needed for this are buried in body of fabric until needed.

The New "One Kilowatt" Arcs use "National", "Suprex" and "Orotip" Carbons

1881—1941

This is our sixtieth year of service in the field of carbon arc lighting. Throughout the years "National" carbons, by constant research and development, have been steadily improved and adapted to the needs of the times.

● The most satisfactory projection of modern films requires a white light of daylight quality. This means high intensity projection. Color that is really natural — snappy black and white — comfortable vision at all times assure audience satisfaction which spells success for any theatre.

The modern "One Kilowatt" arcs bring High Intensity projection within the reach of any small theatre. If you are still using Low Intensity projection ask your dealer to demonstrate this new light. The difference is marvelous. Step into High — It pays dividends.

The Marquee Joins In Contest Promotion

THE MARQUEE attraction panel acquired even more significance as a business builder with the star-naming contest conducted throughout last month by the Rockne theatre in Chicago. No similar contest, involving the marquee, could have been held until the introduction of the Wagner player-photo transparencies by Marquee Services, Inc., last spring, so it is a brand new idea which the theatre reports as highly successful.

With each change of program throughout August, certain players appearing in current pictures were pictured on the marquee by means of the transparencies (as indicated in the accompanying photograph). The contest, carrying cash awards amounting to $500, was advertised in handbills and other promotional material as a "Star-Gazing Contest." Each patron received a card explaining the rules and providing spaces for writing in the player names submitted, according to the number of the picture given on the marquee.

At the beginning of the contest, the players displayed on the marquee were the stars or other well known players likely to be readily recognized by patrons, thereby making identification appear easy; but as the contest progressed, players in parts more and more minor were chosen.

The method, as developed by Marquee Services, required only that the theatre provide a photograph of each player to be displayed so that a transparency could be made, and it was suggested that not even Marquee Services be told the name of the performer.

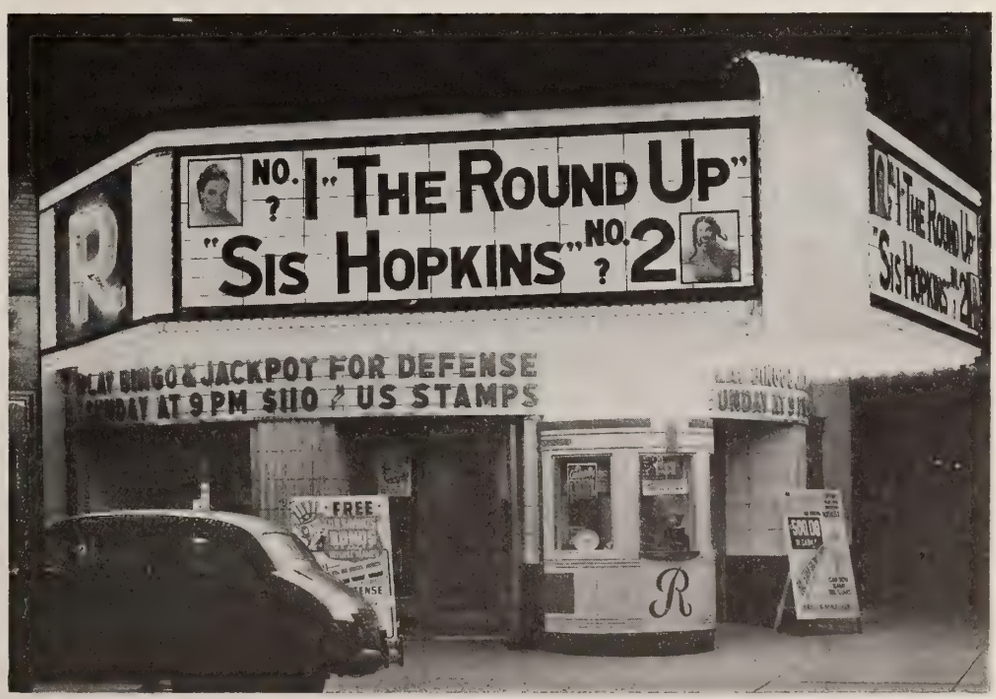
The prize was awarded to the person naming the most players correctly during the month, with three local persons of high standing in the community acting as judges. The award was made on the stage of the theatre on a Wednesday night, three days after the close of the contest.

Desirable Levels of Theatre Illumination

LIGHT LEVEL recommendations for various types of buildings and purposes just issued by the Nela Park Engineering Department of the General Electric Company, depart with respect to theatre foyers from previous recommendations made by this authority. Whereas a range of from 3 to 5 foot-candles was earlier suggested, one of from 5 to 10 foot-candles is now recommended. The larger number would of course apply to the larger foyers (those likely to be found in theatres seating above 1,200), the lower level for the foyer of average dimensions. Confirming this change, H. J. Chanon of General Electric states:

"It has been our experience that new lighting in theatre foyers is about double that which we recommended at the time the theatre lighting bulletin was prepared."

Other recommendations tally with those originally issued. Auditorium light levels are placed at 5 foot-candles during intermission, about a tenth of a foot-candle during projection (with much of this light coming, of course, from the screen). Lobby light intensity is given as 20 foot-candles; the earlier recommendations broke this up into 10 foot-candles for theatres below 1,200, 15 for 1,200 to 2,500, and as much as 20 only for the large places.



The general recommendations now issued do not refer to under-marquee lighting (which normally includes the vestibule). Inquiries indicate persistent puzzlement concerning the quantity of illumination in this area. The original Nela Park suggestions, issued in 1938, gave 30 foot-candles for the entrance area normally encountered among small houses (up to 700 seats); from 30 to 50 foot-candles for that of theatres seating from 700 to 1,200; 50 to 100 for capacities 1,200 to 2,500, and above that range, 100 foot-candles. Regarding light level specifications for the entrance area, Mr. Chanon has further commented:

"You will appreciate that it is extremely difficult to set down hard and fast rules for these sections of the theatre, inasmuch as the actual illumination required depends very much on the competition in the neighborhood. For the average theatre of average location, the values as recommended are practical and have been installed satisfactorily."

Posters, it is well to remember, require approximately ten time the illumination of surroundings in order to attract attention and be easily read.

Crazy for Work

If you've had trouble getting things done around your theatre lately, neatly and economically, perhaps you'll find consoling philosophy in the story John Sefing tells. John, he of the many "Ways & Means" which we hope are proving helpful to you, gets around, you know; his work as engineer, specifications man and general get-the-job-done personage in matters pertaining to theatre equipment and construction, may take him aboard a ship or into a school to supervise the installation of motion picture facilities. Not so long ago it took him to a large hospital, which is the locale of our story.

He had drawn up the specifications for a private theatre within the walls of the institution and went out to direct installations. On this day the stage draperies and screen were to be placed. He arrived about 10 o'clock in the morning. The man who was to help him, whom we'll call Bill, had not yet arrived with the two other men he was to bring. There was, however, another chap on the stage, mulling through the draperies. After waiting in vain for Bill, John finally approached the man on the stage and asked him what he did around the place.

"He certainly likes to work!"
"Sure, he's crazy."

"Oh, I help out on a lot of things," he replied. "You need any help?"

John explained the situation and the stranger said he would be glad to lend a hand.

"Well," John relates, "as soon as I say okay, he grabs a bundle of material, brings over two ladders and runs up one to start installing the hangar linen and battens. He certainly liked to work. He went at it like a beaver. At the rate he was going we would be finishing the job in half the time I had expected. We were almost done with the first part of the job when Bill and his men arrived.

"After getting Bill's alibi, I turned to the fellow on the ladder and told him he could quit now as my men had arrived. But he only looks down at me for a minute, then goes back to work. I took two dollar bills out of my pocket. 'Here,' I said, and held up the money. 'I don't need you anymore.' He took the bills, examined them for a moment, then handed them down to me. 'No,' he says, 'you can't fool me. It's paper money. I like shiny money.'

At about this point I would have got wise anyway, but just then a fellow in uniform walked in. He takes in the situation, then calls to my efficient helper, 'Come on, Charlie, it's time you had your dinner now. Be a good boy and come down off the ladder.'

"As he led the fellow out, the asylum attendant turned to me and said, "A little wacky, but harmless.' "

And as he ends the story, John sighs as he reflects on how soon he could have finished that job if Bill and the attendant had not walked in.

News from the Front

Apparently the British are finding time to do some things quite beyond the necessities of the job of sustaining life and liberty. Comes this report, by clipper mail, from London:

John Ojerholm, general manager of Olympic Kinematograph Laboratories, announces the development of a system of mechanically seasoning film gelatine so as to eliminate film damage by collection of green emulsion on projector tension shoes.

"Every theatre," said Mr. Ojerholm, "is entitled to receive film thoroughly prepared for screening and it should not be the projectionist's duty to wax or otherwise

To be Texas' first theatre exclusively presenting newsreels and short subjects. An existing building in Dallas is being remodeled to house the 600-seat theatre, which will be another "Telenews" property of New York interests already operating newsreel theatres in Cleveland and San Francisco. A novel feature of the front of the theatre, which has been designed by Jack Corgan, Dallas architect, will be a huge porcelain globe of the earth, which will revolve with the principal cities marked by blinking lights.

treat film to ensure uninterrupted screening, nor should he be held responsible for the oil he must apply to the film."

The prediction that metal shortage due to defense would soon bring wider use of plastics continues to be borne out. In this issue Wagner Sign Service, Inc., announces plastic changeable attraction panel letters. General Electric has begun the manufacture of cooling tower fans of plastic material. Will we be a-seeing all-plastic auditorium chairs before the war is over?

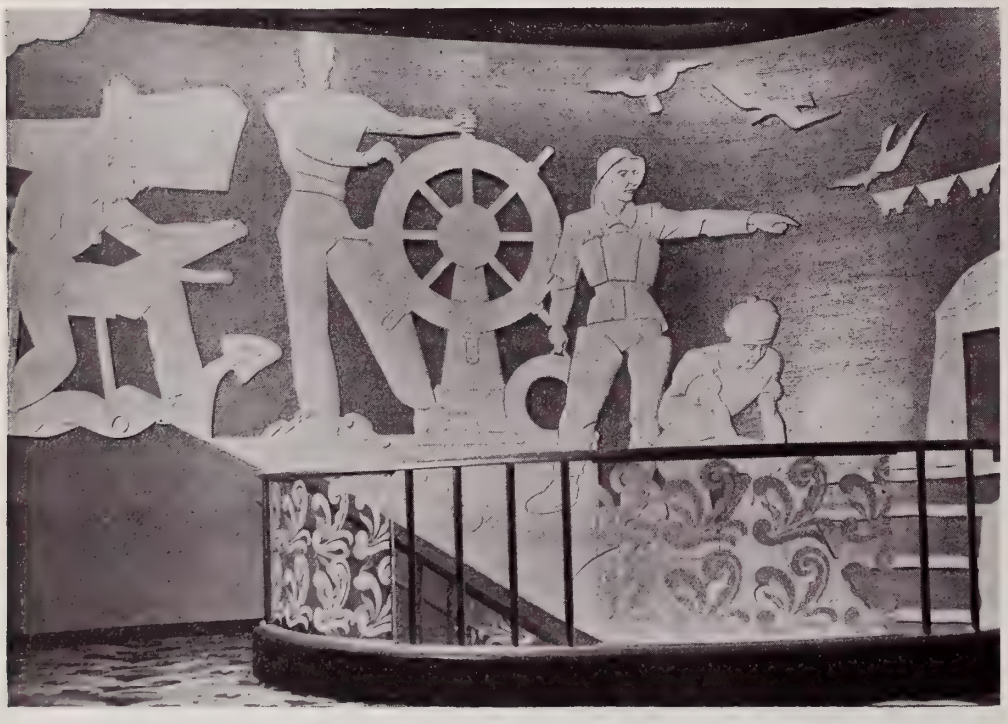
RENDERING: NORSHOR FACADE



FOR ILLUSION

■ Designed, in the words of John J. Friedl, president of the Minnesota Amusement Company, owners and operators, " to recapture the illusion that has made the theatre a source of magic to the public," the new Norshor in Duluth is generously planned in a modern ornamental, or baroque, style. Designed by Liebenberg & Kaplan, Minneapolis architects, the Norshor seats approximately 1,000 on one floor, but has a large mezzanine devoted to lounge facilities, including the Milk Bar described in the August issue of Better Theatres. Above is a section of foyer, reached through an art gallery and ending in a huge mirror reflecting a photo-mural at the turn of the staircase of a local scenic site. Walls are finished in metallic grass (a Japanese cloth), except in gallery, where they are of treated burlap ("Amerispun"). The staircase has plate glass balustrade supported by metal rods and with bleached wood rail. Carpeting throughout the theatre is Mohawk Wilton with wave pattern in blue, ivory and gold. Other views of the Norshor appear on following two pages.

■ Appliqued mural (above) carved in mineral Celotex, mounted against metallic cloth walls (same as in foyer) at side of stair well leading to mezzanine lounge. The mural is an allegorical representation of the industrial interests of Duluth and its county. This view also shows the glass balustrade in detail.

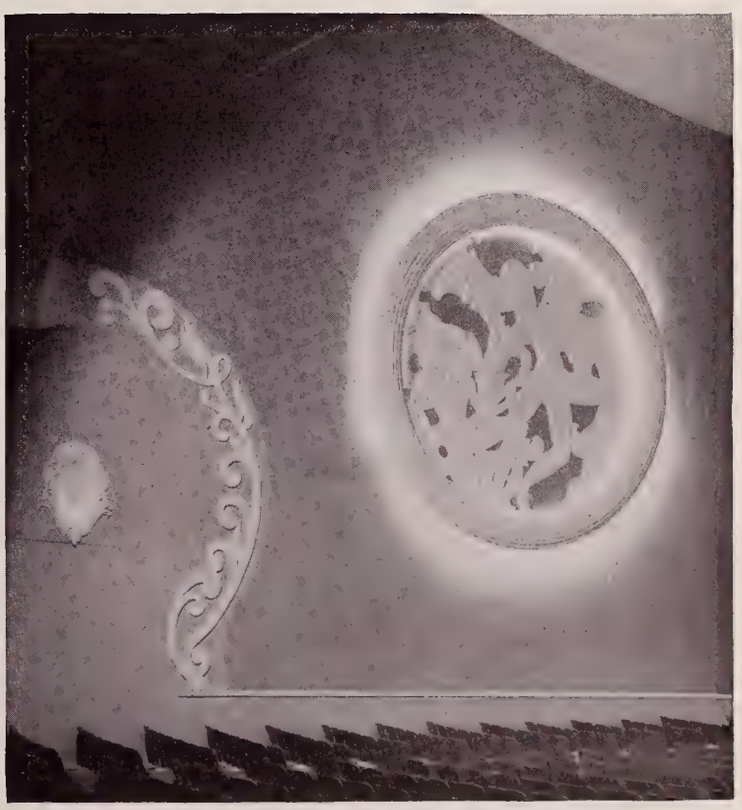
■ Detail (right) of one of the carved "pictures" on the walls of the foyer. It is executed in special gypsum composition.



THE MILK BAR

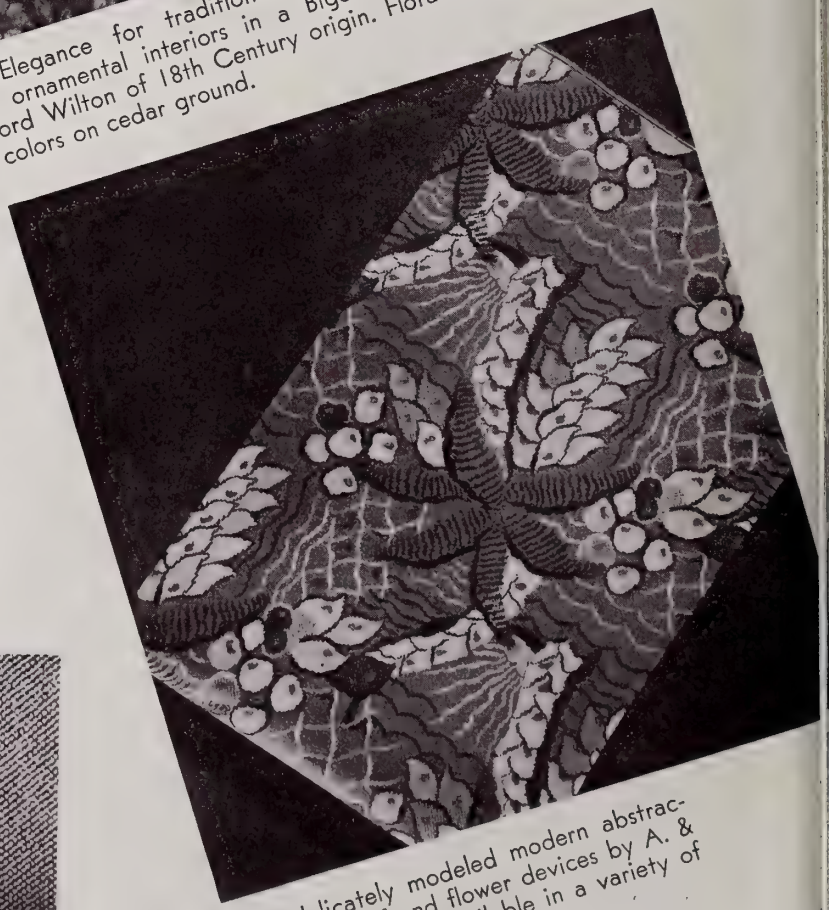
■ Distinctly an innovation as a prominent feature of lounge facilities is the Milk Bar located just to the right of the head of the staircase, directly opposite the main lounge on the mezzanine level (see floor plan below for arrangement of toilet rooms behind the Milk Bar, concentrating plumbing in this area, with passage through a loggia which leads also to manager's office). The Milk Bar, which was the subject of a news story in the August issue, is centered in a lounge space with built-in wall seats, above which extends a mural painting presenting an amusing caricature of rural life. The bar section may be closed by a draw curtain. The bar itself is finished in Dupont Fabrikoid (as used also on lobby walls), with baroque scrolls in white nails. It is equipped with a soda fountain and refrigerator unit of stainless steel.

PLAN OF MAIN AND MEZZANINE FLOOR

■ Detailed view (above) of auditorium side wall treatment. The main section of the wall is of Acousti-Celotex and perforated hardboard in alternate spacings, with alternations differing on the opposite wall to vary reflection and absorption of sound. The ground color of the walls are camelia red, accents are in bone white, including plaster scrolls and medallions. The wainscot and ceiling is plaster painted putty green. All ceilings in the Noshor are finished in "Vermiculite" plaster, which is lighter and more insulating than regular plaster.

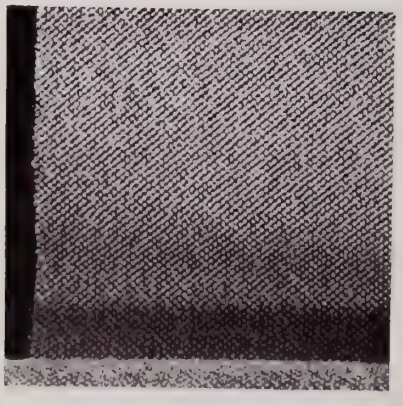
CARPET in the newer patterns for theatres

■ Modern without severity, with ample detail for both decorative interest and flexibility of scale, is this Alexander Smith Velvet in gold, various reds, and black.



■ Elegance for traditional or modern-ornamental interiors in a Bigelow-Sanford Wilton of 18th Century origin. Floral colors on cedar ground.

■ A distinctive modern interpretation of time-honored scroll and leaf motifs in an Alexander Smith Velvet having tans and golds on burgundy.

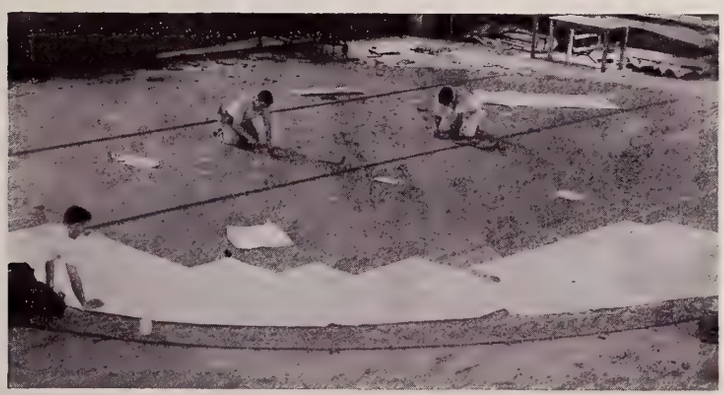


■ Below is an uncut pile fabric submitted by Bigelow-Sanford as a possible selection for theatre interiors suggesting floors in solid colors, in locations of extra hard usage. This is a Lokweave patent-back fabric, woven diagonally to avoid footprints.

■ A delicately modeled modern abstraction of leaf and flower devices by A. & M. Karagheusian, available in a variety of color combinations.

■ The "carved" fabric, with self-patterning effect in solid color, has its place in the theatre, especially where the architecture is "broken up" and walls are highly treated. Above is a new carved carpeting by Bigelow-Sanford, available in many colors, including beige, blue, rose, gray, garnet, pale green, peach, and claret.

■ One of two new floral designs in the Bigelow-Sanford Beauvais line. This has a beige moresque ground.



■ Of less directional effect is the Beauvais above with flower and scroll figures on soft green ground.

■ A bold design arranging leafs and scroll-tied medallions in a block formation in a Wilton by A. M. Karagheusian.

TAILORED DESIGNS FOR THE FLOOR

FOUR

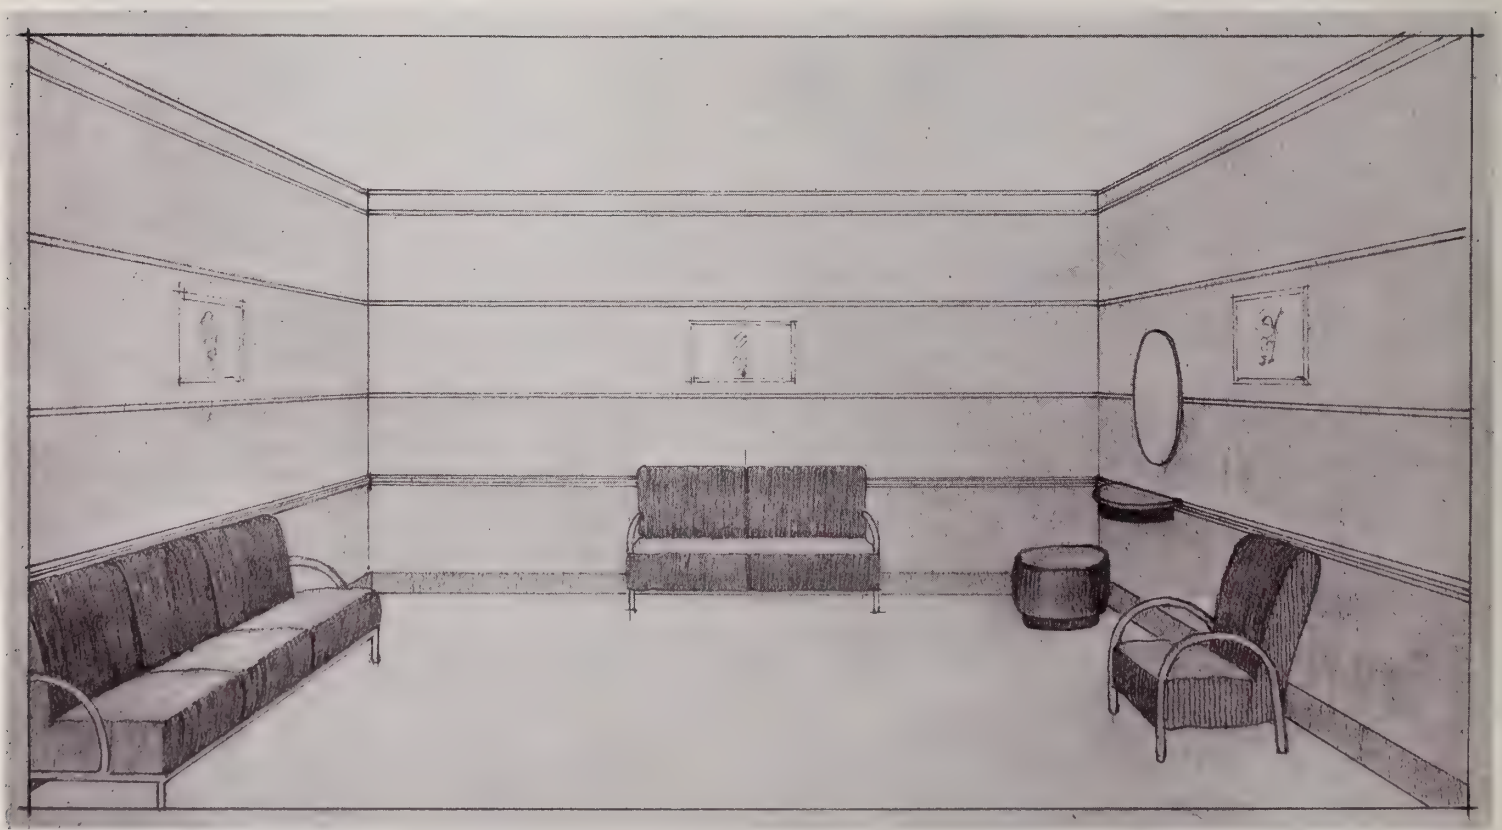
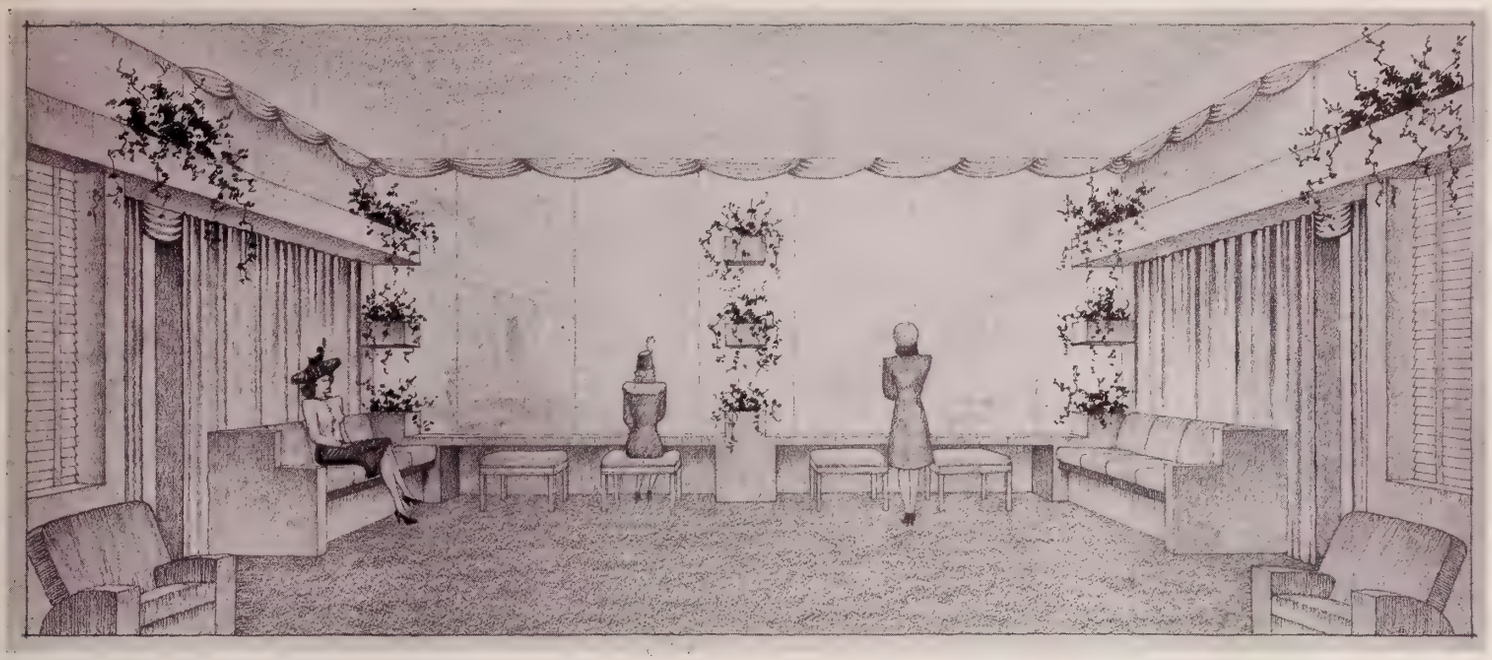
TASTEFUL CARPETING OF THE THEATRE— A DEMONSTRATION



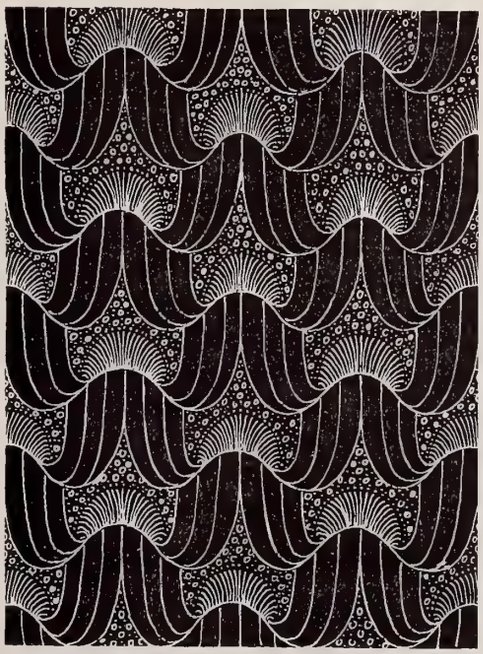
CHARLES C. BURTON
Architect & Engineer, Paramount Theatres Service Corporation

THE part played by the floor in the decorative effect of any room, be it small or large, is a vital one. How the floor is treated can determine, to a degree enjoyed by scarcely any other element, the success or failure of an interior. The factors of selection—color, pattern, scale, etc.—have been dealt with many times and from different angles in the conventional manner; the material on this and the following two pages represents an effort to demonstrate such factors graphically.

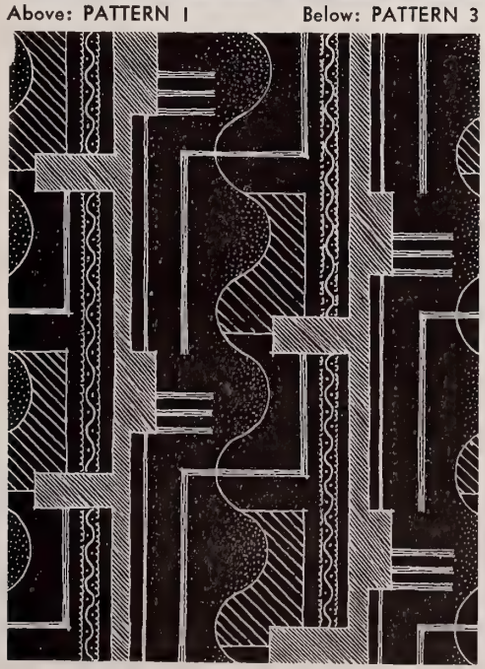


Three interior sketches are presented, and six specially designed carpet patterns which, although in no way copies, have characteristics making them representative of the various styles of designs available from leading carpet manufacturers for the effective carpeting of theatres. Major considerations in the selection of carpeting may be indicated by these questions:

What about the color and design? What color should be used in dark rooms, which in brightly lighted rooms? If you pick a certain color for one room, will another color in an adjoining room go well with it? Will this color or that color go well with this color or the color of walls, draperies and upholstery? Is a large floral design or a small overall pattern the thing for your women's lounge? What type of pattern makes small rooms look larger? What carpet, plain or patterned, should be used with plain walls, and which with figured walls?



The room sketches are made particularly severe, without any indication of carpeting, in order to show the great part that carpet plays in a room.



■ Above is sketched the interior of a small lounge in a typical small theatre, furnished with modern furniture. It is noted that the walls have many lines and are very severe. This room requires a figured carpet on the floor to tone down the severity of the room. It is suggested, in order to make the floor as "playful" as possible, that Pattern 2, which has a modern feeling, and Pattern 1 or 6 will go very nicely in this room.

■ The sketch above indicates a lounge in a typical metropolitan theatre. At one end of the room mirrors extend from the top of the dressing table to the ceiling, and the area comprising the dressing space is softened by a draped fabric at the ceiling. It will be noted that the boxes of synthetic plants, and the hanging drapes, also tend to soften this room—in other words, to make it as feminine as possible. The room would be most effective with Pattern 1 or 4. These patterns were selected rather than one that has dominating "spots". The lines in Pattern 4 would attract attention to the end of the room where the dressing tables are and which under other circumstances might be a bit severe, but which in this particular case is softened by the flower boxes, drapes and treatment at the ceiling.

PATTERN 6

■ Above is a sketch made as a carpet study for an actual theatre. In this case very little money was alloted for decorations and this sketch was made to study the existing architectural embellishments, for which a selection of carpet could be made. It is noted that the feeling of the lobby is classical and quite severe. It is recommended that there should be some softening in the carpet; for that reason Pattern 2 and Pattern 6 might well be selected.

It will be noted that Pattern 6 would be appropriate for most any type of room, providing the colors are correct. Patterns 3 and 5 should be avoided, except for extremely large areas, as the motifs are very large and should never be used in a small room.

Foyer and lounge floors, and stairways, are always conspicuous— keep them well groomed.

Planning the Carpet Layout for Long Wear

IN THE SELECTION and installation of carpeting for the theatre, just as much care must be taken as when purchasing other material and equipment. A good grade of carpet installed in an average sized theatre runs into a considerable amount of money, and if laid carelessly and with no definite plan in mind, it will show wear rapidly in spite of its inherent durability. Where the first signs of wear and tear always show is at the entrance doors, either to the lobby or standee area, especially when there are no saddles or metal nosings on the floor. At these points the most concentrated traffic passes with the patrons half twisting on the ball or heel of the foot as they round the doors. As can be readily seen, a cross-seam sewed between the carpet in the standee and lobby is therefore likely to open up in a relatively short time.

Another practice that is not good is to run the breadths of carpet straight through from the lobby to the standee rail. With this method, when the carpet wears or tears through at the doors, an entire new breadth must be sewn in place, running from the lobby wall to the standee rail. In some cases this breadth of carpet can be very long, hence fairly expensive to install, but to do a good job, under the circumstances, the repair must be made in this way rather than to sew a short piece at the worn spot and have two cross-seams and, as a result, two "headaches" that will re-appear constantly.

The proper thing to do at all entrance doors to the lobby or standee area, is to install good metal saddles with both edges beveled at about a 45° angle, and where the carpet ends at these saddles, to install in addition proper metal carpet nosings, which should be level with the saddles. In this way the edges of the carpet will be completely protected from the sharp tips and heels of the patrons' shoes and also from dirt collection. Moreover, patrons will twist their shoes on the saddles and nosings, instead of on the carpet. It's true saddles and nosings cost a bit of money to install, but not as much as to install from time to time long breadths of carpet.

Another thing to see is that the breadths of carpet and seams run always with the line of most traffic, not across or against this traffic. In some cases the breadths are installed across the line of most traffic in order to save sewing, but this should be always discouraged and avoided. To prove that these two methods of carpet laying have a definite effect on the wearing qualities, one should examine a theatre with "cross-seams," and another theatre with "in-line" seam laying, both installations being three to four years old. In the theatres with the carpet breadths laid against the walking traffic an actual worn path will be seen, with nearly every seam ripped or torn and the "tufts" worn smooth; while in theatres with the breadths and seams in line with the most traffic, only at the seams will the carpet tufts be slightly worn.

AISLE HEADS

Another place where the carpet takes a terrific "beating" is in the aisles of the auditorium. A cross-seam at the head of the aisle should always be avoided—and it can be avoided if the breadths are laid out properly—because the same thing happens here as at the entrance doors: the patrons twist on their feet as they round the rail. Whenever a cross-seam must be installed in the aisle near the standee rail, it should be down about 4 feet in the aisle in order to be away from the critical point. This method should be followed especially where new carpet is installed in the standee area while the old carpet remains in the aisles.

Another good practice to follow when figuring on laying out carpet in the aisles is to allow a little more carpet than is actually required from the standee to the front row of seats. In other words, allow at least from the front row of seats toward the stage apron, the length of the pattern or "match" of the carpet—if an 18 inch repeat or "match," allow 18 inches; if a 24-inch match, 24 inches, and so on. In this way, when the carpet in the aisles needs repairs, the breadths can be shifted and still a perfect match of the design be achieved without the carpet breadth or breadths ending inside the front row of seats.

This method should also be followed whenever possible for carpet installed on stairs.

Another good method to follow to protect the edges of the carpet in the aisles is to install, at both edges, light gauge, slightly beveled nosing the full length of the seating area. This will definitely protect the carpet edges at the points where ingress and egress is made to each run of chairs. As is well known, at these points in the aisles the carpet wears the fastest, and this metal nosing will not only prevent rapid wear, but also keep dirt from being swept under the carpet.

When the aisles are depressed, care should be taken that the carpet is slightly above the level of the finished floor, not below, as tripping might otherwise result at the sharp edges. It must be remembered that the lining under the carpet will settle or "pack" in time, and if no allowance is made for this eventuality, the surface of the carpet will become lower than the finished floor.

When figuring carpet for enclosed areas, such as lobbies, foyers, offices, standees, etc., an allowance of 4 inches should be made, in addition to the actual length or width of the room, on each breadth of carpet, for "turning-under" at the ends. When this allowance is not made the carpet installation men will have to "kick" and stretch each breadth 4 inches in order to have 2 inch "turn-under" at the wall and to avoid rough edges. Such extreme "kicking" and stretching of the carpet will not do it any good, either.

BALCONY AISLES

When installing carpet in the balcony aisles care should be taken that the breadths are installed in a continuous line over the risers and treads the full width of the aisle. In some cases, where the balcony aisles are, for instance, 48 inches wide, 1½ breadths will not cover this width, so two 27 inch breadths will have to be used, and 6 inches of one breadth will have to be wasted the full length of the aisle if the exact width of the aisle only is to be covered. In some cases this 6 inches is not wasted, as the carpet is cut only around the chair standard, then 6 inches of it extends on the tread in front of each chair the full length of the aisle. At first glance, this seems like a saving of carpeting is effected, but what happens is that in a short time these 6 inches of carpet begin to wear faster than the rest of the carpet in the aisle. This is due to a tendency of patrons sitting in these particular chairs, to scrape and dig their shoes into the carpet as they watch the show. The result is that the carpet in the aisle will show hardly any wear for a long period, while the piece under the chair at the edge of the aisle will soon be worn.

In general, an extremely large pattern (large repeat) should be avoided in selecting carpet for a theatre since it tends to waste yardage in "matching (there is also a possibility that the design, in some of the breadths, will not be perfect due to manufacture difficulties and limitations). When the breadths are sewed together the "match" of the design may "run off" anywhere from ¼ inch to 1 inch, and with a large pattern the defect will of course be more noticeable.

CARPETING STAIRS

If "sponge-rubber" lining is to be installed under carpet in balcony aisles and stairs, a good method to follow is first to lay directly over the risers and treads about 32 ounce hair lining, then over this about ½ inch rubber lining, and finally the carpet itself, the hairlining, rubber lining and carpet to be installed the full width and length of the stair or aisle risers and treads, inclusive, and in one continuous strip, if possible. The carpet is fastened in the usual way, by drilling holes or tacking in wood slats at the rear of the tread where it meets the riser. The reason the rubber lining is placed between the hairlining and the carpet is that the rubber will remain constant in its resilience or springiness, and also will return quickly to its original length, width and thickness after being pressed down by traffic, whereas the hairlining will tend in time (how much depends on the quality of the lining) to "pack" and settle. With this arrangement, a constant soft cushion is provided which will easily absorb all the hard blows given in the stair traffic adding to the life of the carpet.

Another type of installation is to cement strips of the rubber to the steps with rubber cement. The rubber is about ½ inch thick, and the width of the strip is such that it overhangs and covers the nosing, with the carpet laid over and fastened to the stairs with screws and washers instead of carpet tacks. These screws and washers are especially made to give a clean-cut appearance to the stair. However, in this installation an oak slat is fastened to the riser, instead of at the intersection of tread and riser as is done in the usual stair carpet installation.

In all cases where the theatre owner contemplates the purchase and installation of carpet, he should demand a blue-printed layout drawn to scale showing the exact areas to be covered and in what manner.

Rubber Mat Efficiency

THE INSTALLATION of rubber mats in vestibules and lobbies means, primarily, that precautions are being taken against slipping and soiling of carpeting. Thousands of wet and grit-covered feet trample over these mats and they must be just right, otherwise the money spent will be to no avail. And these mats must stand up under the punishment they take, day in and day out.

The perforated and corrugated mats come in three standard thicknesses: ¼-,

3/8-, and 1/2-inch. The stock sizes are 18 x 30 inches, 24 x 36 inches, 24 x 48 inches, and 36 x 48 inches. Of course, they can be made to order for any shape or size of area. The 3/8 inch thick mats are generally used in theatre lobbies and their useful life seems to be almost unlimited under ordinary traffic; however, they must be recessed properly, and for a 3/8-inch thick mat the depression in the floor should be exactly and uniformly 3/8-inch. If the edges of the mats or the floor extend only slightly beyond the walking level, tripping will surely result as patrons shuffle and scrape their feet on entering or leaving the theatre. It is surprising how many times incompetent workmen will overlook that fact, thinking that the finish does not have to be so exact.

Lobby mat layout not recommended.

Lobby mat plan recommended as ideal.

UNCOVERED SURFACES

Another very bad method of installing rubber mats is to leave a border of concrete or terrazzo from 6 to 12 inches all around the section of depressed matting. This might save a little rubber and add to the appearance of the floor, but the possibility of slipping is greatly increased. As a patron enters or leaves the theatre, one foot may be on the rubber, the other may come down on the glass-smooth surface of the terrazzo, and if the surface is wet or there is an incline, a slip or fall is likely to result. However, sometimes the doors have Rixon hinges, which are buried in the floor, leaving an area of about 8 inches deep by 12 inches wide that cannot be covered with concrete or rubber. In this case the depression should me made around the hinge box, and end right at the door saddle instead of continuing a border across the width of the doors 8 inches deep. Then the rubber mat should be cut to fit this offset to the door saddle, thus eliminating a smooth surface of concrete or terrazzo 8 inches deep by about 60 inches wide at each door.

The proper method of installing rubber mats is to cover the entire area of the lobby with rubber, wall to wall, and door saddle to door saddle, as closely as the physical dimensions will allow, with only thin dividing strips for the various mat sections. The main reason that the mats should be made in several sections is to make it easier for the porters to remove and clean. To have the rubber matting in one large section would make a better job, but it would be very difficult for the porter to handle it in cleaning, and in some instances would discourage cleaning; also, constant rough handling and rolling of a large section of mat would tend to shorten its useful life.

DIVIDING STRIPS

The dividing strips should be of durable metal 1/4-inch wide and extend above the depressed floor 11/32 of an inch for a 3/8-inch thick mat. The reason this metal strip should be slightly below the top surface of the rubber mat is to prevent the sole of the shoe, and especially the small heel of a woman's shoe, from coming in contact with the smooth surface of the metal, causing a possible slip or a sudden jar of the foot. This difference between the top surface of the rubber mat and the metal dividing strip will also compensate for any wear that might occur after the mat is in use over a period of years.

NON-RECESSED INSTALLATION

When rubber mats must be installed in lobbies or entrance vestibules without depressions, the edge should be properly beveled where they are exposed to the line of walking traffic—or better still, beveled metal nosings should be installed. These beveled metal nosings will not only help prevent tripping, but also keep the mats from shifting due to the strain of scraping feet, especially if the floor has a steep incline.

The question will arise: What type of rubber mats are best suited to theatres? The perforatd and corrugated mats have their advantages and disadvantages. The corrugated mat is easier to keep clean than the perforated type, but it does not offer as much friction as the latter. They both can do their jobs well if of good quality and properly laid, and if replaced when worn. There is another type of rubber mat on the market that is a combination of the perforated and corrugated mats. It has small rubber mounds shaped as miniature pyramids on a solid rubber base. This rubber finish offers good non-skid and wearing qualities, is easy to keep clean due to its clean-cut grooves around the mounds, and also has just enough holes in the base to help dissipate moisture accumulation underneath. Also on the market is a new inlaid rubber mat than can be made to match a carpet pattern.

¶ Floors Under Seating

THE EXPOSED concrete floor in the seating area of the theatre is a problem to keep clean and sanitary, especially if neglected for any length of time. It is surprising how quickly dirt, grit and gum will stick to the floor, even if it is looked after constantly. Where this problem arises, the entire floor area should be washed down at least twice a year with benzene, and all gum and grit scraped off clearly where it accumulates.

After this is done, the floor should have a prime-coat of a good grade of "porch and deck" paint, then another coat of the same paint to give a hard smooth surface to the floor. In this way the gum, grit or dirt will have less tendency to stick, and if some does adhere to the floor after it is properly painted, it can be scraped off easily.

MIXING PAINT

A popular color for the floor under the seating is dull red. This can be readily mixed on the site by using white lead, venetian red and lamp black, the mixing to be done in proper proportions to get the desired color and consistency. Linseed oil or substitute turpentine can be used for thinning. However, plain "lead and oil" painting of the concrete floor is about the best finish that can be had, although the ready-mixed "porch and deck" paint will do a good job if applied properly in at least two coats.

Extreme care should be taken that strong acids are not used in washing down the floor as there is always a possibility that the concrete might be weakened, especially in auditoriums where the finished floor is not so strong.

PATTERN PAINTING

There is on the market a special paint that will penetrate concrete floors to a depth of about 1½ inches after a special liquid is applied. This paint comes in several different colors "ready-mixed" and different patterns can be had on the floor after the designs are cut with a "cold-chisel" in the concrete. After the paint drys, a special wax can be applied over the floor, and when this is slightly buffed, it will resemble print linoleum. The use of this paint is best suited for small rooms.

Potwin on Sound Control

C. C. POTWIN, Consultant in Acoustics
Fellow, Acoustical Society of America

SHAPING FRONT WALL

HOW CAN the front wall surfaces of the motion picture theatre be designed for maximum acoustical effect? This is a question frequently asked by exhibitors and architects.

The acoustical requirements for shaping the front walls in the motion picture theatre differ from those in the theatre used mainly for stage presentations. For the latter type, it is advantageous to arrange the surfaces close to the stage in such a way that they reinforce, or strengthen, the sound originating on the stage. Quite the reverse effect is desired for the motion picture theatre. Here the volume of sound generated by the reproducing system is usually more than adequate to fill the theatre and, for this reason, the surfaces at the sides of the screen should be designed to disperse—spread out—rather than to reinforce the sound.

PROVIDING DISPERSION

There are a number of basic forms which can be used in the design of the front wall surfaces to accomplish this dispersion. For instance, a series of convexly curved or angular forms running vertically may be provided, or a series of back tilts running horizontally may be used.

In designing convex curves or angles, the points of maximum projection should not be too great; otherwise resonant cavities may be formed between them. Depending upon the width and depth of these cavities, they may respond to certain frequencies in the voice or musical range and thus produce distortion by seemingly reinforcing the sound at these frequencies.

FORMING ANGULAR SURFACE

The degree of projection of the convex or angular surfaces usually should be not more than 1½ inches, nor less than ¾-inch in one foot. If, for example, an angular form is 6 feet in width (3 feet on each side of the apex), it should have a dimension of projection, on this basis, of not more than 4½ inches, nor less than 2¼ inches.

From both the acoustical and architectural viewpoints, it is desirable to vary the size and spacing of the convexly curved or angular surfaces. A proportion of 3-5-7, or 5-7-9, usually works out very well in the design of the front wall surfaces. In many cases smaller irregularities, in the form of convex curves or angles designed within and as a part of the major form, are also helpful for dispersing the very high frequencies.

SEATING PLAN SHAPE

THE BASIC SHAPE of the seating plan of the motion picture theatre auditorium must have proper proportions if efficient use of the floor area is to be expected. This basic shape is outlined by the motion picture screen at one end, and the row of chairs farthest from the screen at the other end. On either side this shape is outlined by the extreme side of the chairs nearest the side wall.

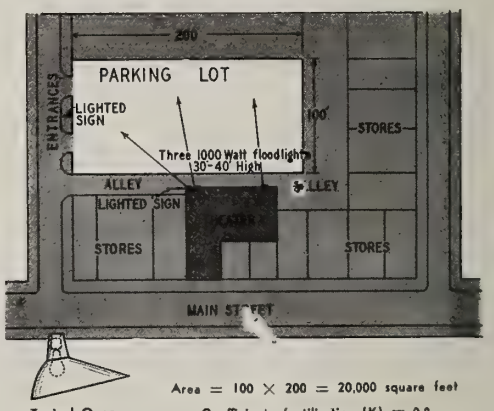
If the auditorium is to have aisles against the side walls, the aisle space is not considered as part of the basic shape. This is because it is the seating pattern only which is being considered. The percentage of seating positions from which the view of the picture is satisfactory is very high when the basic shape is correct.

SHAPE AND CAPACITY

The use of an undesirable basic shape can result in a large proportion of undesirable viewing positions. For example, if a square shape were to be used, as much as approximately 40% of the viewing positions placed thereon would become undesirable because that many of the viewing positions would be found too far to one side of the picture. If an extreme rectangular shape were to be used, there would also be a great number of undesirable viewing positions, because great seating depth forces the use of a larger picture, thereby rendering the viewing positions nearest the picture undesirable.

The most efficient shape is obtained by using a rectangle of proportions of 1.85 to 1. A simple rectangle becomes the desirable basic shape because of the practical value of such a shape from the standpoint of simplicity in construction work. However, the theoretical ideal shape would have a flare to it on the sides to increase the amount of seating positions in the width at distances from the picture most desirable for viewing. It is worthwhile, therefore, where highest quality of viewing conditions is desired, to come as close to the theoretically desired shape as possible.

RANGE OF PROPORTIONS



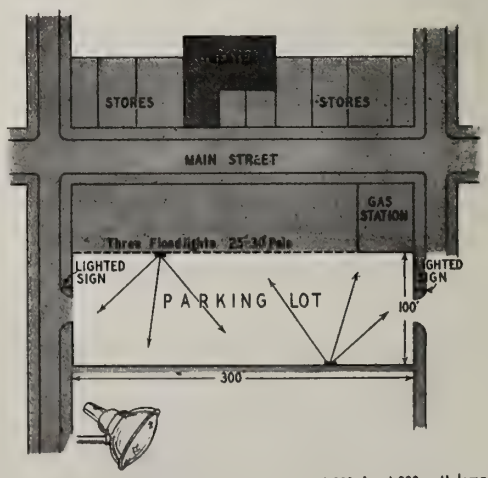
In any case, shapes should be avoided which have a depth of more than 2.3 times the width, or a depth less than 1.6 times the width. If the basic shape is kept within the ranges of these proportions, the percentage of undesirable viewing conditions can be held down to an amount which is not to be regarded as serious.

To avoid extremely long shapes, it is always possible to introduce an upper level of seating to keep all of the seats within a proper basic shape. Whenever possible, the square, or nearly square, shape should be avoided completely and in these instances an upper level of seating is also desirable. Keep the upper level of seating as far from the picture as possible and erect a basic structure which narrows down considerably towards the picture to avoid poor extreme side viewing positions.

Always to a substantial degree, and sometimes, with certain plots of ground, to a critical degree, the efficiency of the form of the seating plan is affected by the plan of the entire building. Therefore, the planning of a theatre properly begins with determination of all seating factors.

METHODS OF FIGURING PARKING LOT LIGHTING

It has been found that there were certain minor omissions, and an important transposition of formula matter in Figures 1 and 2 of the article on parking lot lighting in the July issue. To make the corrections perfectly clear, the figures are reproduced with captions corrected:



Area = 100 × 200 = 20,000 square feet

Coefficient of utilization (K) = 0.8

Light output of one 1,000-watt lamp = 21,000 lumens

$$\text{No. 1,000-watt units required} = \frac{20{,}000 \times 1}{0.7 \times 0.7 \times 0.8 \times 21{,}000} = 3 \text{ units}$$

FIGURE 1.—Where the parking lot adjoins the theatre, the building itself often offers suitable locations for the floodlighting equipment.

Beam lumens = 8,000 for 1,000-watt lamp

$$\text{No. units} = \frac{300 \times 100 \times 1}{0.7 \times 8{,}000} = 6 \text{ units}$$

Coming Attraction Promotion At the Refreshment Stations

• A consideration of the new means for advertising future performances afforded by the prominence now given confectionery

Candy counter and Manley popcorn machine in a typical confectionery station arrangement, with poster at rear, as in the Majestic in La Salle, Ill.

NEVER REALLY alien to the business of the theatre, the selling of candy and other refreshments nevertheless remained until relatively recently an "outsider" to motion picture exhibition. Up until a few years ago, candy vending, largely by means of automatic machines, was kept so much in the background that, no matter how helpful toward paying the rent the receipts might be, the exhibitor usually appeared to begrudge the space it took and the "cleaning up" it caused.

Ultimately winning hearty acceptance, refreshment services have by now reached a level of importance in motion picture theatre operation meriting physical prominence. The automatic machines have been increasingly augmented by candy counters; the candy counter has been expanded into a refreshment booth, into which the popcorn machine has been moved from the vestibule, now one of the family instead of a poor relation. No longer an afterthought or a casual makeshift, these facilities are being planned as integral parts of the architectural scheme of the interior, and complete soda fountain service is being added. Witness the conspicuous, elaborate Milk Bar of the new Norshor theatre in Duluth, reported in the August issue of BETTER THEATRES (also described elsewhere in this issue). It is more than likely that the continued success of the Norshor Milk Bar will bring others like it.

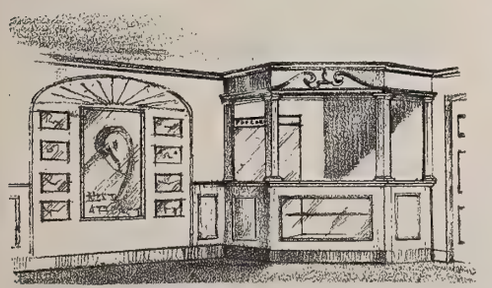

Figure 1: A decorative poster and still display associated conspicuously with refreshment booth —a scheme by F & Y Building Service, Columbus.

Achievement of a place of prominence in the theatre by refreshment facilities provides the best location for coming attraction advertising that has yet appeared. How to make coming attraction advertising really efficient has always been more or less of a problem. How to be sure that it is read, even noticed with any degree of consciousness of what the posters are all about? Displays along the side walls of lobbies are hit or miss, at best. Foyer-standee areas are dimly lighted; advertising of anything but a very modest character in lounges and other decorative parts of the theatre are intrusive, detrimental to the environmental effect usually desired.

The utility of the refreshment booth or counter as an aid to the promotion of business on coming attractions has been recognized, of course; it is common enough practice now to place posters behind the counter where they are "in full focus" while a patron is approaching the counter, being served, unwrapping the package, etc. This role of the refreshment counter merits fuller development.

The simplest means of utilizing the focus of attention provided by the refreshment booth is to arrange poster or still displays, or both, immediately adjacent to the counter, with the candy case or booth counter, and the display so related to each other physically as to make seeing the display during the transaction well night inevitable (see Figure 1). If the display is attractive and clearly lighted effective note is likely to be taken of it, and even those patrons who may not give it their full attention for a moment are pretty sure to absorb some of the "message" subconsciously.

One of the accompanying sketches (Figure 2) carries promotional efforts at the refreshment booth perhaps to an extreme; however, the scheme is presented primarily to illustrate some of the possibilities. At the right of the counter is a display of stills with suitable cards naming the pictures and dates. Indicated for location on the counter, off to one side so as not to hamper selection and service, is a rotating display of the kind commonly seen in stores and adapted to self-supporting slotted frames with four or more sides, alternating star photos, stills and copy.

A novel, and for some theatres a device worth considering, is suggested in the same sketch, to the left of the counter. Continuous advertising projectors, with their own miniature screen, have been used by a number of theatres for the display of trailers in the lobby or vestibule. The arrangement in Figure 2, contemplates concealment of the projector behind the side paneling of the booth, with an opening in the paneling the exact size of the screen.

The desirability of keeping decorative foyer or lounge area free of blatant advertising matter has been pointed out. Star pictures are not ordinarily objectionable, however, while small posters, neatly framed in picture style, may be similarly appropriate. A suggestion for a lounge corner in a foyer, associating both candy machines and coming attraction advertising, is sketched in Figure 3.

Checking Your Heating Plant May Show Ways to Save You Money

• We're nearing the cold months—but don't wait for a cold day to begin inspection of your heating system. It may need repairs and replacements that take time

By CARL F. BOESTER

WARM WEATHER may still be with us when these lines get into print; nevertheless, it is time to begin thinking about putting the theatre heating plant in first class shape for fall and winter operation.

Whether or not the nation is at war is a matter of political debate, but very definitely, because of the emergency, the country now finds itself faced with war on waste—in particular—war on the waste of national resources, such as oil, gas and coal. Every pound or ton of coal that is wasted means that more of this fuel must be hauled, tying up transportation equipment that could be used to haul fuel to defense industry plants.

It is rather needless, however, to get patriotic about a war on waste when in reality such a war is of tremendous personal interest to everyone, since it means dollars saved—if you don't burn as much coal, you certainly will not spend as much money, etc. So let's see what we can do towards increasing the efficiency of our heating plants and thereby cut down on fuel requirements and save real money for ourselves. At the same time we will be contributing something to national economy.

MAYBE THE PLANT IS AGED!

It is hard indeed to say what is the best thing to do in order to step up efficiency, or which is the most important of a group of things to do. But one of the first things to do is to give serious consideration to the age of your heating plant. Is it up-to-date? Is your's a horse-and-buggy plant when a 1941 model can give you more satisfactory comfort conditions at a tremendously reduced operating cost? Call in your local heating and piping contractor or the specialist in your community who sells and services the type of heating equipment that you have, and ask him to go over the plant very thoroughly and submit to you information as to why you might need a new heating plant if he so recommends, and an estimate of what such improvement might save.

CARL F. BOESTER

On the other hand, if you have a fairly recent heating plant, have it checked over by a local air-conditioning engineer or heating contractor to see whether or not the plant has the latest, therefore the best, controls. See whether the piping is adequate in size and capacity in the light of recent engineering experience and developments. Make sure that it has been piped up. If the system is sluggish, or the operating costs for the past year or two seem rather high, ask him to point out how economies can be effected.

HOW ABOUT THE FLUES?

Maybe all your heating plant needs is just a darn good cleaning. One of the greatest enemies of efficiency and low operating costs is soot and dirt. Are the flues of your heating equipment so choked up with soot that you can't get an efficient heat exchange? A half inch of soot can cause you to use as much as 25% or 30% more fuel, so be sure that the flues are thoroughly brushed and scraped down. This is true of any type of heating plant, whether hot water, steam boiler, or a hot air furnace.

Have the draft on your furnace checked, because if it is inadequate you get improper combustion and more soot is thereby formed, immediately beginning to cut down on your plant efficiency. All heating contractors now have draft gauges. On the other hand, if you have too strong a draft as a result of too large a chimney or some other condition, much of the heat that is generated in the fire-box of the heating plant is sucked right up the flue and wasted into the air. A simple draft damper in the flue pipe, properly sized and applied, will correct this difficulty.

Your heating man is equipped with a device for determining the CO_2 content of your flue gas. By testing the CO_2 content he is able to determine whether or not you have efficient combustion and are getting the most out of your fuel.

Investigate the conditions of your chimney and flue piping. Be sure that they are tight and in sound condition. Sulphur is present in most fuels used, in varying quantities. Part of this sulphur gets into the flues, and since water is also one of the products of combustion, the two combine to form sulphuric acid which in some cases causes improper operation of your heating plant. A large amount of sulphuric acid thus formed may eat part of your flue pipe and chimney away. Also make sure that your flue and chimney are free of excess soot and otherwise quite safe from the viewpoint of fire hazard.

If you have a boiler, particularly a steam plant, check to see that the size of the steam mains are adequate; also find out whether or not the return lines, if a two-pipe job, are drained properly; if a one-pipe job see that they are sloping correctly.

Be sure that the steam mains are adequate. I recently checked a theatre that had a plant in it big enough to heat two or three theatres, yet the manager couldn't keep the place warm even on just slightly chilly days, in spite of every effort to fire his boiler properly with the right kind and grade of fuel. To begin with, the steam header was not properly put on the boiler, while it was much too small in size; and the length of steam pipe running to the various radiators and unit heaters was far to small for satisfactory performance, to say nothing of the fact that the length of the pipe run was rather excessive. If you have to pipe your steam a long way, it is certainly prudent to use the next larger size of pipe in order not to have too much of a pressure drop.

Naturally, if your pipe sizes are larger, then your pipe heat losses become much greater, which brings up the point of pipe insulation. The covering of pipe with a good grade of insulation is always a sound investment if the lengths of pipe go through any unheated areas, or the pipe runs are so long that the heat losses from such pipes cause the steam to condense, reducing the pressure and not giving an adequate quantity of steam to the radiators located in the far end of your building.

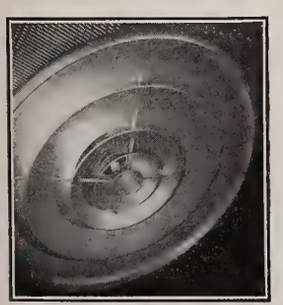
Have your steam valves taken apart and be sure that they are free and work properly; particularly if it is a job that has steam traps on it, they ought to be taken apart at least once a year and thoroughly cleaned of dirt, scale and corrosion. Controls such as steam traps are put on to save you money. If they don't work, you are paying out money in the waste of fuel that would amount to many, many times the cost of cleaning the traps.

Your steam boiler should be drained at least two times a year. At least once a year it should be thoroughly cleaned, for generally enough sludge and dirt accumulate in one season to impair the plant's efficiency. For instance, an oily scumlike dirt collects on top of the water in your steam boiler and seriously hampers the generation of steam—in other words, enough heat has to be applied to your boiler, creating enough steam pressure so that the steam generated can push through this scum that floats on top of the water. So by having your boiler cleaned by an expert, with modern cleaning compounds, you can save quite a bit here.

If your steam boiler lacks capacity and you can't afford a new one, a good cleaning all around will do the job. If it is still short on capacity, maybe the fire-box is improperly built. Most boilers in use today were designed for hand-firing with coal, and the use of automatic equipment sometimes causes inefficiency if certain things aren't carefully looked after. The design of the combusition chamber, if you are using oil or gas, or the way the fire-box is lined with fire brick if using a stoker, may make you short on capacity.

Boilers can have their capacity tremendously increased, if used for generating steam, by the simple expedient of having a circulating pump applied to circulate the water within the boiler at a very high velocity, so that the fast moving water washes free the steam bubbles that collect on the rough boiler surfaces and thereby tend to insulate one side of the heating surface. The fast moving water through the boiler frees these bubbles and by so doing increases the amount of steam generated.

FUEL FACTORS



If you are using gas or oil, or are firing coal with a stoker, it is certainly very wise at this time to buy a furnace or a boiler specifically designed to utilize fuel under this condition. A boiler designed to use hand-fired coal certainly is far from efficient if converted to the burning of oil or of gas. The higher priced your fuel is, the more expensive the practice of using conversion equipment becomes.

If, by chance, you are buying new boilers or furnaces this year, don't under any circumstances buy one that is not specifically engineered and designed to use the type of fuel that you plan to use. To do so is sheer folly. While fuels, particularly in the Eastern part of the country, are going to be relatively restricted, we doubt very seriously if there will be any restrictions on the use of fuels by theatres, inasmuch as they constitute one of the principal means of maintaining public morale, so that if there are any priorities on fuels, the theatre business is unlikely to suffer much. Nevertheless, it is still one's duty to both one's self and the country, to use fuel efficiently.

If you have an old oil burner, you certainly should have it replaced, with special attention to replacement and repair on motors, pumps, valves, nozzles, regulators and controls. The combustion chamber should preferably be rebuilt to proper size and shape as to the firing rate for the quantity of fuel required to do the job. You should have your firing rate checked so that you do not overfire and thereby waste fuel. This is in particular reference to the utilization of oil.

Sometimes by baffling you can step up the efficiency of your boiler or furnace and reduce stack temperatures and increase heat recovery. Have an expert on controls thoroughly check to see that all of your controls, regardless of the type of fuel you are using, are in order. If your controls are old and out-of-date, replace them with new controls, particularly the thermostat with a new type of heat anticipating device in it, which absolutely prevents over-shooting of temperatures and thereby a waste in fuel.

The type of fuel you use has a definite bearing on your annual fuel bill. It makes no difference whether it is coal or oil, it is always best to buy the very best grades because they can be more efficiently burned and thereby reflect greater savings. If you are burning coal, store it in a dry place and never, under any condition, let it get wet, because every pound of water that is on your coal has to be evaporated, and the heat to evaporate such water comes from no place except the energy that is in your coal. So do not let your coal get wet.

If you are hand-firing coal, make sure that the man in charge understands the very latest practices in hand-firing. If he doesn't, ask your heating man to come over and give your janitor lessons in the latest practice in this regard.

Make note now to be sure this fall and winter to keep your boiler or furnace as free of ashes and clinkers as possible, so that the coal may burn more readily. A moderate amount of ash on the grate is desirable so that your grates do not burn out; too much ash chokes off the air admitted to and through the fuel, and thereby prevents proper combustion. If your furnace smokes excessively, it is a sure indication that something is wrong somewhere, because smoke is nothing more than unburned carbon, which is rich in heat units that should be converted into heating your building instead of being wasted up the flue.

OUTSIDE AIR INFILTRATION

Check to make sure that your exit doors are in good shape and are properly weatherstripped. If you have any windows see that they fit good and tight so that you do not have excessive infiltration of cold outside air, which imposes abnormal loads on your heating requirements.

If you can afford it, investment in insulation is certainly worthwhile at this time, because you can cut way down on the amount of fuel required by doing a good job of insulating. Incidentally, the use of insulation will reduce the amount of refrigeration consumed by a summer cooling system, hence insulation pays double dividends.

If you have questions about your heating plant, we shall be glad to answer them for you; or if you haven't had what you think is sound advice concerning what to do, we will try to give you the benefit of our experience on the problem. [All questions should be addressed to Mr. Boester in care of the Service Department of BETTER THEATRES; they will be answered by mail. —THE EDITOR.]

DEVELOPMENTS IN EQUIPMENT

Descriptive reports of air-conditioning, ventilating and heating products and comment on their application

CLEANABLE FILTERS

THERE HAS recently been developed improved types of cleanable filters, and it might mean economy if you would replace your present filters with these new cleanable type.

One of those commercially available is the Air Maze filter made by the Air Maze Company of Cleveland. These filters consist of several layers of various sizes of screen wire properly designed for the purpose. The dirt impinges on the various size layers of the screen as the air passes through it. It is a simple matter to wash such filters in a bath of light oil or naphtha. Don't wash them indoors, as the hazard of using such cleaning fluids is quite great. As a matter of fact, probably a good bath in soap and water would do the trick.

If you are experiencing difficulties and the service man or contractor cannot agree with the engineer, you can tell us and we shall be glad to advise you.

LINE INSULATION

By the way, if you happened to buy a refrigeration system and the contractor, because of price, did not insulate the suction and liquid lines, you probably can afford to spend a little this winter to insulate them. Along uninsulated suction lines, the refrigerant gas is superheated, and this extra heat load has to be removed from the refrigerant gas when it is condensed. There is no use overloading your system unnecessarily in this manner, for to do so costs money in increased power of the motor of your compressor. Likewise your liquid refrigerant line, if it has a very long run, will pick up no small amount of heat, and it should also be protected with insulation, for the liquid refrigerant is cooled down to the temperature of the cooling coil by the evaporation of regrigerant at the time the pressure drop occurs across the expansion valve.—*C. Accurate Calculation of Screen Size and Lighting Needs

[In the August issue a general method, essentially a rule-of-thumb, was presented for determining picture size and screen light requirements. In this article are given a set of equations for determining these needs matehmatically, prepared by the director of the consulting laboratory of Heyer-Shultz, Inc., Montclair, N. J., manufacturers of metal reflector are mirrors. Last month's general method answers most practical purposes; some projectionists and theatre executives may find occasion, however, for more accurate measurements.—Editor.]

By CHARLES E. SHULTZ

FOR MANY YEARS following the advent of sound and the use of increased screen areas, confusion concerning the correct procedure for limiting screen size has been prevalent.

It is, of course, necessary to consider the screen size in direct proportion to the power available from arc sources selected to illuminate any given screen. In addition to these mechanical considerations, the visual comfort of the observer is affected by the size and brightness of the image projected.

Recent steps toward standardization of screen areas and intensities have been brought about which individually adjust screen brightness to a recommended standard, and screen width to a proportionate relationship to maximum viewing distances. The purpose of this article is to reduce to simplified mathematical expressions the various other common requirements which are interrelated to these individual standards.

By the use of the equations presented, it is possible for the projectionist or theatre manager to determine approximate screen size and light source requirements to meet specific conditions. It is of course necessary to have the following data, which is directly related to screen size and power of light sources:

Distance in feet from the screen to the last row of seats. This will be expressed as D in the following equations and, of course, may be measured directly.

Recommended factor for the width of the motion picture screen in relationship to the distance in feet from the screen to the last row of seats. This will be expressed as f in the following equations. The recommended numerical value for f is 5.2. This means that the distance from the last row of seats to the screen should be equal, at a minimum to 5.2 times the width of the screen in feet.

Relationship between the height of the screen and its width. This is expressed as h in the following equations. The width of the screen in feet multiplied by the value of h will result in the height in feet. The numerical value of h for a standard 35 mm. picture is .729 (which may be simplified to .73), when the projection angle is perpendicular to the screen.

Average foot lamberts reflected from the screen. This will be expressed as F in the following equations. Methods of obtaining numerical equivalents will be given.

Efficiency of the screen. This will be expressed as e in the following equations. Methods of obtaining numerical equivalents, expressed as a decimal, will be given.

Number of arc lumens produced by the arc source used. Table One gives these approximate values, and an equation will be given for determining this requirement. Arc lumens will be expressed as L in the following equations.

Efficiency of the projector shutter. This efficiency will be expressed as s in the following equations. The numerical values are not the same for all types of projectors and shutters. An equation will be given expressing this efficiency as a decimal part of the total light in arc lumens.

Number of foot candles incident upon the screen. This value may be measured directly by the use of a photometer. This will be expressed as C in the equations. An equation will be given for determining the numerical value of C.

Area of the screen in square feet. This is the product of the width of the screen in feet times the height in feet. The area in square feet of the screen will be expressed as A in the following equations.

Having established the nine proceeding necessary subjects, we may find the numerical value for any one of them. Factors f and h must be considered constant.

The following table results from screen measurements in lumens from various arc sources made through an optical system of f:2.5 speed without the projector shutter running. These figures are representative of an optical system in which the reflecting mirror or condensers are of average efficiency, and the f:2.5 projection lens possesses average transmission characteristics for a lens of this speed.

The resulting measurements are designated as approximate values to be known as arc lumens in the equations. These values are:

Type Arc	Size Carbon	Arc Amps.	Arc Lumens
Low Intensity	12mm SRA Pos.	32	2400
One Kilowatt	7mm Suprex Pos.	40	4200
A.C. or D.C. Suprex	8mm. Suprex Pos.	65	7300
High Intensity	13.6mm H.I. Pos.	125	7500
High Intensity	13.6mm Super H.I. Pos.	180	8000

The recommended standard of screen brightness, measured at the center of the screen, is from 10 to 14 foot-lamberts when the projector shutter is running (9 foot-lamberts is absolute minimum and is definitely too low when the rapid rate of screen deterioration occurring in most situations is considered).

The examples given following the various equations have taken these standards into consideration by the selection of 10:14 foot lamberts as an arbitrary basis. The numerical value for foot-lamberts and foot-candles derived are to be considered average for the entire screen surface, rather than for any individual point on the screen surface.

It is assumed that h represents a constant numerical value for the relationship between picture width and height. It is evident that a variation from this constant relationship will occur with a departure from a projection angle perpendicular to

TO DETERMINE AVERAGE FOOT-LAMBERTS REFLECTED FROM SCREEN

D = Distance in feet from screen to last row of seats.
f = 5.2, recommended factor for screen width in feet in relationship to distance in feet from screen to last row of seats.
h = .73, factor for relative height in feet of standard 35 m.m. picture in relation to its width in feet.
F = Average foot-lamberts reflected from screen.
e = Efficiency of screen expressed as a decimal.
L = Arc lumens.
s = Efficiency of shutter expressed as a decimal.

METHOD 1: $e\left(\frac{L \times s}{\frac{D}{f}\left(\frac{D}{f} \times h\right)}\right) = F$

Substituting the proper known figures for the letters, we are of course really using simple arithmetic to find the answer sought. In parentheses below the long line we have D divided by f; the answer to this is then multiplied by h; then the answer to this is multiplied by the answer to D divided by f as given preceding the parenthesis. We now have our figure for the factors below the line. For the above-the-line factor, L is multiplied by s; then the answer to this is divided by the below-the-line figure previously found. The answer to this final division is then multiplied by the figure for e, which gives us F, or the number of foot-lamberts. For example:

$$.75\left(\frac{3650}{19.23 \times 14.037}\right) = F$$

TO DETERMINE AVERAGE FOOT-CANDLES INCIDENT UPON SCREEN

D = Distance in feet from screen to last row of seats.
f = 5.2, recommended factor for screen width in feet in relationship to distance in feet from last row of seats to screen.
h = .73, factor for relative height in feet of a standard 35 mm picture in relationship to its width in feet.
C = Average foot candles incident upon the screen.
L = Arc lumens.
s = Efficiency of shutter expressed as a decimal.

METHOD 2:

For example, if $D = 100$; $f = 5.2$; $h = .73$; C = average foot-candles; L = 7300; $s = .5$—

$$\frac{7300 \times .5}{\frac{100}{5.2}\left(\frac{100}{5.2} \times .73\right)} = C \qquad \frac{3650}{19.23\ (19.23 \times .73)} = C$$

$$\frac{3650}{19.23 \times 14.037} = C \qquad \frac{3650}{269.93} = \text{C, or 13.52 foot-candles}$$

TO DETERMINE SCREEN SIZE IN SQUARE FEET

D = Distance in feet from screen to last row of seats.
f = 5.2, recommended factor for screen width in feet in relationship to distance in feet from last row of seats to screen.
h = .73, factor for relative height in feet of a standard 35 mm picture in relation to its width in feet.
A = Screen size in square feet.

METHOD 3:
$$\frac{D}{f}\left(\frac{D}{f} \times h\right) = A$$

For example, if $D = 100$; $f = 5.2$; $h = .73$; A = screen size in square feet —

$$\frac{100}{5.2}\left(\frac{100}{5.2} \times .73\right) = A; \quad 19.23\ (19.23 \times .73) = A$$

$$19.23 \times 14.037 = A \qquad A = 269.93 \text{ square feet}$$

TO DETERMINE ARC LUMENS—

A = Screen size in square feet.
F = Average foot-lamberts reflected from screen.
e = Efficiency of screen expressed as a decimal.
s = Efficiency of shutter expressed as a decimal.
L = Arc lumens.

METHOD 4:

For example, if $A = 269.93$; $F = 10.14$; $e = .75$; $s = .5$; L = arc lumens—

$$\frac{269.93\left(\frac{10.14}{.75}\right)}{5} = L \qquad \frac{269.93 \times 13.52}{.5} = L$$

ARC LUMENS: Method 5

With the use of Method 4 it was necessary to know the efficiency of the screen. The following equation indicates the number of arc lumens required when the average number of foot-candles upon the screen is known.

A = Screen size in square feet.
C = Average foot-candles incident upon the screen.
s = Efficiency of shutter expressed as a decimal.
L = Arc lumens.

METHOD 5:
$$\frac{A \times C}{s} = L$$

For example, if $A = 269.93$; $C = 13.52$; $s = .5$; L = arc lumens—

$$\frac{269.93 \times 13.52}{.5} = L \qquad \frac{3650}{.5} = \text{L, or 7300 arc lumens.}$$

TO DETERMINE SCREEN EFFICIENCY

C = Average foot-candles incident upon the screen.
F = Average foot-lamberts reflected from screen.
e = Efficiency of screen expressed as a decimal.

METHOD 6:
$$\frac{F}{C} = e$$

For example, if $C = 13.52$; $F = 10.14$; e = efficiency of screen expressed as a decimal—

$$\frac{10.14}{13.52} = \text{e, or .75 efficiency of screen.}$$

L = Arc lumens.
C = Average foot-candles incident upon the screen.

It must Sparkle!

Just as conversation must sparkle to hold interest, so too, must the pictures on your screen today sparkle to hold patrons.

To secure the desired screen brilliancy with present dense black-and-white and colored films, twice as much light is required as is possible to project by any low intensity lamp. This necessary doubling in light is possible at an increased combined current and carbon cost of less than 2c per hour, with the low cost Strong Utility High Intensity Automatic Projector Arc Lamp.

Without the snow-white light such as is secured by this lamp it is impossible to show colored films satisfactorily. The light of your old low intensity will appear a dim, muddy yellow by comparison.

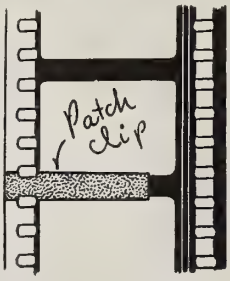
F. H. Richardson's COMMENT



Cue Assurances, All Right and Otherwise

SOMETIMES I am convinced that no two of the thousands of projectionists use the same method when it comes to cue marking. No wonder I get so many letters of complaint about the condition in which film is received. Very often the ideas that come along on this point are good. Some are even excellent but this does not alter the fact that when these various markings are passed along to the next man, he in all probability will either curse long and loud because he has never seen such a mark before and cannot make use of it, or he will take out his trusty grease pencil and make an extra large smear of his own just to show what he thinks of the other guy's idea! Now from Lesley Beecher, projectionist at the Princess theatre in Lewistown, Ill., comes the following letter:

F. H. R.

"Here's that young pest again with his solution to the film mutilation situation. It cannot be used to correct already mutilated cue marks, but is great when used on new film. It is possible you have seen these film 'patches' before but if not please note on the enclosed piece of film the patches [They look like gray celluloid clips. —F. H. R.] which we spliced on in two places, the reason for which I will explain later.

"The patch uses blank film which can be found in any projection room [Brother, you'd be surprised how many you can't find one in.—F. H. R.]. It is cut so as to fit over the frame line and not over any part of the picture; also it does not extend over the sound track, so we have no sound interruption. When a patch such as this passes through the film trap of the projector head, the metal clips expand the tension shoes as any other splice would.

The sound of a splice is audible to the ear in any projection room, as you know, thus, with the projectionist's eye glued to his screen, there is no guess work about it. He not only sees the cues, but hears them as well. If placed on the frame line and not across the sound track the audience is in no way aware of them as they cause no jump or other disturbance to the picture. They are very easily applied while the pre-running inspection is in progress. This I use on new prints which haven't been cut or spliced. At the other end of the sample is a double patch which I use on film which has been spliced frequently. Two patches put on quite close together have a much different sound than just an ordinary splice. In this way I have no trouble with cue marks and I make them no worse for the next guy.

"If at any time we receive a print that has the cue marks completely cut off, I use no marking or scratches, but first put on my 'build-up' cues, as I have dubbed them. If the next man wants to mark them he can and I have not hindered him in his method at all.

"In placing these patches I put the single patch on the frame line just ahead of the first S.R.P. cue mark. If the twin patches are to be used I place the first one just one frame ahead of the S.R.P. mark and the second at the same place as the single patch.

"If one desires he may use the two patches as a motor start cue, and the single as a changeover cue, or vice versa. I will appreciate comments on this method from other projectionists."

Brother Beecher seems to have a good idea—for himself and others except those careless projectionists who sooner or later would put the patches sidewise, off the proper place, half pressed down, over the sound track, etc. Of course, it would be necessary for the projectionists generally to know what they were for.

E. F. Jones of the Ritz theatre in Fernandina, Fla., also sends in some pieces of film for another purpose. These look more like strips cut from a sieve. Brother Jones says:

"While our friends are arguing about the best cue marks, I think something should definitely be done to protect the standard cues we already have. The clips I enclose were taken from one reel. They are both cues—motor start and change over —and the film is new. Now, Dad, honest, why should anyone want to cut film up in such a way? You will note there are three different holes on this print, with the standard cue completely destroyed, and I can assure you the other four reels used were just as bad.

"Had a visitor from London a few days ago. He was in on a British freighter. Said the house he used to work in was laid flat in one of Mr. Hitler's bombing raids. He had been using W. E. sound, Simplex projectors, and Ashcraft Hi lamps. From the description of what happened to the entire theatre maybe I should be glad to be in the good old U.S.A., where the films may be mutilated but at least the theatre is left standing.

"I have been running for the past four days on a line voltage of 100 and 200. Our power plant is on the blink and the city is being supplied power by one of our large industrial plants. It is quite a headache running with such a low voltage, but guess it beats nothing. Can't brag about the show I am putting on just now, but hope the power company will have things straightened out soon."

"On the sample sent is a single patch.

Cues, Mutilation and Smooth Changeover

APPARENTLY I have started a good-natured battle by publishing, in the July issue, under the title "The Other Side of the Film Mutilation Story," a letter from a projectionist offering some reasons why it may be necessary, under certain circumstances, to place cue marks on a print. O. Humphrey of Winchester, Ky., "went after" him in a letter published in the August issue, denying that there was ever any excuse for "mutilating" a print with special cue marks. Now the chap who wrote the original letter (he has preferred that his name not be divulged), has this to say:

"Yes, my ears are large, very red and smarting from the results of your having printed my 'flimsy excuses' for re-cuing the reels I project. But I can take it—though if ever I witness a show put on by Projectionist O. Humphrey you can bet my eyes will be wide open!

"Why, do you ask? Well, let us look back a few issues of B.T. and examine the article by Frank R. McLean, supervisor of projection at the Sparta theatre, Coulterville, Ill. Here we have a man who unquestionably is justly entitled to be called a projectionist, and who upon occasion finds it expedient to put his own cue mark on a reel. Why? Chances are there is missing footage between S.M. and C.O.

"In such a case what would you do, Mr. Humphrey? Insert a length of blank? Don't believe you would, but the cues must be spaced, hence you must either do that or set your own starting cue in the S.R.P. position, otherwise you will make what I would call a poor changeover.

"Which reminds me of a 'projectionist' I met recently. He threads on first frame of picture and counts from one to the twelfth frame when he sees his S.M. cue. On the count of five he opens his dowser. At eight he starts the motor, changes sound on 11, and picture on 12. Might say his changeover is between arc and film. You should witness these changeovers, especially on a fade out. Nevertheless, this man's technical knowledge is as up-to-date as is that contained in the 'Bluebook.' The trouble is, he evidently does not place as much importance on the matter of making perfect change-over as a real projectionist should. McLean, on the other hand, probably makes as nearly perfect changeovers as can be made.

"Mr. Humphrey states that he who commits the unpardonable sin of placing his own cue on film cannot justly assume to be a projectionist. Regarding this, I feel a good many will take exception. Of course what I have been talking about here pertains to putting on cues that replace either late cues or missing ones, while my own case had to do with short leaders.

"Regarding the starting resistance you suggest I put in my motors, Mr. Humphrey, bear in mind that there must be a value of resistance sufficient to cause these motors to take about 7 seconds to reach running speed, but not pass in excess of 3 feet of film during that time. With so much resistance in my starting circuit, what should I do in the winter time? Get out and crank? My leaders, incidentally, are usually so short, that is the only footage I can plan on. Mr. Humphrey puts on enough of his own film to be able to run it right, but tell me, when you ship out your show do you send your own film out, too, or do you rewind the reel twice, once to remove your own film and once to ship out the reel backward? Or do you remove your own film and let the reel go out front first? In either case you are taking a chance of really mutilating the print. Hand rewinding and some motor rewinding puts the film on the reel so roughly that edges are bent and at times broken. If you send the reel out front first you are doing one of two things: making more work for exchanges, or causing that reel to go through the exchange without inspection. I'd like to hear from New England exchanges on this subject!

"I apologize to Mr. Humphrey for any sarcasm. I feel a good argument clarifies things very often.

"As to the small town projectionist who makes a plea for recognition, yes, he most certainly should have it. Speaking of wages, many small town men come darned near working for the love of their profession. Unfortunately, this beautiful thought is to some extent marred by a pitifully small remuneration which, with much stretching, enables these real projectionists to pull through by making every solitary cent do double duty, though they have to eliminate meat and potatoes from their diet in order to lay away a bit for the next edition of the Bluebook of Projection, without which (and its predecessors) they would be 'sunk.' Believe me these men really use the Bluebook, too."

WALTER E. MANSKE, projectionist in Wabeno, Wis., has taken pen in hand while the taking is good, to offer some suggestions on projection before turning his mind to matters military. His letter reads, in part:

"Today I received my copy of BETTER THEATRES, and as usual I immediately turned to your columns to read the pros and cons on uses and abuses in the projection field. Also received my draft questionnaire in the same mail, so I'd better write now while there is still time.

"I was particularly interested in 'The Other Side of the Film Mutilation Story,' for I have about the same equipment the writer has—Simplex projectors, same type soundheads with cloth fabric drive, driven by a ¼-h.p. motor, very free turning mechanisms. I, too, have very quick pick-up (don't like it, but in two years it apparently has not injured either projectors or film). Because I have the same equipment as this other chap I feel I can give him advice and know what I am talking about. Originally I got all my information about changeovers and cuing out of your Bluebook, so the credit goes to you.

"When threading the projectors, first I slowly turn the drive wheel until the shutter is in proper framing position. By turning slowly there will be no slack left in the gear train when you stop. Always turn the drive wheel whether or not the shutter is in proper position. By taking up this slack I am assured that when I do start the projector it will start suddenly, but will not jerk any of the gears.

"This is not a first-run theatre. The prints we receive are generally from two to four months old. But remember, if you expect good prints from the exchanges, you must return their prints to them in at least as good shape as you receive them and in the manner they ask you to return them. The Golden Rule, you know. It works both ways. I am proud of the fact that I've never had a criticism leveled at me for damage of any kind to any print.

"In closing, I should like to say that this whole cue marking mess should be laid right at the feet of the projectionist. In five years I have never received a print on which I could not clearly distinguish the standard cue marks. I have, however, received dozens of prints with red chalk marks, white slashes over the whole frame, strips of film pasted across, to mention only a few of the favorite types of marks—all these put on, not by the exchanges, but by a few 'projectionists' who couldn't take the trouble themselves to keep a sharp lookout for a standard cue. True, I have received prints with no cues whatsoever, standard or 'deluxe,' but by exercising a little ingenuity I found a way to cue them neatly. Now I have a Clint Phare marker to use in these cases.

"Now for threading in the film: It is necessary that I go back to the receipt of the films. Each reel is inspected from beginning to end. I inspect the leader to ascertain whether there are any loose splices; repairing them if necessary and putting the poor splices aside so I may report them. If there is less or more than 12 feet of leader between start mark and beginning of picture, I take note of that. Right now I should mention that when I thread my projectors, I thread Frame 10 at the aperture opening. I do not move the film at all after threading it in. It seems to me silly to thread the film in at one point, then run it down to another—the proper—point from which to start the film at changeover time. Specifically, No. 10 at the aperture is the proper point to start my projectors at changeover.

"Now, back to inspecting: I can generally tell by the first reel of a feature what sort of condition I will find in the leaders of the other reels. If the first reel leader is nearly standard length, I can be reasonably sure the rest will be. Likewise, if the first reel leader is in bad shape the rest almost invariably are in the same condition. Now, if I find one foot of film missing anywhere between No. 10 and beginning of picture, I write on a pad of paper (which pad I refer to when threading reels) opposite the reel number the notation 'Thread at 11.' If two feet are missing the notation is 'Thread at Start.' On rare occasions 3 feet are missing and I dig into my reserve stock of blank leader and splice in enough to compensate for the missing film. This reserve I have collected over a period of time when I found, on inspection, the exchange had spliced new leaders on older prints and had left a few feet of film too much between No. 3 and beginning of picture. My supply is always ample."

NEWSPAPER DISCUSSES PROJECTOR INSTALLATION

In the advertisement of the Brenkert Light Projection Company, appearing on the second cover of the July issue of Better Theatres, was reproduced a newspaper article reporting public reaction to the new projectors installed in the Denham theatre in Denver, Colo.

This article appeared in the July 14, 1941, issue of the Denver Post.

CLARK GABLE MEETS LANA TURNER IN "HONKY TONK"

CLARK GABLE and LANA TURNER—literally the screen team of the year—represent a master stroke in dynamic casting in "Honky Tonk."

Planned to be of a "Boom Town" stature, this production actually overshadows that famed audience hit and brings this box-office team together for the first time with sparks flying.

As a suave and gay "con-man," Gable displays a charm and wit which eases the hurts even of his victims, but when it's necessary to resort to gun-play, he turns hard as steel. A blonde girl succeeds where all else fails, and Gable eventually comes over to the side of law. It's a role tailored for him, calling for the type of portrayal with which he's ridden the peak of popularity for a long time; a popularity which gains in solidity and never decreases.

Gorgeous Lana Turner carries on from dramatic successes in "Ziegfeld Girl" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," gaining in momentum all the way.

As the blonde young idol of Gable's heart, Lana plays a prim Boston school teacher who has come West in search of her father. In her love for Gable she is a fiery and determined female and she gets her man. In that she's as deadly as the bullets from the six-shooters of the booted and bearded miners.

Assuring the best in direction was Jack Conway, a veteran of twenty-five years in Hollywood, and each year marked with outstanding megaphone triumphs, including the roaring "Boom Town."

In the supporting cast is a wealth of famous talent, including Frank Morgan who plays Miss Turner's lovable but shyster father, and Marjorie Main.

The gravel-voiced Miss Main, who has developed a real box-office following with a succession of fine performances, is seen as a widow determined to clean up the camp. She ploughs under the wicked, including even Gable and Miss Turner at times.

Also seen are Claire Trevor, as a beautiful dance-hall girl and Lana's rival for Gable's affections; Albert Dekker, his opponent in political and pistol brawls, Henry O'Neill, as the civic leader and Chill Wills, the ever-present pal of Gable who sticks with him through thick and thin, including innumerable humorous incidents.

Pandro S. Berman was the producer, following his success with "Ziegfeld Girl." Marguerite Roberts and John Sanford wrote the screen play.

Constructed for "Honky Tonk" was the largest outdoor set ever used on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot. It was the town of Yellow Creek and it towers over the remembered Burkburnett, one of the locales in "Boom Town."

More than 500 extras worked on the Yellow Creek set, memorably the exciting day when, armed to the teeth, they marched on the city hall to oust Gable and his gang.

Romantic fireworks between Gable and Miss Turner reach a peak when she tricks him into marriage and then tells him he must woo her in approved Boston style, and when she locks him out of her room at the beginning of the long Boston courtship and he bluntly kicks down the door.

"Honky Tonk" is the top teaming of the season and its most exciting love story.

ANOTHER "BEST"

WITH the selling-and-buying season now well underway, it might be appropriate to renew that suggestion on this page at last year's end when honours were being memorialized, for consideration of a plan to bestow some manner of Oscar upon that producer or director who had made the most picture for the least money.

The most picture would be, obviously, that picture which was worth the most box-office dollars in proportion to the studio dollars that it cost.

That would be, also obviously, the best job of the year in an industry which is addressed at making motion pictures for a public seeking entertainment.

It is still to be remembered that the motion picture has to be a business to be anything.

BUSINESS ITEM

THE American scene of now is laden with so much grim seriousness about a world in turmoil and a civilization in flux that occasional incidental sparks from the anvil of destiny gleam out in sheerly entertaining contrast. Among these are the decidedly incidental manifestations from Mr. Marshall Field III, currently in possession of one of the great American fortunes, and, it would seem, puzzled about it.

It is perhaps just the good fortune of the motion picture, and the drama, that Mr. Field has elected expression of his bewilderment in terms of journalism, rather than on the screen.

Last week Mr. Field achieved the attention of the press by the quoted remark that he does not "give a damn" what happens to his fortune.

Further, he has been quoted as saying that, come what may, after the war and the current rising tides have reached an equilibrium he expects to be able to earn "three meals a day" and, failing that, would hold that he would not deserve a living.

Mr. Field can start that program any time now. It is not entirely necessary for him to wait for external forces and circumstances to liquidate his present position. He seems at the moment to be in the state of the small boy who has tied a loose tooth to the knob of a door which he expects will be slammed.

One of Mr. Field's symptoms is his PM, eccentric New York daily tabloid, known casually in this industry for its curious attentions to the motion picture.

There is a story told in the vine-clad patios of suburban Connecticut that PM can trace its origin to the notions of a psychologist friend who introduced Mr. Field to Mr. Ralph Ingersoll, who had publication impulses, and who, perhaps by prescription, was to become editor-publisher of the strange new journal. That could explain PM.

And now, Mr. Field has announced a project to start another daily, this time in Chicago, "to end the un-American monopoly of the Chicago Tribune." What makes Mr. Field think the Chicago Tribune is a monopoly is not indicated. The Tribune dominates Chicago journalism somewhat as Marshall Field & Company dominates the shops of State Street—and by rather the same methods.

THERE'S an interesting cycle in the development. In 1872 the majority stockholders of the Chicago Tribune threw out the editor, Mr. Joseph Medill. In 1874 Mr. Medill borrowed enough money from Marshall Field I, who did not give himself that dynastic numeral, to acquire control of the Tribune. The Medill version of the Tribune prospered and paid off Marshall Field I. It has never needed money since. It has sold a lot of space to Marshall Field & Company. Its only other important contact was many years back on the subject of the sudden failure of the health of Marshall Field II. There was no feud about that, either.

Meanwhile, even if Field III doesn't give a damn about what happens to his fortune, it is neither graceful of him to scorn the labours and achievements of those who built it, nor constructive service to his America to belittle the pattern of the builders of the commonwealth.

The way of service to the public in this land is the business way. The dollar, even if depreciated, is still respectable if gained by processes of respectability, as the Field dollars were. There is a fashion of "the new order" to pretend a sanctity for the "have nots", to hold an assumption that Honour and Virtue and a Good Intent and Good Will for All Men must be expressed with the Left hand.

We have in the institution of the motion picture a success story, a builders' story. It has been broadly admitted, contended in fact, that the motion picture, through its years, has been a contributor to the well-being of the people, a paver of the "American Way". That would hardly have been attained if the motion picture had been administered under a policy that did not "give a damn" about its fortune. This business, and every other business, has had to be a success, a dollar success, to be worth a damn to the world.

HE SHOULD ASK!

THAT peculiarly self-tortured and writhing manifestation of journalism which is one Mr. Wilkerson's Hollywood Reporter pretends to want to know why the publisher of Motion Picture Herald has not been called as a witness by the Senate sub-committee inquisition; this along with insinuations which in manner and form follow the traditional standards of gutter journalism.

Now, if Mr. Wilkerson's fitful disposition would let him compose himself long enough so that someone might read to him an editorial from the Herald of last week entitled "The Inquiry and the Answer", he might get a sort of rough and approximate idea as to why the publisher's testimony would not be useful to the purposes of the sub-committee. Even then he might not get it. But it tells.

Mr. Wilkerson's remarkable journal referred to the publisher as "Martin (Deacon) Quigley".

Can it be that Mr. Wilkerson thinks that if a journalist in this business does not operate side-line, or main-line, rackets having to do with night clubs, gambling places or undertakings of clip-joint coloration, and whose private life does not make copy for cafe reporters, he then automatically acquires ecclesiastical status?

This Week in the News

How It's Done

HOLLYWOOD was this week taking some early lessons in the intricate ways of government, and how what can be arranged, despite red-tape, by red-tape. It is the slightly complicated matter of a picture in process under the title of "Know for Sure" on the theme of venereal disease, destined eventually for delivery to the United States Public Health Service. However, the picture is made, of all things, for Mr. John Hay Whitney's motion picture division of the Rockefeller committee for the coordinaton of "cultural relations" with the Latin Americas.

The problem arose when the U. S. Public Health Service, aware of its legal obligation to advertise for competitive bids for films, and also most insistent on the skills and talents of Hollywood, found they could not be had in the open market. Thereupon, so the accounts go, the cultural relations committee took over and enlisted Hollywood through that same agency of the research council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which has already functioned on pictures for the Army. So it comes that "Know for Sure" is being directed by Lewis Milestone at 20th Century-Fox from a script by John Sutherland and the Health Service.

The Whitney division is, ostensibly, to make Spanish and Portuguese versions of "Know for Sure" for the promotion of cultural relations, but the Public Health Service can buy the American rights. It will pay about $15,000 for the documentary.

Meanwhile Hollywood speculates on the fact that now for the first time it has been drafted for government work outside the requirements of the armed forces, which may include a large area.

Benoit-Levy

M. JEAN Benoit-Levy, long of note in cinematography in France, and especially in the realm of the teaching film, has been appointed to the faculty of the New School for Social Research in New York, to preside at a course opening this autumn. M. and Mme. Benoit-Levy are to be given a welcoming reception at the Museum of Modern Art in New York next Tuesday.

To the American audience M. Benoit-Levy is known principally for his direction of "La Maternelle" and "Ballerina," addressed at the theatre screen rather than in the direction of his specializations. In France his fame was as the authority on pedagogical pictures — not to be confused with the rather wide field of French documentary film. This is M. Benoit-Levy's second excursion to America. In 1935 he lectured at International House in New York.

Comes "Dumbo"

A FLYING elephant named Dumbo, and related no doubt to the Jumbo of circus fame, will make his first bid to join the screen hall of fame and take a place in the family of popular myths with Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck on Tuesday, September 30th at the RKO tradeshows of the latest Walt Disney production.

Up to now little advance publicity has been given to "Dumbo," fifth in the line of Disney feature length films that includes "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Pinocchio," "The Reluctant Dragon" and "Fantasia" which has not yet been set for general release.

Dumbo is a baby elephant that achieves fame under the canvas top as the world's greatest performer just because he can fly. The story of "Dumbo," unlike that of "Snow White" and "Pinocchio," has never been published. The film was in production at the Disney cartoon studio for over a year.

LePrince

JUST passed in this September is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Louis Aime Augustin LePrince, an important researcher in the pre-history of the motion picture, and a name much involved in the controversies of the old patent wars of the fighting decade between 1898 and the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

The records indicate that M. LePrince was on the eve of important achievement in the quest of the motion picture when he stepped off into mystery. He was still working on cinema problems in England when in September of 1890, now fifty-one years ago, he went on a visit to a brother in France. He boarded a train for Paris one afternoon and from that day he was lost to those who knew him. Search was carried on in France, and at the official instance of the United States in many lands, to no avail.

Two daughters of M. LePrince live in New York, Miss Marie and Mrs. H. A. Vorhees, both distinguished in the arts. To them, as to all others, their father's disappearance is a mystery complete. There is no shred of suggestion of motivation or cause. M. LePrince went out as a light goes out.

Campaign on "Belle"

THE COMBINATION of the Gene Tierney glamour and the action appeal of the picture is being sold effectively in campaigns for "Belle Starr" as noted by exploitation reports in this week's Managers' Round Table, starting on page 55. Pulchritudinous equestriennes as masked riders in the streets were emphasized along with beauty shop promotions.

Daylight Time Ends

DAYLIGHT saving time is scheduled to come to an end at 2 A.M. Sunday, September 28th, everywhere in the United States that it is used. At that time the clocks are to be set back one hour despite campaigns, in some areas, to have "summer time" extended throughout the whole year to save electricity for defense needs.

Telling Boston

PROGRAMS of suburban Boston theatres and current motion pictures receive extensive attention in the first issue of the Star-Bulletin, weekly newspaper run by several former executives of the Boston Transcript, including Richard N. Johnson, publisher, and Alden B. Noag, editor, who was managing editor of the Transcript.

The new paper, described as "A Weekly Newspaper for Radio, Movies and Better Living," is distributed free to 100,000 homes in Cambridge, Watertown, Belmont, Arlington, Medford, Somerville and the Boston suburbs.

The Moviescope Directory and Moviescope Guide, which are described as innovations as applied to suburban theatres, run over a full page and list features and starting times as well as address, phone number and admission price of 62 theatres.

Maine on Welles

UP AT CARIBOU in Maine's potato belt, the whimsical manager of the Powers Theatre, a thousand-seat house, playing big time product, has found it to his taste to advertise "Citizen Kane" with mention of all the principals of the cast except Orson Welles. Over across the line in New Brunswick, C. R. Allen of The Observer Limited remarked: "Mr. Welles and the picture are as closely associated in the public mind as ham-and-eggs, but the Powers lists only the eggs."

Want Local Reviews

CHECKUP of the attitude of metropolitan newspaper editors with respect to the industry's banning of lay press correspondents, syndicated columnists and radio chatterboxes from pre-release screenings of product has been made by publicity men of three major studios in tours of the country completed during the period since this step was taken.

Unanimity prevailed among editors on the point that the time of greatest reader interest is the date of the local opening of the picture attraction.

A substantial majority of editors and managing editors remarked that their local screen editors, established in the community by long service and regarded as judging films in particular awareness of local tastes and standards, are the critics whose opinions are of most value to subscribers.

More than half of the managing editors canvassed said that it has been a policy to delete from syndicated columns, and from free lance or other material received all critical references to pictures which have not been exhibited locally, whether in form of outright review or oblique comment.

Meanwhile Hollywood correspondents in general, irked at first by the restriction and given to talk of counter steps, have accepted the new procedure as standard and are abiding by the rules.

One or two, notably a commentator whose contract is of a nature placing a premium upon maintenance of a combative attitude, continue to "review" pictures, including the closely guarded blocks-of-five.

Checkup of the quarters charged with custody of the films "reviewed" by these few netted the uniform reply, "they haven't seen them."

Hepburn Speaks

THE GOOD neighboring policy was unofficially turned north when, on Wednesday, the Circus Saint and Sinners, some six hundred members and guests gathered honoring Mitchell F. Hepburn, premier of Ontario, Canada, at a luncheon function at the Hotel Astor in New York. As "Fall Guy" of the monthly meeting, Mr. Hepburn — ofttimes termed the Dominion's "stormy petrel"— lent himself to the hazing and roasting visited upon the organization's guests of honor, told stories, stressed the need of further industrial effort by Canada and the United States in the manufacture of war materiel.

"In both countries, we have inexhaustible natural resources, ample skill, ingenuity and manpower to turn out more armament. What we lack is universal will to do so," the Premier warned.

"Saints and Sinners," functioning nationally for the relief of indigent circus performers, is identified in New York by the Dexter Fellows Tent, named in honor of the late and legendary Big Top press agent. Importantly concerned in the business of the executive council is Rutgers Neilson RKO Radio publicity director.

Beware of Waste

"WATCH EXPENSES," Joseph Bernhard, Warner theatre head, advised managers at a zone meeting in Philadelphia on Wednesday. He warned that balance sheets would be trimmed closer by expenses under the consent decree and added that the industry faced a shortage of essential materials during the defense crisis. Wasteful expenses are the enemy of profits, he said, cautioning managers to waste nothing in either physical maintenance or operations of theatres.

Willkie Department

WENDELL Willkie, now defending the motion picture's freedom in a Senate inquiry, will be the chief speaker and chairman of the speakers' committee, at "Fun to be Free," a pageant to be held the evening of October 5th, at New York's Madison Square Garden, by the Fight for Freedom Committee to Defend America and the American Labor Committee to aid British Labor.

Phillip Willkie, son of Wendell, said Tuesday in Rushville, Indiana, he would enlist in the United States Navy "soon." He is 21, and registered in the 1941 draft.

Height Finders

TEN months ahead of what has been deemed an impossible schedule, at mid-week the Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester presented to the U. S. Army the first of a series of height finders, tremendously complex and ponderous optical instruments for use in defense against aircraft.

The building of the height finders has required an addition to the Eastman plant. Each of these range finders extraordinary costs about $20,000.

Frank W. Lovejoy, chairman of the Eastman board, presented the first instrument at a ceremonial function Wednesday.

Pemberton's Dish

IT WOULD be that prankish producer, Brock Pemberton of Leavenworth, Kansas, and Broadway, who would be spoofing the cinema and his Broadway by announcing that now each week he will be giving away a set of dishes—53 pieces—in promotional connection with his "Cuckoos on the Hearth," the play at the Morosco theatre which the critics have been kicking around. And for further innuendo, Mr. Pemberton this week posed for pictures with the dishes and along with K. T. Stevens who has come on from Hollywood for her first big time starring role in a new George Kaufman play.

NICHOLAS M. SCHENCK ANSWERS FOR INDUSTRY IN SENATE INQUISITION

IN THIS the third week of the Washington inquisition on film propaganda the motion picture industry took the stand for the first time in the person of Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc.

Mr. Schenck testified: "I know my business, I know it awfully well." Presently the committee admitted that, insisted on it.

The committee, under Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman of the group of five which is sitting in the caucus room at the national Capitol to investigate to see if there should be an investigation, had been for two weeks hearing from its own members and sundry external persons, writers, columnists and such on divergent opinion and such matters as Alice Faye's gown. Mr. Schenck was the first authoritative figure of the organized industry to testify.

Through all of Tuesday and most of Wednesday Mr. Schenck parried questions designed to build up a picture of a monopoly in the industry which forced pictures "full of war propaganda" upon unwilling exhibitors.

Expertly Mr. Schenck replied to questions aiming to show that family ties, theatre ownership, self-censorship, foreign investments, and the choice of picture subjects on the part of the distributors were all means to an interventionist conspiracy. A crossfire of questions from isolationist Senators did not disconcert him.

Mr. Schenck took the stand after Senator Sheridan Downey, of California, sometimes identified with the isolationist cause, appeared before the committee at his own request to read a ten-page statement attacking the investigation as a threat to freedom of expression. The California Senator scored the monopoly issue and other tangents to the hearings as obscuring the threat of censorship which was at the basis of the investigation.

Interspersed through the sessions were a series of telegrams from, to and about the testimony of Jimmie Fidler who appeared before the investigating committee at its last session on September 16th. Several wires attacked the veracity of his testimony. Most were in indignant rebuttal to his charges that the films had sought his favor with bribes, or had attempted "pressure" censorship of the press.

First Defense Testimony

Howard Dietz, advertising director of MGM also joined Mr. Schenck on the stand to answer the Fidler charges Wednesday. The testimony of Harry M. Warner, scheduled to follow Mr. Schenck on Wednesday was postponed until Thursday morning. Others, whom Senator Clark indicated would follow Mr. Warner included Barney Balaban, Darryl F. Zanuck, and Will H. Hays.

Earlier sessions had been concerned chiefly with testimony in the nature of indictment. Senators Nye and Bennett Clark, authors of the committee resolution calling for the subcommittee hearings, columnists Jimmie Fidler and George Fisher, and America First director John Flynn all spoke in support of the charge. Until Tuesday the industry's sole defense had been in sidebar statements by its counsel, Wendell Willkie, who was barred from cross-examining the witnesses.

Further direct defense for the industry was also seen Wednesday when Chairman Clark agreed with minority member Senator McFarland that the subcommittee would view some of the alleged propaganda pictures next week.

Mr. Schenck established himself as a capable witness as for five hours he successfully parried intimations of monopolistic conspiracy among the major producers. There were frequent bursts of laughter and applause from the audience as Mr. Schenck rebuffed the insistent questions and comments of Senators Clark and Tobey.

Mr. Schenck explained how intense competition between the major companies prevents a conspiracy to control product. Ownership of theatres by five of the majors, he added, does not "freeze out" the Little Three and pointed to many independently produced pictures which have been shown in the majority of the country's theatres. He also denied that family relationships among many of the industry's leading executives guided their business dealings.

"You know how it is, Senator. Boys meet girls in a small colony and they do get married," he said. "It is no business tieup." The reply brought prolonged laughter from the gallery and Senator Clark soon dropped the family relationship tack.

Industry Leaders Present

Present in the Senate caucus chamber, as Mr. Schenck started his testimony, were many leading industry figures awaiting their turn on the stand or observing the course of the inquiry. Among them were Harry B. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, who was scheduled to follow Mr. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief of 20th Century-Fox, also a witness, Austin F. Keough, general counsel, and Claude Lee of Paramount, Joseph Hazen, chief counsel for Warners, J. Robert Rubin, MGM counsel, and Howard Dietz, MGM advertising and publicity director.

Wendell L. Willkie, counsel for the industry, was again at his place at the counsel table.

As Senator Downey completed his statement, Chairman D. Worth Clark of Idaho commented that the California Senator had "built up a straw man and then proceeded to demolish him."

Senator Clark again declared that his committee "has never suggested censorship" and launched into a lengthy speech about Government vs. private censorship, although he admitted that the committee had not passed on the question of whether the film industry was censored or by whom.

His remarks about Senator Downey's "straw man" prompted a jab from Senator Ernest W. McFarland of Arizona, only non-isolationist member of the subcommittee, who said "this whole investigation is a straw investigation."

Senator McFarland then read into the record telegrams from two Hollywood publicists denying Jimmie Fidler's charge last week that they had attempted to bribe him. Russell Birdwell denounced as false a Fidler statement that he had been offered money for a favorable review of "Prisoner of Zenda." Harry Brand, publicity head at the 20th Century-Fox studio, wired that $3,000 paid Mr. Fidler had been for an advertising trailer, not an attempt to "buy his soul."

The Brand wire added a lively sidelight to the proceeding by recounting Mr. Fidler's non-writing activities in Hollywood. In particular Mr. Brand scored attempts to "drum up trade for a gown shop in which he was interested."

"These telegrams show how far afield we can get in this kind of a hearing," Mr. McFarland commented, adding that Mr. Fidler's troubles had nothing to do with the subject of the investigation "and pretty soon we will find ourselves investigating the gown industry, of which I know nothing."

Arrange to View Films

The Senator again urged the subcommittee to see the alleged propaganda films for itself.

"I think this committee should make up its own mind about the pictures and not be asking everyone in the United States what they think about them," he said. Also, he said, in fairness to all, he would seek to secure time for a number of people who have written in to him asking to be permitted to testify.

Senator Downey Wednesday announced a continuous showing of "Land of Liberty" Friday afternoon at the National Archives. He invited the committee and Washington officialdom to see the picture, and, from the floor of the Senate, Thursday, he was to invite all members of Congress.

Schenck Waives Counsel

As Mr. Schenck prepared to take the stand, Senator McFarland pointed out that it was customary to permit witnesses to be accompanied by their attorneys, who could advise them.

"We will waive that," Mr. Willkie said from his end of the table. "Mr. Schenck can take care of himself."

Senator Clark agreed that Mr. Schenck could take care of himself and paid tribute to the Loew's, Inc., head, both personally and as a member of the industry.

"Sit down and be at ease," he told Mr. Schenck. "You haven't anything to fear in the way of unfairness from this committee."

Immediately launching into the examination of Mr. Schenck, Senator Clark went into the question of the distribution of Loew stock. The witness testified that he and his family had but a small interest in the company. He said they owned "only 5,000 or 6.000" out of 1,627,000 outstanding shares of stock.

Mr. Schenck explained that it made no difference to him who owned control of the company so long as it was successfully operated. He pointed out that the Loew gross income was approximately $100,000,000 a year and that it owned $150,000,000 gross assets.

Chairman Clark sought to elicit from the witness the names of the various subsidiaries of Loew's. Mr. Schenck was unable to give the information off-hand, explaining that since the subsidiaries were wholly owned by the parent company and were set up merely for accounting purposes, he didn't clutter his mind with such details.

After the questioning by the chairman, Senator Charles W. Tobey of New Hampshire burst into an attack on the witness, declaring his inability to understand how the head of a great corporation could fail to be familiar with all its ramifications.

"If you are Exhibit A of the average corporate director in this country," he shouted, "God save the stockholders."

"I know my business; I know it awfully well," Mr. Schenck fired back, "and I don't consider it any lack of responsibility that I'm sitting here and unable to remember some corporate names."

Mr. Schenck then attempted to explain that the question of subsidiaries was purely one of mechanics, and said "The finest proof of it is that we are very successful."

Cites Loew Investments

Mr. Schenck added that the parent Loew company owned 129 theatres in the United States, was jointly interested in 14 others, and had a $3,500,000 investment in Gaumont British theatres, as well as others abroad. Most of the investments are through corporate subsidiaries, he explained, offering to have attorneys submit a detailed list.

The audience applauded the retort, and Senator Tobey immediately charged "the professional claque is getting in its work." He ignored Mr. Schenck's offer to submit a list of subsidiaries.

At the afternoon session, Senator Clark revealed clearly his intention of pressing the monopoly issue, devoting two hours of questioning to matters raised by the Department of Justice in the New York suit. He announced at the end of the session that he thought he had two hours more of questions, one hour of which would be devoted to bringing out the situation of the independent theatres and the other hour to the question of propaganda—a ratio of one hour on propaganda to four on the industry's organization.

Fortifying himself with the Temporary National Economic Committee monograph on motion pictures, Senator Clark started out by asking Mr. Schenck if he agreed with its findings that the eight majors predominated in the production of quality films and asked whether it was not true that actually the five producing companies dominate that field and the other three—Universal, Columbia and United Artists—were at their mercy because they owned no theatres.

Mr. Schenck disagreed, pointing out that no company could live on the revenue from its own theatres alone and that all companies, of necessity, courted the more than 14,000 theatres which are not affiliated.

Deny Monopoly Charges

The witness and Senator Clark then had a brief verbal exchange over whether the five majors could not get together and prevent any independent from showing his pictures. Mr. Schenck declared such action would be in violation of the anti-trust laws and that he could not conceive of its being taken. Senator Clark insisted that he answer whether it could not be done if the companies wanted to. Mr. Schenck insisted they would not want to.

"Will you name one good picture made by anybody that did not find very fine playing time?" Mr. Schenck asked finally. "You have a lot of information and I have no doubt if there was any such thing you would know it."

The chairman insisted that no picture would have a "reasonable chance" of success if it could not run in metropolitan first-run houses, but the witness said he "cannot imagine anything like that."

So far as theatre ownership is concerned, he went on, he would be "just as happy" if Loew's had no theatres but could get a good deal for the sale of its pictures. No company, he said, can live on only the income from its own houses, not even Paramount, which has 1,300, but must make 11,000 to 12,000 contracts.

"But the Big Five, by virtue of not only having production, distribution and exhibition facilities, but having facilities in first-run metropolitan theatres in key cities, are able, if they desire, to practically freeze out the other three," Senator Clark insisted.

"I think that is very far fetched," Mr. Schenck replied.

Paramount is no better off with its many theatres than Loews with its few, he said, eliciting from the chairman the comment that "the reason that you remained solvent when other companies were going through bankruptcies and reorganizations was because you had not overexpanded and did not go out and buy a lot of real estate to push your pictures."

"Yes," agreed the witness, "plus good management."

Senator Clark then went into the "family relationships" among high officials of the major companies, starting with Arthur Loew, vice president in Mr. Schenck's company, who is a former son-in-law of Adolph Zukor of Paramount.

Mr. Schenck insisted that such relationships made no difference in the competition between the companies and said "if there was anything in that would I be having difficulty in selling my pictures to Paramount?"

Companies Compete for Stars

The chairman then proceeded to question Mr. Schenck on most of the points raised in the Department of Justice complaint in the New York anti-trust case vs. Paramount, et al.

"Do you think it is possible for an independent producer to go into Hollywood and produce a picture if your five companies don't want him to?" he asked.

"Of course," replied Mr. Schenck, citing Frank Capra as an example.

When asked where an independent would get his stars, he said: "You wouldn't get them from me." He explained that a company spends large sums of money in developing talent and is careful not to loan stars to a producer it fears cannot make the right kind of a picture or for a part that might injure rather than help the actor.

While the majors make star deals among themselves, he continued, they also raid each other and at all times are attempting to build up a backlog of new stars against the day when present luminaries begin to fade in box office appeal.

Chairman Clark also asked about the loaning of technicians, the renting of sets and properties and the use of film libraries. Mr. Schenck explained that he was not familiar with the details of those subjects and the committee should get definite information from later witnesses from Hollywood.

He also told the committee the companies had no patent pool and that Loew's leased its studio equipment from Electrical Research Products, Inc. He said the independent producers could probably lease studios and equipment at a lower rate than the big companies.

In reply to a question on the working of the Production Code Administration Mr. Schenck replied that an independent producer has as good, if not better, chance of getting a code seal as do the majors. Further he said they do not bear the high cost of maintaining the PCA. It is also possible to distribute pictures without the code seal, Mr. Schenck said, adding "though I would never think of doing it for any of our product."

The Central Casting Bureau, he continued, is maintained for the benefit of bit players and extras, not the producers. Any independent can get talent quite as easily as a major, he insisted.

Asked by Senator Clark about the number of pictures produced compared with the market, Mr. Schenck said there are not too many under the double-feature policy which prevails in many theatres today.

Market for Good Pictures

Senator Clark went into the question of distribution, but did not go far when, on his first question, Mr. Schenck agreed that an independent producer can get economical distribution only by releasing through one of the eight majors or Monogram or Republic.

But, he said, there is always a demand for good pictures and that would be no handicap to anyone, independent or not. The majors, he explained, have to buy each other's pictures to balance out their programs, but they cannot always get them—Loew's cannot get Warner Brothers and "my brother is head of Twentieth Century-Fox, but I can't buy Twentieth Century pictures with the exception of one or two, because they sold them to others and won't take them away to give to me."

Continuing his examination of Nicholas M. Schenck, Wednesday morning, chairman Clark attempted to show that "propaganda" pictures were forced on exhibitors under the old block booking system which prevailed up to September 1st.

Mr. Schenck refused to admit that the pictures previously cited were propaganda and said that no exhibitor was required to play them under his contract. The smaller houses get better cancellation percentages than the large theatres, he explained, and every exhibitor knows what he is going to get long before playing dates. The requirement of 10 days' notice for cancellation, he testified, has never been strictly enforced. Further, he declared, the purpose of the consent decree is to cure any abuses that existed.

"But if your 'Big Five' desire to compel exhibitors to take any given pictures, they have ways and means of doing it," Senator Clark insisted.

"No," Mr. Schenck answered, "we have nothing to do with any other company and couldn't do that."

Clark, McFarland Clash

Senator Clark brought up a charge that the manager of MGM's Seattle branch had "threatened" exhibitors who objected to showing "Land of Liberty," distributed by Loew's without profit.

"Do you believe in the policy of forcing exhibitors to take pictures of this kind against their will?" the chairman asked. "Certainly not," retorted Mr. Schenck, explaining that the branch manager was "over zealous. That man was thinking properly but acted wrongly."

The repeated demand of Senator McFarland, minority member of the subcommittee, that the Senators view the pictures under question led to a clash Wednesday morning with Chairman Clark, who told the Arizonian that if he didn't like the way the investigation was handled he didn't have to attend.

"If it wasn't part of my duty I wouldn't be here," Mr. McFarland retorted.

Armed with a two-page list of questions, Senator Tobey brought up once more Mr. Fidler's charges the majors had attempted to censor the press.

Mr. Schenck said he had no personal knowledge of the withdrawal of advertising from the Los Angeles Times and asserted he was opposed to any such tactics, and disapproved attempting them. He said the Times controversy was not accurately depicted by the columnist.

Mr. Schenck told the Senator he had no first-hand knowledge of the matter, which he had been told had been cleared up, and that Howard Dietz, who had handled it, was present for questioning if the committee wanted to bring out the facts.

He said he definitely did not approve of attempts to control the press and that he disapproved of any employee doing so, but refused to admit that the Times controversy involved censorship.

The final ninety minutes of Mr. Schenck's testimony brought short tempers to the surface. Senator Clark showing that he was smarting under the prodding of Senator McFarland for screening of the pictures under discussion. Senator Tobey fumed when he was unable to pin the witness down with lengthy questions replete with three-syllable words.

After some fifteen minutes of sparring between Senator and the witness, the former snapped:

"When you took the stand it was suggested your lawyer should sit by you and tell you what and what not to say. "That was superfluous advice," he told Mr. Schenck. "You don't need any lawyer to tell you what to say: you can give any lawyer cards and spades and beat him any day."

Agree Upon Screenings

At an executive session during the Wednesday noon recess Senator Clark agreed with Senator McFarland that the pictures should be viewed. He announced that a number of them would be screened next week.

Wednesday afternoon however Chairman Clark declined an invitation to the subcommittee from Louis de Rochemont, producer of the March of Time to view the latest release "Norway in Revolt" at Washington on Thursday and to hear testimony from members of the Royal Norwegian Airforce who took part in reenactments for the film. Senator McFarland, replying independently, however, agreed to see the picture, with other Senators, at the Carlton Hotel.

Calling Howard Dietz, director of MGM advertising and publicity, Senator Tobey examined him on the Los Angeles Times case, as urged by Mr. Schenck.

Mr. Dietz denied categorically all the Fidler charges that MGM had attempted to influence newspapers to drop his gossip column, and assailed the commentator's veracity. He told Senator Tobey he was opposed to any kind of censorship of the press and added "Many of us are opposed to this investigation because it is an attempt to restrict the freedom of the screen."

Referring to alleged "pressure" on the Nashville Banner Mr. Dietz said the incident originated in criticism by an overzealous local theatre manager who had no authority to bind the company to any action.

Senator Downey Aids Defense

Senator Sheridan Downey, California Democrat, reopened the hearings Tuesday morning when he appeared before the subcommittee, at his own request, to read a ten page statement examining the conduct and purposes of the hearings. He was the first witness granted the right to testify in behalf of the industry. He appeared through a customary senatorial courtesy which permits members to give evidence before committees and subcommittees.

Senator Downey warned the subcommittee that the inquiry involved constitutional guarantees of free speech and threatened a censorship. The truthful record of Nazism, he asserted, is a greater force on public opinion than any medium of expression. Allegations of film monopoly, and testimony as to the race or religion of industry leaders he characterized as beyond the scope of the committee and not related to the basic issue of the democratic right to expression.

The California Democrat succeeded at the outset of his testimony in establishing himself as a somewhat better qualified witness than his two senatorial predecessors on the stand, Gerald P. Nye and Bennett Champ Clark, or the committee members. Citing admissions that the committee members and previous witnesses had not seen many of the pictures named as propaganda Senator Downey listed many of the pictures which he had seen himself and described several.

"Your inquiry bears not only upon the affairs of one business, but upon a principle vital to our democracy—the principle of free speech," Senator Downey told the subcommittee in explanation of his appearance. "For our Bill of Rights is a common heritage, and its jealous preservation is an obligation which rests upon us all.

"I believe that this same democratic guarantee covers such forms of expression as the moving pictures. I believe that the producers of these pictures share the same privilege with editors, soap-box orators, radio commentators, clergymen, yes, even Senators—the privilege of airing their own views in their own way on problems of public concern. No Senator can control the kind of publicity that the movies may produce, nor can movie moguls find a national sounding board on the floor of the United States Senate.

"But while I believe that the motion picture producers possess the privilege of free speech like the rest of us, I am convinced that they have availed themselves of it with moderation—somewhat astonishing it seems to me, if we compare it with the tide of publicity now flooding out in every newspaper, on every air-wave, at every street-corner, and in the Congress of the United States. Specifically, I feel that a combing of films distributed in recent years has failed signally to reveal any such insidious propaganda for war as has been, I think, too lightly alleged.

"Movies React to Public"

Films cited by the committee, Senator Downey continued, were evoked by the antipathy of the public to Nazism, did not create that antipathy. "The movies reacted to their public, not the public to its movies, he asserted.

The probe pursues an illusion when it attacks the screen because motion pictures reflect the conflict in the world, he continued. Trying to prevent its reflection will not put out the blaze of war abroad he warned.

Fidler, Flynn and Alice's Gown in the big Inquiry

JIMMIE FIDLER, radio commentator and gossip columnist, who appeared before the Senate subcommittee in Washington last week, entered the news picture again on Monday, when Senator Ernest W. McFarland read a telegram from Harry Brand, publicity director of Twentieth Century-Fox in Hollywood.

In his wire, Mr. Brand charged that Mr. Fidler had influenced actress Alice Fay to buy a gown from a dress shop "in which he (Fidler) was allegedly interested. The first time she wore the dress it fell apart, causing her much embarrassment and humiliation." Later, the wire continued, Miss Faye went East for a personal appearance tour and Mr. Fidler "falsely attacked her in the newspapers which carried his column."

Mr. Brand said it was true, as the commentator had testified at the hearings, that Fox had paid Mr. Fidler $3,000 to make a "trailer" for the company. "But," Mr. Brand charged, "his interpretation that the payment was an attempt to 'buy his soul' is his own deliberate attempt to distort the facts as he so consistently does in reporting the Hollywood scene. Perhaps Fidler considers himself overpaid, in which event we would be glad to accept a refund."

Senator McFarland's comment on the telegram was: "This shows how far afield we can get in this kind of hearing. Pretty soon we'll find ourselves investigating the gown industry."

During Wednesday's testimony, however, the "gown" incident cropped up anew. Senator McFarland read into the record a telegram he received from Mr. Fidler, who denied that the gown fell apart on the first wearing and said that Miss Faye didn't pay for it for 40 days.

Meanwhile, the newspapers on Monday carried a story that Mr. Fidler and Errol Flynn, Hollywood actor, had engaged in a battle Sunday night at the Mocamba Cafe in Hollywood.

According to the reports, Mr. Flynn approached Mr. Fidler who was seated at a table with Mrs. Fidler and Samuel S. Zagon, attorney. Mrs. Fidler, incidentally, operates the dress shop to which Mr. Brand referred in his telegram.

The actor is reported to have hurled at Mr. Fidler, "You are no good. You ought to be run out of Hollywood. You told the Senate one lie too many."

Whereupon Mrs. Fidler screamed "You leave my husband alone," and picked up a fork from the table. It landed on the Flynn ear, causing blood to spurt.

"I'd hit you hard, Fidler, but I understand that a slap is a worse insult than a hit," and with that Mr. Flynn slaped the Fidler face to the accompanying yells of Lupe Velez, one of the interested by-standers. Miss Velez mounted a chair, brandished a ketchup bottle, and shouted, "Geeve eet to heem." Nobody was certain who she was cheering for.

The cafe orchestra saved the night and prevented further altercation by striking up "The Star Spangled Banner."

Later, while posing for photographers, Mr. Flynn told the press, "The only thing that bothered me was the fact that Mrs. Fidler picked the wrong fork when she went to work on me. It was a faux-pas. She used her entree fork."

The San Francisco Chronicle announced on Monday that the Fidler syndicated column would be dropped from that newspaper. In an editorial headed, "The Chronicle Edited Fidler's Gossip," Paul Smith, editor, declared that his paper always "edited" the Fidler column "severely" and denied there was ever any pressure to do so from film producers or exhibitors.

"Now that Mr. Fidler has brought the matter to a head by contributing so much innuendo to the inquisition of the Clark committee," the editorial read, "we have decided to edit him right out of the Chronicle."

GUILD UNITS ATTACK INQUIRY

"The potent propaganda is not movies about Hitler; it is Hitler himself—his words and his deeds. The record—the bare, factual record—of this man is what conditions the mind of America toward hatred of Nazidom—not any ephemeral shadows of Europe's Armageddon. What movie genius could produce so fierce a piece of anti-Nazi propaganda as Hitler has himself brought forth in "Mein Kampf?" he asked.

"In the face of this reality, which oppresses the mind of every American, whether he has ever seen a movie or not, it is idle, certainly, to single out the motion picture industry as a force in the moulding of public opinion. Without a doubt, the movies are potentially a powerful instrument of political expression; no one could or would gainsay that. But in my opinion, no convincing evidence can be presented showing that their influence in determining our people's attitudes toward other nations has been anything but negligible," Senator Downey declared.

Even if the press, radio or films abused their freedom of expression he added, it would be better to endure incidental distortion and defamation rather than to lose the fundamental right.

Stands on "Free Speech"

Turning to the monopoly issue the Senator inquired of Chairman Clark, "if 500 men control an industry are they to have the right to free speech, but if the operation of a business is by 50 men are they to be denied protection of the Bill of Rights?

"Is there any law giver who could aptly frame a statute stripping from a monopolist his fundamental human rights, any judge who could administer such a measure?" he asked.

"Almost every large American industry is now involved in the complications of the anti-trust law. The movie producers are no exception. Their cases are now being reviewed by the Department of Justice.

"I think it will be difficult for this Committee, however plausible its argument, to convince the American people that it can justly develop this investigation into a monopoly inquiry. For this Committee to raise the monopoly question as an apparent inducement to the movie industry to submit to its censorship, can lead only to national misunderstanding. I hope I may be permitted to urge upon its members to avoid placing itself in this ambiguous position," Senator Downey continued.

"I am likewise convinced that any attempt to secure data on the foreign markets of movie companies, or the birth places of movie leaders cannot be justified before the bar of American public opinion. Such collateral inquiries can be relevant only if we intend to forbid, to the foreign-born citizen, his freedom of expression, to deny to the American business leader whose genius has developed a market abroad, the right to express himself on international issues.

"Surely, if we cannot have faith in an untrammeled freedom of expression for all our citizens, wherever born, however far flung their enterprises; if we yield to the fear that our democratic heritage can be wiped out of our minds and hearts by a flickering propaganda, then the foundations of the Republic are weak indeed," he concluded.

Film Unions Protest Committee's Tactics

The Screen Actors Guild at a meeting of its directors in Hollywood on Monday voiced a demand that the Senate investigation be stopped. According to Edward Arnold, president, the directors passed a resolution condemning the aims of the inquiry. It said, in part.

"It is clear that the purpose of the inquiry is to block production of motion pictures which are termed anti-Nazi because they deal realistically with war subjects and to effect censorship on free expression of American culture. . . . The inquiry has quickly indicated that it is designed to breed religious and racial discord in our nation, thereby to destroy the unity of the vast majority of the American people who support the foreign policy of the nation.

"Therefore be it resolved that the SAG does hereby condemn the action of the subcommittee as an immediate threat to the free thought, free speech, and the very fundamentals of liberty upon which our great nation was founded and demand that this inquiry be stopped."

Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the SAG, who had just returned from Washington, attacked the testimony delivered by Jimmie Fidler and George Fisher. He urged an overwhelming protest from members of the industry, the public and the press against such "unqualified" testimony.

At New York the Independent Theatre Owners Association at a meeting last week in the Hotel Astor passed a resolution condemning the probe and pledged the assistance of exhibition in refuting the charges leveled against producers and distributors.

The resolution petitioned Congress to end the inquiry at once and charged that "the examiners have consciously and deliberately publicized unsupported and unfounded assumptions" calculated to injure the film industry." Copies of the resolution were sent to the committee members and to Vice President Wallace, as presiding officer of the Senate.

The New York Screen Guild, union of publicists, readers and home office workers, also attacked the investigation, passing a resolution on Friday, September 19th, which charged that the hearings are an effort to censor the motion picture industry.

The Screen Publicists Guild, in a telegram to President Roosevelt, asked his support in ending the unauthorized Senate subcommittee investigation. Steven L. Freeland, New York co-chairman, and Nat W. James, Hollywood co-chairman, signed the message.

Numerous other labor groups, including several not associated with the industry, also attacked the investigation as a threat to free expression. Actors Equity, the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, and other groups passed resolutions and issued statements. The American Civil Liberties Union published a lengthy attack on the subcommittee. Thomas J. Lyons, president of the New York State Federation of Labor, parent body of many of the theatre employe unions, called the subcommittee "a sounding board for the America First Committee" and condemned its conduct of the film investigation.

The committee was to hear Harry M. Warner, Darryl F. Zanuck and Barney Balaban on Thursday and then adjourn, possibly until the week of October 6th.

Senate Auditors May Tighten Purse Strings to Curb Inquiry

CONTINUANCE of the inquiry by the subcommittee was threatened over the weekend by a move within the Senate to bar further expenditures by the subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee. Burton K. Wheeler, chairman of the latter body, named the five subcommittee members, who proceeded to conduct the hearings without direct Senate authority or an appropriation to meet the expenses of calling witnesses.

Senator Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, chairman of the Senate Audit and Control Committee, which must approve all the subcommittee's expenditures, on Friday observed that the hearings had been undertaken without approval or instructions from the Senate. It was not, he added, in keeping with Senate practice, and said that he would not approve any expenditures until there were more indications of how long the film inquiry would last and how much the committee would spend.

Vouchers for $552.04 signed by Senator D. Worth Clark, chairman of the subcommittee appeared likely on Monday to precipitate a showdown on control of the hearing's purse strings. The vouchers were sent to the Audit and Control Committee for approval. They are to pay the expenses of Jimmie Fidler and George Fisher, Hollywood columnists who testified last Monday.

For Traveling Expenses

The sum covered traveling expenses of the two columnists who flew to Washington from Hollywood. An additional voucher would pay them the customary $3 per day witness fee. Mr. Fisher submitted an account of $264.50 for his half hour appearance on the stand. Jimmie Fidler's testimony, on a per word basis was much cheaper. For three hours on the stand he requested $287.54 for his travelling expenses.

Approval of the vouchers by Senator Lucas and his committee appeared in doubt. He again said he would approve no expenses for the subcommittee until it made clear how long it intended to sit, and how much money it would demand. If the audit committee rejects the expense request it will have to be submitted to the Senate. Chairman Clark expressed confidence that if they were the Senate would approve. Washington observers were less certain however.

May Set Limit

Senator Lucas also commented that he might recommend that the Senate set a $250 limit to the amount which a committee might spend without express authority from the Senate. If this were done the motion picture investigation would have to be ended unless the Senate approved a resolution calling for its continuance.

Senator Clark on Monday predicted however that the Audit and Control Committee could not squelch the hearings. He indicated that he was ready to submit expenses to the whole Senate if necessary. This week, he forecast, the committee would continue to hold daily sessions and would hear all of the subpoenaed witnesses.

Among those who would follow Mr. Schenck on the stand, Senator Clark said, are Harry Warner, president of Warner Brothers, Barney Balaban, head of Paramount, Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief for 20th Century-Fox, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and others.

Control of the audit committee headed by Senator Lucas rests solidly with administration supporters. The only isolationist member is Senator Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican, who is also a member of the subcommittee.

TAX ON ALL ADMISSIONS AT NEW RATE BECOMES EFFECTIVE OCTOBER 1

One Cent Levy on Each Unit of Ten Cents or Fraction Starts Wednesday; New Tickets; First Payment Due Nov. 1

All theatre admission price scales become subject to federal tax, virtually all exemptions are ended, and most amusement enterprises competing with motion pictures must pay ticket taxes under the 1941 federal revenue bill which became law on September 20th. President Roosevelt at Hyde Park signed the measure on Saturday after the joint House and Senate conference had reached agreement on disputed passages. Both chambers passed the bill by a voice vote.

The law, insofar as it affects theatres, becomes effective on October 1st. The ticket tax and other excise levies, many of which will indirectly hit theatre operators, must be collected on and after next Wednesday.

The rate at which tickets to motion pictures and other theatrical entertainments are to be taxed is equal to one cent on each ten cents, or portion thereof, charged for admission. This is not equivalent to a ten per cent levy. In practice the fractional levy cuts deeper into the public's entertainment dollar.

Services Pay Reduced Tax

Exemptions under the admissions amendment to the revenue bill are sharply restricted. All persons, with the exception, of some children, bona fide employees, municipal and state officials on business, and members of the armed services or the CCC in uniform, must pay the tax. The law assesses a tax on free or reduced admissions equivalent to the tax on the regular admission price then in force for similar accommodations.

Soldiers, sailors, marines, coast guardsmen and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, when in uniform, are required to pay tax only on the price which they actually pay for the special half-price or cut rate service tickets now granted by many theatres and circuits.

The clause exempting childrens' tickets from the tax applies only where the admission is less than ten cents and the children less than 12 years of age. Also, school entertainments, both high school and elementary, are not required to pay the tax. College theatres, institutions, churches and many other educational or benevolent institutions exempted in previous laws are now required to collect the federal tax, legal experts assert.

The admissions tax amendment to the 1941 Revenue Law as passed by Congress and signed by the President continues on the statute books the measure which was first written and enacted in 1917 as a wartime emergency law. The tax rate is identical with that in force during the war years, experts point out, but even more exemptions have been dropped from the bill, now making it the most inclusive admissions tax ever on the federal statutes.

Lawyers point out that the tax rate of one cent on each ten cents or fraction has remained in force since 1917. Entitled Section 1700 A-1, amending the Internal Revenue Code, it was never repealed. After the war, however, exemptions were progressively increased until in the late '20s only tickets in excess of $3.00 were taxed. During the depression the exemptions were gradually lowered down the admissions price scale.

The last previous reduction occurred on July 1st, 1940 when the exemption was cut from 40 to 20 cents.

The tax was first imposed on October 3, 1917, when a rate of one cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof was applied to all admissions in excess of five cents. On February 24, 1919 the exemption was entirely eliminated.

After nearly three years with no exemption, the Revenue Act of 1921, effective January 1, 1922, provided a 10-cent exemption. The act effective July 2, 1924, raised the exemption to 50 cents. Two further increases raised the exemption, effective March 28, 1926 to 75 cents, and on June 29, 1928 to $3.

With the advent of depression, the Administration began to look for new sources of revenue and in the Revenue Act of 1932, effective June 21st the admission-tax exemption was dropped to 40 cents. No further changes were made in the exemption until the Act of 1940, effective July 1, last year, dropped it to 20 cents.

Free Admissions Taxed

The law, as amended in its latest passage through the Congressional hopper with the annual revenue bill is explicit in its phrasing. Section 541 of the Revenue Act of 1941 states:

"A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription. In the case of persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, children under twelve years of age, members of the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and members of the Civilian Conservation Corps when in uniform) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at any time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, and equivalent tax shall be collected based on the price charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted. No tax shall be imposed on the amount paid for the admission of a child under 12 years of age if the amount paid is less than 10 cents.

"Section 1701 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to exemptions from admissions tax) shall not apply with respect to amounts paid, on or after the effective date of this part, for admission."

Lowering of the price exemption to cover all theatre admissions and the heavy slash in exemptions will almost double the tax's yield to the federal treasury during the next twelve months Treasury Department experts estimate The new bill will add approximately $62,400,000 to the $76,073,791 which the United State collected through the boxoffice during the year ended August 1st the statisticians predict. Some predict that theatre patrons will pay almost $140,000,000 to Uncle Sam this year. During the 1939-40 season when the exemption started at 40 cents theatre taxes brought in only $22,000,000.

Every theatre manager must start collecting the tax commencing next Wednesday, October 1st. The first payment to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, for taxes collected during October, will not be due until November 30th, however. All tickets will be subject to the tax, including single admissions, season tickets, special discount coupon books, two-for-one tickets and other special forms of admission.

Forms for reporting the new tax payments will be prepared by the Bureau of Internal Revenue and distributed to theatres who have paid previous taxes. Responsibility for securing the forms and correctly reporting the taxes rests with the exhibitor.

New Tickets Needed

Tickets sold after October 1st must bear the price of admission and the price of the tax, in accord with Section 1702 of the Internal Revenue Code. Only those houses which have been charging less than 20 cents will be required to obtain new ticket forms. On current stocks of tickets, however, the new tax may be overprinted or rubber stamped. Where the established admission price is changed to absorb or adjust itself to the new tax law the change must be overprinted or stamped on the tickets until new ones are secured.

Where the established price is not changed and is to include the tax the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will permit tickets now on hand to be used until properly printed tickets may be obtained. Where tickets do not show established price and tax, managers must keep, near the door or box office conspicuous signs stating the prices of admission, taxes due, and the proper combined totals of admission and tax.

Exhibitors, particulary those paying the tax for the first time, are advised to keep careful record of the numbers of tickets sold, price changes, and gross receipts after October 1st. Tax lawyers recommend that the number of the last tax exempt tickets sold on the evening of September 30th be carefully recorded. The Bureau of Internal Rvenue may demand records at any time.

While the admissions tax clause of the revenue bill most directly affects theatre owners many other portions of the new law, which is the steepest tax bill in American history, will also concern them. Many excise, or so-called "hidden" taxes will add to operating expenses after October 1st while new personal and corporate income taxes become due on March 15, 1942.

A ten per cent levy is provided for photographic equipment, optical goods, electric signs, electric, gas and oil appliances, business machines, phonographs and records, air conditioners and many other items purchased after October 1st. Local telephone bills are taxed six per cent while long distance and telegraph messages will bear a ten per cent assessment. This item is of importance to many exhibitors at a distance from exchange centers. There is also a five per cent tax on electric light bulbs.

Tax Increases Start Wednesday

Competitive amusements however will also share in the new tax burden. Night club bills will bear a five per cent levy. Ten dollars a year is assessed against non-gambling coin operated machines, including "juke-box" movies, and against bowling alleys and pool and billiard tables. Sporting goods bear a ten per cent tax.

Sporting events, legitimate theatres, concerts, and similar admission charging entertainment must pay the same ticket tax as the motion picture houses.

In addition to the direct business taxes theatre men may expect an increase in personal taxes. The four per cent base income tax remains but surtaxes rise sharply from six per cent on the first $2,000 net income to 77 per cent on incomes over $5,000,000. Corporations earning over $25,000 a year, net, will pay a 24 per cent tax. Those earning less pay 15 per cent on the first $5,000, 17 per cent on the next $15,000 and 19 per cent on the balance.

The entire revenue bill is expected to raise $3,553,400,000 to pay part of the defense and lend-lease cost.

Indiana Tax Relief on Percentage Pictures

The Indiana state gross income tax division in a ruling on September 16th informed exhibitors in that state that they would not have to pay gross income tax on per centage pictures on which distributors have also paid tax. The ruling was given at the request of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana.

The Bureau also announced that it would refund money collected from plaintiffs in a suit filed by the Association this spring in which it was charged that the tax on the gross income of both exhibitor and distributor was a double levy on per centage pictures. Exhibitors will not be exempted from paying on their annual income.

Special Iowa Meeting

To discuss the new Federal admissions tax, a special meeting will be held next Monday at the Savery Hotel, Des Moines, Iowa, of that state's theatre men under the auspices of the Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska. Tax experts are to answer questions at the meeting.

In 400 Detroit and other Michigan theatres, as of late last week, collections totaled $42,400.

The 12 Paramount theatres now operating in the Greater Miami area, raised $4,554. The circuit had already given $700 to the campaign in a ticket selling drive. The United Service Organizations' 360 planned service clubs are under way, with construction of the first 25 expected shortly.

The Capitol job is the most extensive, calling for a completely new theatre from the street to the screen, at a cost of $150,000; reconstruction and moderization of the Rialto, to total $50,000, and another $10,000 for redecorating the Princess theatre.

Spyros Skouras, head of National Theatres, is expected to leave New York City next month on a tour of the company's affiliated circuits to award prizes to the winners of the showmanship campaign which closed last month. Prize winners have not been announced as yet.

Buys Gage in Chicago

James Steininger, operator of the Lawn Theatre, Chicago, has acquired the Gage Theatre, Chicago, and is planning extensive remodeling and modernizing of the house.

HORSE-TRADING DECIDES CLEARANCE NEW YORK CASE ARBITRATOR RULES

Motor Executive, Granting 14-Day Reduction to Exhibitor, Stresses "Free Opportunity" and Cites "American Way"

"Horse trading" is the basis for clearance rather than scientific appraisal by distributors of the factors of historical development, potential revenue, price scales, management policy, location and patronage of competitive theatres, according to Paul Fitzpatrick, director of sales development of the motors holding division of General Motors Corporation, who arbitrated New York's 13th complaint.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, the first non-lawyer to write a film arbitration decision, ruled in favor of the clearance complaint of Selig A. Posner, operator of the Playhouse in Raritan, N. J. Scoring the method by which MGM, Warners, 20th Century-Fox, and Paramount granted the Cort theatre, at Somerville, 21 days' clearance over the Raritan house, he cut the margin to seven days. He characterized the present 21-day clearance as unreasonable, having been "plucked out of a hat and imposed upon Raritan."

The motor executive ruled that protection between theatres, to meet the spirit of the consent decree, must grant a new enterprise the right to "be born, to live, and to prosper, even though it may entail some loss to competitors who hitherto have been free of its competition.'

Threat to "American System"

"A contrary view," he wrote, "would freeze development, limit future opportunity, and strike at the very roots of what we are proud to call the 'American System.'"

The award reduced the availability period for the Raritan, opened in April, from 21 to 7 days as "being adequate and reasonable protection for the Cort theatre and necessary and reasonable for the maintenance of the Raritan Playhouse" which the arbitrartor held to be "a desirable addition to the recreational facilities of the community. One sixth of the costs was assessed against each of the parties.

The arbitrator rejected arguments by the distributors and intervenor that the complainant in signing contracts with 21 day clearance clauses had signified his acceptance of the margin. It was Mr. Posner's right to sign the best contract he could get under the circumstances with the intention of resorting to arbitration Mr. Fitzpatrick said.

"By consenting to the decree," he wrote, "the distributors are bound to recognize that their clearance decisions are, under the decree, always open to review through arbitration proceedings, whether those decisions were made yesterday, a year ago, or at the very inception of the distributor's business.

Describing the method by which the Raritan clearance was determined, according to testimony, Mr. Fitzpatrick said:

"A new theatre was projected. An old theatre objected. 'Horse-trading' ensued. The old theatre said 60 days. Three distributors said 30. One said 28. The promoter of the new theatre protested even more violently. One distributor finally said 21. Within a day or two, another and another distributor said 21! A week after the new theatre opened—with 21 day contracts from three major distributors—the fourth says 21!

He criticized the fact that the distributors' agents failed to show that they had visited the theatres or studied the area involved during the discussions. Distributor testimony that clearance was a saleable factor was self-contradictory the arbitrator wrote, inasmuch as while it was "for sale" it was not for sale to a new competitive theatre. The intervening Cort theatre, he found, had paid nothing and received nothing for favorable clearance, insofar as it was a separable item of the contract.

Historically, after comparison of clearance between the Cort and theatres in Plainfield, Dunellen, Manville, Raritan and nearby towns he found that the 21 day margin over the Raritan was exceptionally high. In respect to admission prices, location, transportation and patronage habits he noted that there was no schematic gradation of clearance by distributors.

Comparing seating capacity he found that the Raritan had 416 seats, or 34 per cent of the Cort's 1211. Rentals from the smaller house. to all distributors, averaged $206.78 a week com-

Third Appeal Board Decision Upholds Westway Dismissal, Intervention Rules

The Appeal Board of the motion picture arbitration tribunals on Monday, in its third decision, upheld the ruling of Sefton Darr, Washington arbitrator, who dismissed the clearance complaint of the Westway theatre, Baltimore, on June 9th. Mr. Darr's decision in the third Washington case had upheld the right of distributors to protect with clearance the older, better established theatres which produce the largest revenue within a given competitive area.

The three members of the Appeal Board—Van Vechten Veeder, Albert W. Putnam and George W. Alger—in their seven-page opinion devoted four pages to quoting from the findings of fact on which Mr. Darr ruled in favor of the Edgewood, Durkee circuit theatre named in the Westway complaint. The full text of Mr. Darr's decision was printed on page 21 of Motion Picture Herald for June 14th.

"These findings are clear, comprehensive and, being amply supported by evidence, conclusive", the board ruled. They affirmed the original award in full and assessed all costs against Lee W. Homand, operator of the Westway.

The most important precedent seen in the third decision of the "supreme court" of motion picture arbitration was a ruling that intervening theatres must file formal notice of their interest in a complaint before hearings start. Rule I of the Rules of Arbitration provides that any exhibitor or distributor named in a complaint or whose interests are likely to be affected by it may "at any time prior to the commencing of the first hearing" intervene by filing with the clerk of the tribunal a declaration of interest, a submission to the rules of arbitration and a $10 filing fee.

Specifically, the board upheld Mr. Darr's action in excluding from the Westway case the Alpha and Irvington, neighborhood theatres in the same area as the Westway and Edgewood, on the grounds that they had not followed the prescribed method of intervening. An attorney for the theatres appeared at the first Westway hearings, saying the theatres "asked me to intervene", according to the Appeal Board. Mr. Darr granted permission to observe the proceedings, after the attorney said, "Our present attitude is one of listening. Just what active participation we may want to make later I don't know; it will depend on developments".

After the complainant had rested his case and defendant witnesses were called, the counsel for the Alpha and Irvington asked permission to intervene. The arbitrator called attention to Rule I and its provisions but indicated it might be waived on agreement of all parties. The complainant objected and the arbitrator thereupon denied the application to intervene.

"We approve the Arbitrator's disposition of this issue," the Appeal Board wrote, "together with his proper appreciation of the necessary exclusion from his award of any consideration of the clearance between the Alpha and Irvington and the Westway."

The eight points upon which Mr. Darr based his decision, and for which evidence was approved by the Appeal Board, held that the Edgewood was superior to the Westway and entitled to the contested 14 days' clearance by reason of its historical development, higher price scale, size, and superior management and policy; absence of premiums, or other attendance stimulants; larger revenue for distributors; superior location within the competitive area; absence of promises of product by distributors to the Westway before erection; and the need of protection for the larger investment represented by the Edgewood.

AWARD STRESSES "FREE COMPETITION"

pared with $607.44 per week for the Cort. The Raritan rental, parallel to seating capacity, is 34 per cent of the Cort's, or equal in per seat revenue to the larger theatre. Distributors, he said, had failed to prove that average rentals from both theatres is, or would be less than from the Cort alone.

Gift night at the Cort, when women receive "free china or face paint," ice cream for children, bingo or similar games until banned by law, cut rate tickets at the time of the Raritan's opening and other devices offset the five to 11 cent price differential between the Cort and Raritan admissions Mr. Fitzpatrick found.

Cites Total Rentals

Confidential exhibits, the arbitratotr noted, showed that the Cort paid 82.6 per cent more rental to its highest priced distributor than to its lowest. The spread for the Raritan on a per firm basis was only 30 per cent. One distributor who disclosed income from the Cort during 1941, compared with the first part of 1940, showed an increase of 12.7 per cent from the Cort, plus 38.8 per cent of the increased Cort payments received additionally from the Raritan after it opened on April 24th.

The arbitrator asserted it was clear that executives or salesmen negotiating contracts with exhibitors showed little or no success at arriving at "anything like a scientific appraisal of the weight to be given the various factors that go to make the selling price."

Studying population in the United States the arbitrator noted that with approximately 17,000 theatres in operation there is a theatre for every 7,600 persons. Raritan he added is a separate municipality with a population of 4,800 surrounded by other populous communities, many without theatres. The Playhouse may assume to have a natural patronage potential of at least the U. S. Average of 7,600, he declared.

In conclusion Mr. Fitzpatrick observed that the Cort brought competition to older theatres when it was established. In turn, he said, it must expect to face competition from newer theatres, which have "a constitutional legal right and an ethical and economic right to open and essay to make a place for themselves."

"If the ensuing competition is governed by principles of fair play and decent management, and the potential local patrons are given the choice of waiting to see a picture at their local theatre instead of seeing it earlier at another and more distant theatre, then, in the Arbitrator's opinion, this competition is constructive, not destructive," he observed.

St. Louis, Ohio Cases End

The some run complaint of Louis M. Sosna, operating the Sosna theatre in Mexico, Mo., was dismissed at St. Louis this week by Fred A. Armstrong, arbitrator, after one hearing on September 4th. Mr. Armstrong ruled that the defendant, Metro-Goldwyn Mayer had in fact offered the Sosna a reasonable run, which had been rejected. The complaint was the second filed by Mr. Sosna. A previous some run action filed in March naming the Big Five and Universal, Columbia and United Artists was withdrawn, after it had been classified as beyond the jurisdiction of Section VI of the consent decree.

Mr. Armstrong levied costs against the complainant, but noted that the dismissal was without prejudice against a new complaint if circumstances warrant a third action.

At Cincinnati Herbert F. Koch, arbitrator, dismissed the clearance complaint of F. W. Rowlands in behalf of his Main theatre, in Columbus. The complaint named the Big Five and Neth's Eastern theatre and sought a reduction from 21 to seven days. Costs were assessed against the complainant. A factor in the decision was the higher admission scale of the Eastern. It was Cincinnati's second complaint.

ARBITRATION CASES FILED TO DATE

The following is a summary of the arbitration cases filed to date:

Filed This Week:

New York—One on Clearance
St. Louis—Two on Some Run

Previously Reported:

Clearance	89
Some Run	28
Specific Run	1
Total to September 24th	121

Settled This Week:

Washington—Case No. 3 (Appeal)
New York—Cases No. 6 and 13
St. Louis—Case No. 3
Cincinnati—Case No. 2

New York

New York's sixth case, the complaint of the Andora Amusement Corporation, operating the Liberty in Plainfield was also settled this week when James O'Gorman, arbitrator cut the clearance of the Strand theatre from 30 to 21 days. Paramount, Warners, RKO and 20th Century-Fox were ordered to change the availability of pictures for the Liberty. The complaint against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was settled and withdrawn by Joseph Siccardi, president of the Andora Corporation in June.

Mr. O'Gorman noted that the consent decree recognizes that motion picture theatres perform a public service and that it is in the public interest to present pictures while they are still timely. In reducing the Strand's margin he ruled it was within the arbitrator's obligation to give the public pictures at the earliest possible date without injuring either of the theatres involved. Costs were assessed equally. The case had been on the New York docket since March.

The 22nd New York case was filed on September 18th when the Arden Enterprises, Inc., operating the Arden theatre at Columbus Avenue and 103rd St., New York, sought re-establishment of a previous clearance and run arrangement in its competitive area. MGM and Paramount are named.

The Arden asserts that formerly it played day and date with the Carlton theatre, and four days after the Stoddard, Olympia, Riviera and 77th Street. Now, it asserts, the Olympia has 44 days precedence, the Carlton five days, and the Stoddard 34 days. William Kaster operates the Arden.

St. Louis

Two new complaints, both seeking some run, were filed in St. Louis last week. The complainants are Floyd Lowe, owner of the Star Theater at Lebanon, Mo., and Mrs. Mildred Karsch, operator of the Ritz, at Rolla, Mo. The Big Five are defendants.

Ben Tepper, attorney for both complainants, said the distributing companies had refused to sell his clients any films on a definite basis, and they had to be content with reissues four and five years old, while competitors were getting latest releases. Mr. Tepper named the Gasconade Theater Corporation, a circuit operating the Lyric at Lebanon and the Rolla—Mo at Rolla, as interested parties.

The third St. Louis complaint, clearance action by Victor Thein, operator of the Palm theatre in North St. Louis, will be heard on October 3rd before former circuit judge J. Wesley McAfee. The St. Louis Amusement Company has intervened for the Aubert and Union theatres.

Chicago

Hayes McKinney, an attorney, has been named as arbitrator of the Oriental Theatre's Chicago clearance case against the five consenting companies for better playing time in the downtown district. The hearing has been set for October 7th.

Philadelphia

Philadelphia's case No. 9, the first of three clearance complaints by Abe M. Ellis, originally scheduled to be heard on September 24th, was postponed until next Monday, the 29th. The postponement was asked by the Warner circuit attorneys. The complaint was entered for the Broad theatre.

Kansas City

Wendell H. Cloud will hear Kansas City's second case, clearance complaint of the Dickinson theatre, Mission, Kan., on October 6th.

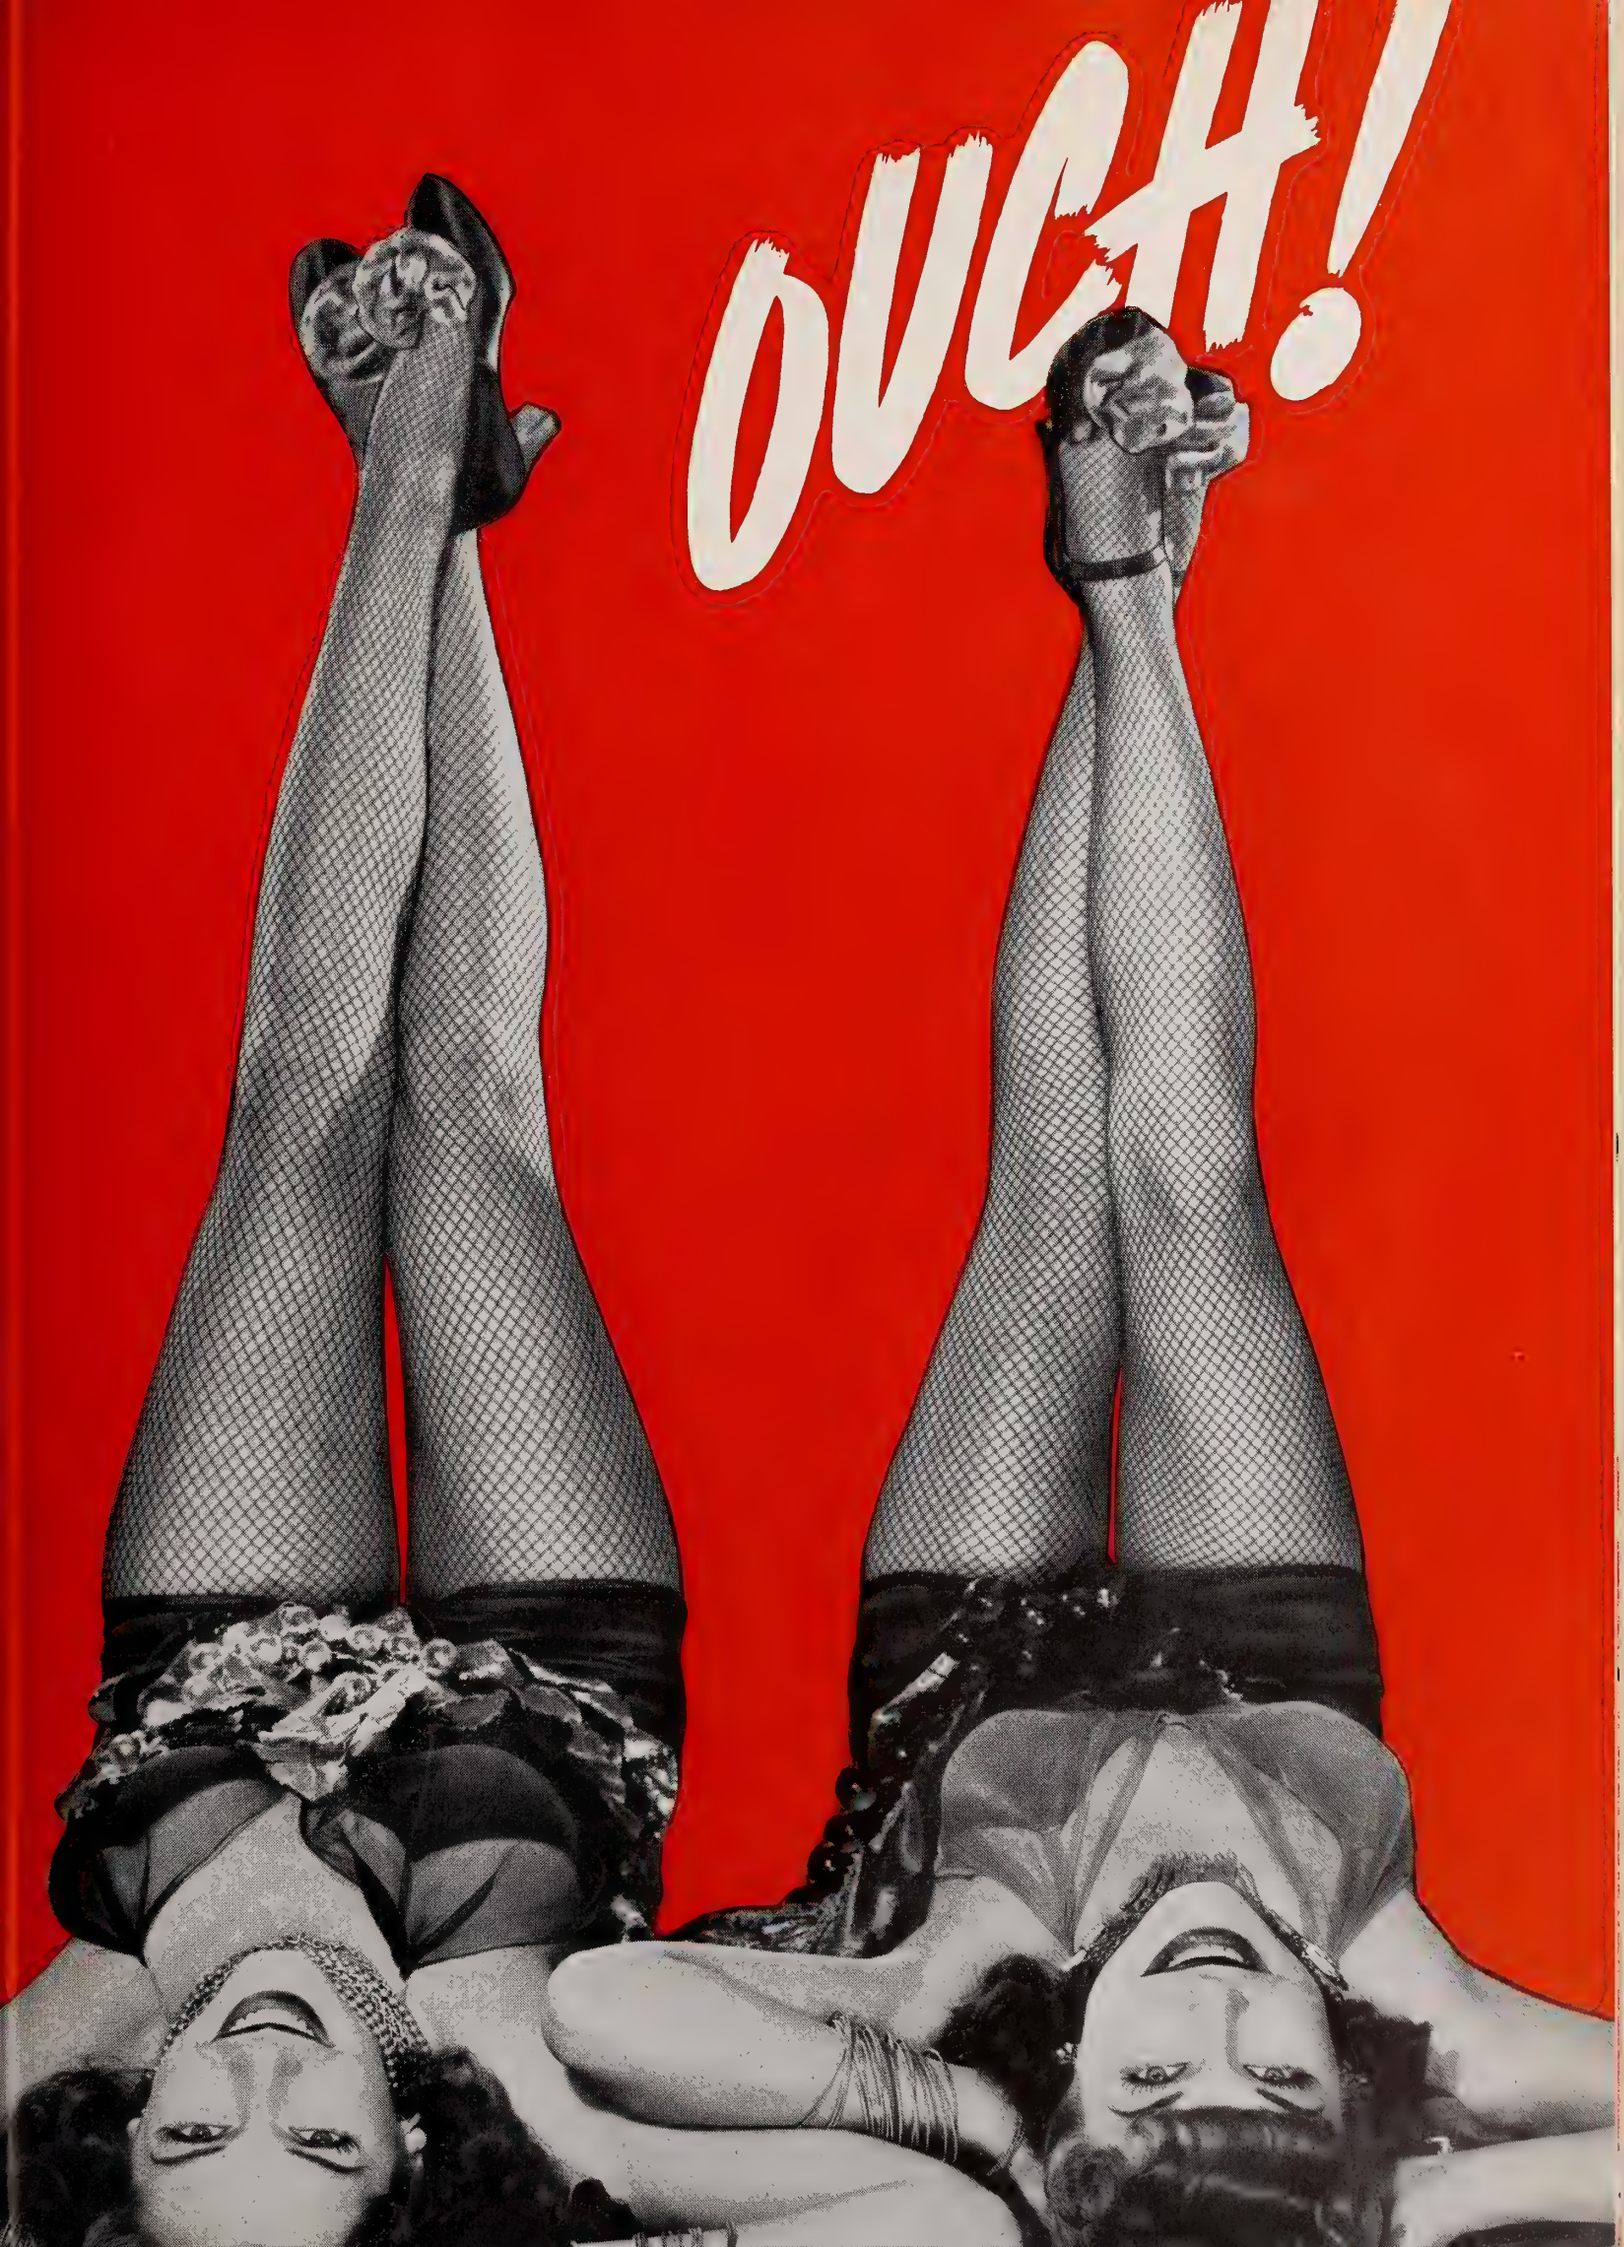
In Kansas City's third case, a clearance demand by D. R. Gifford, operating the Louis, a negro theatre at St. Joseph, Mo., 20th Century-Fox and MGM, defendants, have named the Durwood-Dubinsky Brothers circuit, operating the Missouri, Orpheum and Electric theatres as an interested party. Fox also cited the Crystal theatre as an intervenor.

Portland

O. J. Miller, executive secretary of the Independent theatre owners of Oregon at Portland this week charged that clearance conditions there result in disadvantages to all independent exhibitors. Citing the complaint of William Graeper's Egyptian theatre (reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week) he asserted:

"This arbitration is considered by all small theatre owners to be a test case and, at a trustee meeting of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, the directors voted to support substantially the Portland findings.

Robert H. Poole, executive secretary for the Pacific Coast, enroute to California stated, "The Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners is definitely protecting its four-unit member against the bigger companies and will exert every effort to see that unfair clearance in Oregon is corrected."



In other territories he asserted clearance provides for the public benefit, instead of the larger and higher admission houses.

Stessin Leaves A. A. A.

Lawrence Stessin, public relations director of the American Arbitration Association at New York, resigned this week to join the staff of the Labor Relations Institute. Prior to joining the AAA he was a staff member of the New York Times.

"Kampf" Adds Languages

The motion picture, "After Mein Kampf," originally produced in France with French dialogue and later produced in London with English dialogue has recently been completed in two additional languages, Spanish and Dutch, according to an announcement from Crystal Pictures in New York.

MAJORS ADOPT HANDS-OFF POLICY TOWARD ALLIED SPLIT ON 'UNITY'

Distributors Await Membership Plebescite Now in Progress; National Officers Confident Members Will Approve Plan

Distributors this week were hopeful the rank and file membership of Allied States Association would adopt the proposed all-industry unity plan presented at the 12th annual national convention in Philadelphia last week and rejected by the delegates, it was evidenced in the comments expressed by some home office representatives of the of the majors. Spokesmen for most of the majors indicated a hands-off policy, at least until the Allied internal fight should be settled by the plebiscite now in progress.

A. Montague, general sales manager for Columbia, said on Monday his company was "anxious and willing to be a part of any plan that will bring unity to this business. Unity at this time is probably even more important than good pictures."

An official at Twentieth Century-Fox said he had "read of Allied's meeting," but that his company had not yet come to any decision regarding proposed cooperation. "It is too bad," he said, "that they couldn't see eye to eye particularly now, when unity in all branches of the industry is so necessary," and he indicated that Fox probably would join with other distributors toward working out such a unity project.

Other home office sales representatives of the majors would not make any statement at this time concerning the Philadelphia story, but it is believed that in addition to Columbia and Fox, Universal, RKO, Warners and United Artists would follow the lead of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount, who pledged cooperation to Allied last week.

Four Units Pledge Support

On Monday, Col. H. A. Cole, national president of Allied, announced that four Allied units had pledged their support to the proposed "national liaison committee." They were Indiana, Maryland, Michigan and Minnesota. Illinois Allied was expected to take action early this week. Col. Cole expressed confidence that Allied members would vote ten to one for the adoption of the resolution which was voted down at the convention and he indicated that when results of the referendum vote were received, the organization would invite all branches and individuals of the industry to join in preparing the "peace and harmony" plan within and for the industry.

The plebiscite of independent exhibitors in the field was ordered by the board of directors of Allied on the resolution rejected by the Association's convention calling for the setting up of machinery to create an all-industry committee to deal with industry problems. Rejecting the convention sentiment on the grounds that it was not representative, the action was taken by the board following the resignation of the national Allied officers at a special executive meeting immediately upon the close of the 12th annual convention last Thursday in Philadelphia at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel.

Since the proposal had been passed unanimously by the board Monday, September 15th, the day before the opening of the three-day convention session, and was considered the "baby" of Commissioner Myers, the referendum, ordered to be held within the next ten days, is tantamount to a vote of confidence for the national Allied leaders.

A statement issued by Col. Cole and Commissioner Myers following the executive board session read:

"The board of directors held a special meeting after the convention closed. Resentful of reflections cast on their motives in the handling of the resolution for a Joint National Committee, the national officers resigned in a body.

"The Board declined the resignation and asked the officers to carry on for the time being.

"The Directors were strongly of the opinion that the vote by which the resolution was beaten in convention was not a representative vote. They expressed the view that the overwhelming majority of Allied members favor an effective liaison with other branches of the industry.

"Not a Test"

"They pointed to the fact that not more than half of those present voted; that men from the West representing hundreds of exhibitors were outvoted by a comparatively few individuals, representing only themselves, some of whom were not Allied members; that the margin was very close.

"Refusing to accept the vote as a test of exhibitor sentiment, the board decided to request the regional associations to poll their members on the issue within ten days. The resolution will thus be considered calmly and without the influence of impassioned convention oratory.

"The Board will accept the verdict of the plebiscite; it rejects the vote of the convention."

The setting up of an all-industry liaison committee was to be the climax of the three-day session. During the three days, Allied leaders impressed upon the need for an all-industry group, and support for such a unit was promised by William F. Rodgers, vice-president and general sales manager of Loew's, and Claude F. Lee, in charge of public relations for Paramount.

Opposition to the resolution, when it was brought up Thursday afternoon at the closing business session of the convention, was led by Nathan Yamins, of Massachusetts, former Allied president and a member of the board, who was absent from the board meeting which endorsed the liaison setup. Mr. Yamins urged that considerably more time be given to the study of the resolution and the convention resolved itself into a closed executive session to deliberate.

It is understood that the opponents expressed the fear that adoption of the resolution would result in Allied being "sold down the river," and that they were reluctant to have Allied associated with other exhibitor organizations.

Mr. Yamins declared that the resolution was a "sugar-coated" document and that, when it was analyzed, it would be found to be "poison." He asserted that the Allied board had acted in secrecy and charged that the resolution had not been put up to the directors in the first place. Both Col. Cole and Mr. Myers denied the charge and pointed out that Mr. Yamins was not present at the board meeting when the plan was brought up for discussion.

Commenting this week on the accusations hurled at Allied leaders by Mr. Yamins, Mr. Myers said: "Mr. Yamins assumed a grave responsibility when he accused the entire board of directors of 'railroading' the resolution for a joint conference committee; when he branded the movement as one to 'sell out' national Allied, and when, by his inflammatory attack, he side-tracked the movement towards unity in the face of great danger."

Mr. Myers previously castigated those Allied delegates who were instrumental in swaying convention sentiment against the measure. Last Thursday he said, "Certainly at a time when the motion picture industry is subjected to such heavy tax loads and its integrity is questioned because of political reasons, anyone throwing a monkey wrench into a machinery that calls for unity will have to account for his motives and actions." He added that it was gratifying the issue would not be left "in the air," but would be settled by a clear majority when a vote was called for independent exhibitors in the territory.

Warns on Taxes

Col. Cole, in setting the stage for the resolution's introduction, warned that the Senate Finance Committee "pulled a fast one" in making tax averages at 15 per cent instead of 10 per cent, and that if there was a joint industry unit, the picture industry could be better prepared to fight the tax loads.

"Those that know of the money needed by our government for national defense know that this is not the first tax to be imposed on theatres. It is only the beginning. Such a danger may strike at any time. The necessity is acute that before the emergency arises again, we prepare for it," Col. Cole said.

Following the closed session, when the resolution was rejected, the convention came to a close with addresses by Steve Broidy, Monogram general sales manager, who spoke on the problems of meeting the supply and demand of pictures; and E. A. Williford, of National Carbon Co. and president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, who assured delegates there would be no shortage of carbon. He cautioned, however, against stocking up, saying that there was enough carbon in stock for everybody for normal demands, but if exhibitors sent in orders for six months or a year ahead, the situation might change.

A plea for unity within the industry and that Allied support its national leaders was the keynote of the speeches given at the banquet in the evening, led by William F. Rodgers, vice-president and general sales manager for Loew's, Inc. Disappointment running high over the convention's failure to approve the all-industry committee resolution, similar expressions were voiced by Joseph Bernhard, Warner Theatres general manager; A. Montague, Columbia general sales manager; Jules Levey, Universal producer, and Commissioner Myers.

Mr. Rodgers urged that, if necessary, the delegates remain in Philadelphia for another day to give further consideration to the resolution. He said that he was not as much concerned over the passed resolution attacking the selling policies of distributors, "that is your privilege, as the failure to approve the later resolution.

NEW YORK ALLIED TO MEET IN OCTOBER

Pressure of convention business prevented the New York State unit of Allied States Association from holding a meeting last week to discuss plans for placing the unit on a permanent organization basis. The original meeting was scheduled for last Thursday, in Philadelphia, during the national convention but the group had to postpone the date until early in October, with Albany, N. Y., set for the place.

"I pleaded with you yesterday for unity," said Mr. Rodgers. "I am more interested in unity in this business, not for any selfish motives, but to see that everybody who contributes to the progress of this business lives in peace and harmony.

"I warned that the eyes of the industry are centered on Philadelphia. I am sorry you repudiated your principles and your leaders. I am not selfish in this and have no personal interest and nothing to gain personally. But for the interests of the industry, it doesn't look good to see you disagree with your leaders.

"If I were you, I would not leave Philadelphia until the situation was reconsidered. Stay an extra day if necessary, but give further consideration to the deliberations before you and support your leaders."

Mr. Bernhard said that he had come to the convention to pledge support to the all-industry measure and expressed disappointment that the program of unity was rejected by Allied.

"We have to have unity," said Mr. Bernhard. "We actually need it. It's most important that we get together, if only for a minimum program at the start. We showed that we can get together for the Government, for national defense and for the U. S. O. drive. I can't see why we can't get together for our own interests.

"After all, we all talk the same language; it is only that we have different problems."

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount Pictures already had signified their willingness to support any active step for the creation of a national liaison committee, as reported in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of September 20th, through Mr. Rodgers and Claude F. Lee, in charge of public relations for Paramount, who pledged cooperation of their respective companies last Wednesday, while addressing the Allied delegates. Mr. Rodgers asserted he was certain that the proposal would meet with responsive attention on the part of all distributors and pointed out that in the event the consent decree is changed, much could be accomplished by a united industry.

Pleads for Unity

Mr. Lee declared that in times of "industry-wide resistance to persecution, the natural human instinct of all of us is to come closer together under the threat of a common foe, to unite and resist a common menace. In these crises we develop a sense of dependence upon each other for the welfare of the whole." He queried, however, "If we have the strength in unity for the business of repelling a common foe, why isn't the same strength of unity a force and a power for accomplishment in maintaining the dignity and in advancing the general welfare of our business?"

Another expression of action for unity came from Al Steffes, Allied pioneer and leader, who could not be present at the convention, but who voiced his views in a letter to Sidney E. Samuelson, convention chairman.

Mr. Steffes said that unless one large industry organization was created, each individual and each branch would be conquered and destroyed as shamefully as the small nations of Europe were destroyed because they would not unite in one strong unit to save themselves. "You are being attacked quite severely from without as well as from within," he wrote. "Your patrons are deserting you in droves. The forming of one strong organization can, must and will be done if some of the surface hard feelings and petty differences are forgotten and that is deep as these feelings go, otherwise you would not have representatives of all branches of the industry present at your meeting today."

In addition to Allied officers and unit leaders, numerous representatives of other branches of the industry were present at the banquet, including Arthur Kelly, United Artists general sales manager; Arthur Greenblatt, of Producers Releasing Corp.; William A. Scully, Universal general sales manager; George Dembow, of National Screen Service; Paul Terry, of Terry Toons; Charles Reagan, assistant to the Paramount general sales manager; E. A. Williford, of National Carbon Co., and Ted Schlanger, Warner theatres zone manager in Philadelphia. Guests of honor were screen stars Bob Hope, Jerry Colonna and Carolyn Lee. Sidney E. Samuelson, convention chairman, was toastmaster.

Selling Terms Protested

Protests centering on new selling methods were voiced by Allied delegates in a resolution appealing to distributors to abandon these selling innovations, described as "new and dangerous," which, it is believed, are not warranted by the consent decree nor by present business conditions. The resolution called for exhibitors to resist the new methods and to insist that their deals be written "cleanly in accordance with methods which they fully understand which do not hold such grave danger in the future."

Attack on the sliding scale device was included in the resolution and it was pointed out that this method saps the profits from exhibition of films and increases the "domination of the distributors over the business and operations of the exhibitor." Other resolutions passed included those on the following points: retention by the distributors of the right to re-designate pictures at their sole discretion, notwithstanding that the films have been completed, trade shown and terms inserted in the schedules opposite the titles of pictures; emphasis put on overages, particularly the printed provision in one form for an overage of 50 per cent on all films, "plus the obvious fact that once this practice has been established there will be a constant temptation to lower the splitting points"; a resolution empowering Allied's board to "follow through on discussions of the ASCAP situation and take immediate action on whatever measures may be legal and effective to bring about relief to exhibitors."

The resolution calling for an all-industry committee sponsored by Allied States, which was approved by unanimous vote of the Board of Directors on Monday, Sept. 15, but was voted down by the delegates to the national convention during an executive session, at the final business session, declared as follows:

Resolved, by the Board of Directors of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors this 15th day of September, 1941, that we approve the plan for the establishment of a national joint conference committee of the several branches of the industry to promote the common interest of and foster co-operation among such branches.

Resolved, further, that the chairman be and he is hereby empowered and directed to appoint a committee of not to exceed five to meet and confer with like committees or individuals representing other branches and organizations of the industry with a view to carrying such plans into effect.

Resolved, further, that it is the sense of the Board that such national joint committee, when organized, shall in addition study the possibility and desirability of bringing the several branches and groups into a more elaborate and enduring form of industry organization and shall report their findings and recommendations to all branches and representative groups for adoption, revision or rejection.

And Be It Further Resolved that this resolution be reported to the 12th annual convention of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors now sitting in Philadelphia with the recommendation that it be adopted as a convention resolution.

SONJA HENIE NOW A CITIZEN

Sonja Henie, Norwegian stage and screen skating star, motored to Stamford, Conn., from New York last week and joined 49 other persons who took the oath of allegience in Naturalization Court as the final step in becoming a citizen of this country.

Franz Hoellering, German author of "The Defenders," also became a citizen at the same ceremony.

Arkansas ITO Convention

This week marks the annual autumn convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas at the Hotel Marion in Little Rock, which follows a meeting of the unit's board of directors. W. E. Malin, of Augusta, president of the organization; C. C. Mundo, Little Rock, vice president, and Henry Haven, Forrest City, secretary, led the convention assembly in discussing ITO problems.

Syracuse MPTO

The Syracuse unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners held a further meeting on Thursday to iron out difficulties in tackling the opening of big-time Bingo games by non-theatrical interests in that city. The principal game which has exhibitors worried is that sponsored by the local Knights of Columbus. Vice president Sidney L. Grossman of the unit presided at the meeting.

Montana ITOA

Exhibitors of the Montana Independent Theatre Owners Association met in Billings, Mont., last week to discuss many problems confronting the exhibitor industry, including the ASCAP situation. A banquet was held at the Billings Country Club at conclusion of the day's sessions. Stewart North and C. L. Griffith were in charge of the entertainment.

Exhibitors who attended the meeting were: Joe B. Moore, of Havre, Mont.; Herb Bonifas, Chinook; J. M. Suckstorff, Sidney; Rex Flint, Baker; Frank Faust, Forsyth; J. H. Moran, Laurel; H. G. Wells, Hardin; Tom Grady, Shelby; Herman J. Erie, Columbus; J. P. Erie, Ennis; M. F. Hanson, Ft. Benton; Homer Thompson, Three Forks; Mrs. E. J. Crary, Choteau; Finus Lewis, Livingston; Joe English, Anaconda; A. M. Russell, Bozeman; Jens Hensen, Deer Lodge; B. F. Sautter, Townsend; Roy McDaniels, Kalispell. Jimmy Dugan of Twentieth Century-Fox; Ed Loy, Republic; G. Glanfield, Paramount, and Heaton Randell and Joel Stone of National Theatre Supply were present at the banquet.

Barry and Levathes Shifted

Irving Barry, of National Theatres, and Peter Levathes, secretary to Spyros Skouras, have been shifted to the field, virtually completing decentralization of the New York home office. Mr. Barry has been transferred to the film booking department of the Evergreen circuit in Portland, Ore., and Mr. Levathes has taken a similar position in Milwaukee with Fox Wisconsin Theatres.

BUYING MOMENTUM GROWS AS NEW BLOCKS ARE RELEASED BY MAJORS

Dickering Over Prices Reported To Have Slowed Contracts for 1941-'42 Product; Circuit Buys in Key Territories Listed

Momentum in buying new season product is seen growing, in New York industry circles, now that the second blocks of pictures are being sold by the decree-bound majors, at prices varying from those asked for the first block.

Rumors of slow buying, and even of a "strike" by one large affiliated theatre circuit, had been impelled, it was said, by the belief of some operators that the prices asked by the majors for their first blocks might be precedents; and that if they were some hesitation must be used, in buying; that discussion and prolonged dickering was necessary.

However, this week, deals long delayed were being closed by many major circuits. This was seen by majors' sales managers as ending the "strike" reports and they predicted the buying trend would rapidly become pronounced as last year's product ceased to "cushion" the operators.

Some of the slowness in buying has also been attributed to the exhibitors' unfamiliarity with the new methods of selling.

West Coast Buys RKO

RKO's first block has been bought by the Fox West Coast Theatres circuit of 267 theatres; and also by the Butterfield circuit's 122 theatres in Michigan, the Warner Ohio Theatres' 33 houses, the Malco Circuit's 105 theatres in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee, the Commonwealth Theatres' 39 plants in Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, and Kansas, the Central States Circuit's 45 houses in Nebraska and Iowa, the Anderson circuit's nine theatres in Illinois, seven Harris-Voeller theatres in Idaho, Wyoming, and Oregon, and Barney Brotman's five theatres in Illinois.

Similarly, Republic has also sold its new pictures, in the ante-decree method, to the Butterfield and Central States chains; and also to the Paramount Richards-Saenger chain of 64 houses in Louisiana and area, Warners' 80 in the Pittsburgh territory, and 44 in the Washington area, the Florida State Circuit's 110, the Maine and New Hampshire Theatre Circuit of 30, the New England Interstate chain of 35, the 58 houses of the Publix-Great States circuit, in Illinois, the 27 Essaness theatres in Chicago, S. G. Gregory's 18 houses in Indiana and Illinois, the 138 houses of the Griffith circuit in the Southwest, the Schine circuit's 128 theatres in New York State and nearby area, the Sterling circuit's 18 theatres in Seattle, Si Fabian's 37 in New York, the T. and D. chain's 39 in California, the Blumenfeld circuit of the same state, and the J. J. Parker holdings in Oregon.

RKO's first block was also bought by 76 Warner Western Pennsylvania houses, 16 of United Detroit, 12 of the Y. and W. Circuit, of Indiana, 12 of the Ideal Amusement Company, Pennsylvania, approximately 50 each of the Fox Mid-West Amusement Corporation, Kansas City, and the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corporation. Milwaukee, 53 of the Lucas and Jenkins circuit in Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, 27 of the Maine and New Hampshire Circuit, 30 of the Affiliated Circuit, in Indiana and Kentucky, 32 of the Associated Playhouses, in New York and New Jersey, 50 Skouras theatres in the New York metropolitan area, 15 of the Consolidated Amusement circuit, same area, 11 Si Fabian theatres in New York and New Jersey, 40 of the Fox Intermountain chain in Colorado, 41 of the Warner Washington circuit, nine of the Manning and Wink interests in Georgia and Tennessee, nine John Servaas houses, same state, the Schine circuit's houses in the East, and the Sparks Florida circuit, 86 houses in the Wilby-Kincey circuit of the Southeast, 25 Kallett theatres in New York, 40 Century and 42 Randforce theatres, same state.

The first approved deal for the company's second block of five films was made last week with the Liberty Theatre, Burns, Oregon.

Wilby Kincey Buys MGM

The Wilby Kincey circuit of more than 100 theatres in the Southeast has bought MGM's first block of pictures, being the first Paramount affiliate to do so.

Meanwhile, other companies also concluded deals with circuits, for their first block of five, and for their individual pictures or entire season's product, according to the company and its position under the decree.

John J. Friedl's Paramount-affiliated Minnesota Amusement Company bought Twentieth Century-Fox's first and second blocks for all its theatres in North and South Dakota, and in Eau Claire, Wisconsin. Minnesota situations were not included because of that state's anti-decree law.

Under a special franchise the circuit is already taking MGM's new product, and has been negotiating for that of Paramount, Warners, RKO, and Columbia.

The Balaban and Katz and Great States Theatre Circuit, of the Mid-West, have bought MGM's first films.

From Chicago, it was reported last week that 70 per cent of the accounts in the southern part of the state had signed for Universal's new product. No confirmation of circuit deals reported, could be obtained in the company's New York office; but, over the weekend, film circles in that city asserted the distributor had signed the Warner circuit in entirety; and that William Scully, general sales manager of Universal, and aides, were to leave New York later this week for negotiations with National Theatres, Fox Wisconsin, Fox Midwest, Fox Intermountain and Fox West Coast.

Among the circuits which have bought Monogram's new films are the Maine and New Hampshire, the Graphic Theatres, nine houses of the Shea chain, New York, the Robb and Rowley, of Texas, the S. and S. Theatres Corporation, of Indiana, the New England Interstate, the New England Rifkin, the Fred E. Lieberman, same area, the Skirball circuit of Cleveland, and the Bijou Southern theatres.

Additional Republic 1941-42 product deals have been made with Frank H. Durkee's 26 theatres in Baltimore, Havre de Grace, and Annapolis, with Texas' Robb and Rowley circuit, and with National Theatres.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation has closed new season product deals with MGM, as mentioned—and also with Paramount, Warners, Twentieth Century Fox, RKO, and Columbia.

Sper's 13-week football short subject series has been booked by Fox West Coast Agency Corp., Florida State Theatres, Inc., Alliance Theatres, Inc., Griffith Amusement Co. and Consolidated Theatres Co., Fanchon and Marco Service Corp., Balaban and Katz, Publix Great States Theatres, Inc., Interstate Theatres, Inc., Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Telenews Theatres, Y. and W. 3,573 FIRMS PAY 1939 INCOME TAX

Only one-third of the amusement corporations of the country had taxable net incomes during 1939, it was reported from Washington, D. C., over last week end by the Internal Revenue Bureau in an analysis of corporation returns filed for that year.

Of the 10,426 corporations reporting, only 3,573 paid taxes, the Bureau reported, their gross income aggregating $822,904,000 and their net income $85,974,000, on which income taxes of $12,867,000 and excess profits taxes of $102,000 were reported paid.

Another 5,769 corporations, which did not pay tax, had combined gross income of $336,359,000, but a deficit, after deductions, of $26,683,000. The remaining corporations were inactive.

The taxpaying corporations, it was shown, paid cash dividends to stockholders of $39,109,000 and the untaxed corporations paid $1,902,000.

Fox Intermountain Gets Colorado Houses

Fox Intermountain Theatres has taken over the operation of two theatres in Colorado. The company has purchased the property of the Longmont at Longmont, from J. J. Goodstein, who operated the theatre, and has acquired by lease the America at Sterling, Colo., from Charles McIntyre.

The company has also completed a $10,000 remodeling job on the Iris theatre in Boulder, Colo.

Republic Merger

In Albany, N. Y., a certificate of merger had been issued by Secretary of State Michael F. Walsh to Republic Pictures Corporation, formed under New York laws, with the Republic Pictures Corp. of California. Papers to this effect were filed by J. E. McMahon, 1790 Broadway, New York.

Newsreel House for Seattle

Seattle, Wash., will get its first newsreel theatre shortly when John Danz's Capitol theatre, in the business district of the city, will open as the Telenews theatre. Operation of the new venture will be shared by Mr. Danz with the Telenews Co. of New York.

$350,000 RAISE WON BY UNIONS IN REVISION OF BASIC AGREEMENT

General 10% Increase Granted at Newark Discussions; IATSE Increases Would Bring Total Added Cost to $1,000,000

Raising studio costs approximately $350,000 yearly, a general ten per cent wage increase has been granted the locals of the American Federation of Labor international unions in the basic studio labor agreement, as a result of negotiations for renewal of that pact, held over the weekend at Newark, New Jersey.

The pact was renewed, effective next Wednesday, October 1st, for five years. Admitted for the first time, and bringing to seven the number of internationals in the pact, was the Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Alliance, members of which work in the restaurants and commissaries on the Hollywood lots.

Other internationals are the Teamsters and Chauffeurs, the Carpenters and Joiners, the Electrical Workers, the Plasterers, the Utility Workers, and the American Federation of Musicians.

Not a party to the weekend's negotiations was the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, representatives of which differed with their studio locals' business agents over reentrance into the pact. The IATSE withdrew several years ago, after locals won autonomy. Studio IATSE unions, pressing for wage increases, have been undecided about methods of achieving them.

IATSE Asks Wage Increase

On Monday, business agents of the IATSE locals, winning the right, from their international officers, to represent their locals in individual conferences with Mr. Casey, Mr. Pelton and others began negotiations for wage increases and altered working conditions. The method of conferring ended for the time being the possibility of IATSE re-entrance into the basic pact.

At the negotiations, demands were presented for studio technicians, utility workers, cameramen, laborers, electricians. It was said the producers' negotiating committee was avoiding settlement of jurisdictional claims, asserting this was the province of the unions.

Several weeks will probably be necessary to complete the IATSE negotiations, observers predicted. Demands are being made this week. Negotiations, properly, will begin later.

In addition to Mr. Casey and Mr. Pelton, on the producers' committee at the IATSE negotiations are: Fred S. Meyer, 20th Century-Fox; Charles Boren, Paramount; Sidney Rogell, RKO; Carroll Sax, Warners; Dave Garber, Universal, and Leonard Picker, Columbia

May Reach $1,000,000

Mr. Casey estimated increased costs resultant from the internationals' wage increases at $350,000 yearly. He added that, if the IATSE locals received a general 10 per cent increase the cost to studios, yearly, would total approximately $1,000,000.

Pay scales for the hotel and restaurant workers' studio local will be arranged later, Mr. Casey said. The American Federation of Musicians did not receive a 10 per cent pay increase at this time. It is covered in separate wage agreements.

RENEW BASIC PACT; ALSO GET SUBPOENAS

Executives of the majors, of Hollywood locals, and American Federation of Labor international unions, negotiating in Newark, New Jersey, over the weekend on renewal of the studio basic labor agreement and the ten per cent general wage increase granted, were paid a surprise visit. The intruder was a New York Federal Court process server, who, with subpoenas, requested their presence at the extortion trial, October 6th, of George E. Browne, IATSE president, and Willie Bioff, its Coast chief. Among those served were Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's; Barney Balaban, Paramount; W. C. Michel, 20th Century-Fox; George J. Schaefer, RKO; Pat Casey and Fred Pelton. Labor leaders subpoenaed included: Frank Carothers, William Hutchinson, Joseph Touhy, Joseph Cambianni, Joseph N. Weber, Ed Brown and Walter Redmond.

The approximately 35 conferees who met in Newark, were followed there by New York Federal Court subpoenas, directing them to be witnesses at the extortion trial of George E. Browne and Willie Bioff, president and vice-president, respectively, of the IATSE. Browne and Bioff are accused by a Federal grand jury indictment, of extorting $550,000 from Loew's, Twentieth Century-Fox, Warners, and Paramount; and, elsewhere on this page is carried the news that the grand jury is also investigating the finances of the IATSE, and, generally, the activities of labor leaders and others in the film industry, seeking to find violations of the Federal anti-racketeering act.

Executives Attend Meeting

Attending the meeting at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, were, in addition to Mr. Casey, Fred Pelton, also producers' labor representative; Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's; Barney Balaban and Charles Boren, Paramount; George J. Schaefer and Sidney Rogell, RKO; W. C. Michel, 20th Century-Fox; Carroll Sax, Warners; John J. O'Connor and Dave Garber, Universal, and Leonard Picker, Columbia.

Representing unions were: Frank Carothers of the Hollywood internationals' committee; William Hutchinson and J. W. Gillespie, Carpenters and Joiners; Joseph Touhy, teamsters; Joseph Cambrianni, Abe Muir, J. Skelton and Jack Flynn, carpenters; Joseph N. Weber, musicians; Edward J. Hillock, plumbers and steamfitters; Ed Brown and A. J. Speed, electrical workers; Walter Redmond and Ben Martinez, plasterers; L. Helm, utility workers; J. W. Gillette, studio musicians; H. Rohrback, utility workers, and Ed Flore and John M. Sargent, culinary workers.

In addition to the ten per cent general wage increase, the studio locals of the internationals won their demands for a six-hour call; that is, the right of workers called for any amount of time, to receive pay for six hours of work. This minimum pay arrangement had varied.

Chief opposition to representation for IATSE studio unions by its international officers had

Jury Asks for IATSE Books

The IATSE—International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, dominant film industry union—is under the scrutiny of a Federal Grand Jury.

The disclosure came Friday, September 19th, in New York Federal Court, where lawyers for George E. Browne, the union's president, were attempting to have quashed a subpoena directing him to produce union assessment records, for perusal by that jury, which has indicted him and his lieutenant, Willie Bioff, for extorting $550,000 from Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Warners, and Paramount.

When David Asch, associated with Martin Conboy, as Browne's counsel, unsuccessfully opposed the jury subpoena, before Federal Judge John W. Holland, Assistant United States Attorney John Burling said the jury was waiting to examine the financial books of the union.

He also disclosed that special membership fees in the IATSE are believed to total about $6,000,000 per year; and that Browne has sole control of this money and of the records.

Mr. Burling said, however, that the investigation of IATSE finances was not related to the extortion case, which goes to trial in the same court October 6th, after numerous postponements. He said it was part of a general scrutiny of activities in the film industry, which may violate the Federal anti-racketeering act, of which the extortions Browne and Bioff are accused of are also violations.

He added that the sum believed collected yearly from the approximately 125,000 members by Browne, was the result of a special two per cent assessment against their weekly wages, the purpose of which was "vague"; and that the regular books of the union do not account for the monies collected.

Books, Records Subpoenaed

Continued hearings Monday resulted in an order by Judge Holland that Browne appear in court Wednesday with books and records of union finances, and as a witness before the grand jury. Simultaneously, Judge Holland granted United States Attorney Mathias F. Correa a warrant for the arrest of Louis Kaufman, business agent of the Newark IATSE local, missing since August 14th, when a grand jury subpoena reached him.

Judge Holland on Monday qualified the order that Browne appear for jury questioning Wednesday, with the notation he could not be questioned about other items than the records and books remarked by the subpoena.

Mr. Conboy, chief Browne counsel, had argued against the subpoena because, he asserted, it would require Brown to testify against himself, in matters to be discussed in a case pending in court, the extortion case.

Mr. Conboy charged Mr. Correa with "using come from the Studio Laboratory Technicians Union, Local 683, which has negotiated a contract with producers.

Failing blanket reentrance into the pact by the IATSE, business agents of its locals were to press for their wage increases, in the mentioned conferences with Mr. Casey.

Readers Ratify Charter

Meanwhile, in New York, the Screen Guild Council's recommendation of several weeks ago that its member unions in the majors' home offices join the CIO, continues to reverberate.

The Screen Readers Guild, last week officially designated by the National Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for readers in those offices, on Friday, September 18th, ratified a temporary charter from the CIO United Office and Professional Workers of America.

The Loew-Metro Office Employees Guild voted, also last week, affiliation with the same CIO union. Union members in Columbia's home office have already voted affiliation. Those in Paramount, Fox, and Warners are reported favorable.

Also expected to act favorably is the Screen Publicists Guild, now negotiating with the majors for a closed shop contract.

AFM, Mutual Settle Strike

In radio, a national strike threat by the American Federation of Musicians against the Mutual Broadcasting System ended last week with the settlement of a dispute between the union and Mutual's outlet in Louisville, WGRC. The station agreed to hire five musicians, so that its music staff would compare with stations of similar size. The settlement was reached in the New York AFM office of James Caesar Petrillo, AFM president. The union had already banned the "feeding" of sustaining programs from dance orchestras to the network.

SMPAD Announces Officers

In Hollywood, 1941-42 officers and board members of the Society of Motion Picture Art Directors are Iward B. Ihnen, president; Carrol Clark, vice-president; Urie McCleary, secretary-treasurer; and Lewis Graber, and Maurice Bansford, on the board.

In St. Louis, the Maffitt Theatre remained closed because of a dispute with IATSE Local 6. The local had asked employment of an extra stagehand, whose time was to be divided between the Maffitt and the Pageant Theatre. The Maffitt's projectionists, of Local 43, refused to cross the Local 6 picket line.

Projectionist Strike Ends

An amicable agreement on wages and hours under a three-year contract brought to an end a 13-day strike of projector operators for the Jefferson Amusement Company at Orange, Tex., September 13. The Local 526 and A. M. Avery, Orange city manager for Jefferson, drew up the new contract which followed the first movie operators' strike in the history of Orange. While picket lines were maintained during the walkout at the Bengal, Strand and Gem theatres, no disturbances occurred.

The Pittsburgh projectionists' local has obtained new contracts, embodying small wage increases, from the city's circuit theatres, including those of Warners, Skirball, Harris, and Shea. The contract affects more than 80 projectionists.

The Screen and Public Taste In the War Days of 1918

THE customer's appetite for pictures drawn from headlines of the day was emphasized in 1918 by the success of "My Four Years in Germany," the motion picture version of Ambassador James W. Gerard's book of the same name, produced by Mark M. Dintenfass and the Warner Brothers. The production, one of record makers of its day, is recalled by this picture, taken February 9, 1918, at a dinner given Ambassador Gerard at the Hotel Astor, New York. The guest of honor is at the head of the table, with Harry Warner at his right and Mr. Dintenfass at his left. Sam Warner is at the extreme left and two places away from him is Daniel Frohman. Jack Warner is second from the right and Frank Ortega, editor of Cine-Mundial is sixth from the right.

The photograph is owned by Aaron Dintenfass Klein, nephew of the producer. Mr. Klein is now associated with Edward Finney, Monogram producer, whose company has just released "Gentleman from Dixie" and is now engaged in a remake of "Black Beauty."

the Grand Jury process for the purpose of preparing trial in the Brown-Bioff case" and added that the jury had completed its investigation, reached its final conclusion, and presented its accusation.

"Any attempt," he continued, "on the part of the United State Attorney to obtain evidence in connection with that indictment in this manner violates Browne's constitutional rights."

Mr. Correa countered with the statement the grand jury before which Browne was to appear Wednesday, was special, investigating "other matters, pertaining to the violation of the anti-racketeering act, perhaps not unrelated to the subject matter of the indictment—but, nevertheless, other matters."

Feinberg Opens Branch Agency

In observance of a new Pennsylvania state law which requires booking agencies to be licensed, the Joe Feinberg Agency of New York has opened a booking office in the Family Theatre, Scranton, Pa. A similar office is expected to be opened in Pittsburgh about Oct. 15.

Morrison Resigns From Artists Managers Guild

Leo Morrison one of the original members of the Artists Managers Guild, has announced his resignation from that group, charging that it operates for the benefit of a select group of a few members, that it failed to adopt promised measures to prevent client "raiding" among agents, and failed to provide disciplinary action to halt "raiding."

The direct cause of his resignation was a complaint registered with AMG concerning a dispute with another agency over asserted "unethical influencing of an important client to break a management contract" with Mr. Morrison. The agent has obtained a direct agency franchise from the Screen Actors Guild.

William Quinn Honored

William Quinn, newly appointed supervisor of Raybond Theatres of New York, was tendered a luncheon by circuit managers at the Hotel Astor last week. A desk set was presented him.

Scheibler Promoted

James E. Scheibler, Jr., has been promoted at the RKO exchange in Memphis, Tenn., from assistant booker to head booker and office manager.

RECORDS CLAIMED FOR NEW FILMS AS THEATRES REPORT ADDED GAINS

Warners Report "Sergt. York" 200% Better Than "Fighting 69th"; RKO, United Artists Announce Holdovers, Records

Attendance and gross business records are being set by new product; exhibitors are reporting gains in line with the increased tempo of spending throughout the country; and releases from distributors sales departments are studded these days with boastful claims of new records and bright predictions for the futures of their favorite pictures.

Despite all predictions that long-distance "premiere junkets" were a thing of the past, Warner Brothers announced this week plans for a premiere showing of "One Foot In Heaven" which Church dignitaries, industry executives, Hollywood stars, and press representatives from all sections of the country will attend. The premiere is to be held in Washington, D. C., and representatiyes of the east and west and in-between cities will be brought to the nation's capital by air, rail and bus for the opening.

At the same time Warner home office sales chiefs have been releasing statistics and figures on the success of such films as "Navy Blues" and "Sergeant York."

Not to be outdone, RKO and United Artists have also sent releases describing the successes and holdover engagements of their pictures.

Premiere in Washington

Warner Brothers' "One Foot in Heaven" will make its world premiere bow the night of October 2nd at the Earle theatre, Washington, D. C., before a first night audience of Church dignitaries, Senators, Congressmen, government officials, Army and Navy officers and representatives of the press. Fredric March and Martha Scott are co-starred in this screen version of the Hartzell Spence novel.

Specially chartered trains and planes will bring church leaders, press representatives and Hollywood luminaries to Washington from the west coast, New York and other key cities. A number of nationally known syndicated columnists will be among the group that will attend the premiere from New York. Fredric March and Martha Scott will head the group that will arrive in Washington from Hollywood by plane.

Irving Rapper directed "One Foot in Heaven" and Gene Lockhart, Beulah Bondi, Elizabeth Fraser, Harry Davenport, Laura Hope Crews and Grant Mitchell are among the long list of top notch players included in the cast.

Advertising and exploitation budget allocated the picture by S. Charles Einfeld is reported to be one of the largest in the company's history, according to Warners, and will be one of the biggest budgets to be set on any individual picture on the 1941-42 program. Final details of the advertising and publicity campaign are now being set by Mr. Einfeld and Mort Blumenstock. Every key city opening will be given special attention by field men and members of the home office staff specially assigned to work on the picture, the company said.

The film, along with "The Maltese Falcon," will be trade-shown September 29th in New York only. Trade-showings for the rest of the country will be announced next week.

MICKEY MOUSE 13 YEARS OLD

Mickey Mouse, currently starring in "Fantasia" and many short subjects throughout the country, celebrates his 13th birthday on Saturday, September 27th.

Mickey was born on a train just 13 years ago. He was given life by Walt Disney, who, unable to sleep in his berth on a train, began to scribble with a pad and pencil.

Back in Hollywood Mickey was dipped into an inkpot and signed up. Several shorts were made before the right one struck Mr. Disney as good enough for public entertainment. "Steamboat Willie" was the initial venture and was first shown at the Colony theatre in New York (now the Broadway theatre where "Fantasia" is running).

A full length Mickey Mouse feature, co-starring Minnie Mouse, is on the Disney schedule for next season.

Doing above average business in its first three days at the Strand theatre in New York, Warner Brothers' "Navy Blues" piled up a gross of $27,050 for the weekend, the company announced. Indications pointed to a solid first-week business well above the $40,000 mark. By comparison, the company pointed out, the Bette Davis-James Cagney vehicle, "The Bride Came C.O.D.," grossed only $39,000 for its initial opening week.

In Canton, Ohio, "Navy Blues" is reported to have opened to business 40 per cent ahead of "Strawberry Blonde," the previous record holder for that situation. The company also claims exceptional business in Albany, N. Y., and Milwaukee.

Holdovers for "Kane"

Opening for the first time at popular prices at the Palace theatre in New York, and the RKO Albee theatre in Brooklyn, "Citizen Kane" played to capacity business during its first week and was held for a second week in both situations. RKO reports the Orson Welles' production has rolled up the biggest grosses for the theatres in two years, topping that of the Ginger Rogers' "Kitty Foyle" in the same theatres.

A third hold over for "Citizen Kane" in the district is that at Proctor's theatre in Newark, N. J., where the gross almost equalled that of "Kitty Foyle," the company said.

Before starting its popular price run "Kane" had played the Palace theatre for nine consecutive weeks at $2.20 top price.

Third week hold overs are reported for the Orson Welles production from Boston, San Francisco, Washington, Cincinnati and Chicago, while Rochester, Kansas City, Buffalo, Columbus, Dayton, New Orleans, Denver and Omaha were added to the list of second week engagements.

Gabriel Pascal's film production of George Bernard Shaw's "Major Barbara" is being held over in many situations in the United States and Canada according to a report from United Artists. The film, in its second week at the Apollo theatre in Chicago, grossed 160 per cent of average in its first four days of its run.

In San Francisco, where the picture reopened the United Artists theatre for the new season, the picture was reported to have held up well in its first two weeks engagements.

The Elgin theatre, in Ottawa, also held "Major Barbara" for a second week, following a sell-out premiere for Canadian royalty and society.

"New Wine," the William Sekely production co-starring Ilona Massey and Alan Curtis, is being held for a second week at the Orpheum theatre in Montreal. The picture grossed 147 per cent of average in its first week, and indications are that it will continue for an indefinite run. United Artists is also releasing this picture.

"Vatican" Opens in New York

Notables from various walks of life attended the New York premiere of the March of Time's full-length feature "The Story of the Vatican," at the Belmont theatre Friday evening, September 19th.

Among those attending were Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen, who is the commentator for the film, Ed Sullivan, Jessica Dragonet, Monsignor John J. Casey, Lester Stone, Major Robert Patterson, James Mulvey, Ferdinand Pecora, Commedatore Dott.

Also, Kenneth McGowan, John C. Kelly, Louis Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Waverly Root, Captain Pierre de Caillaux, Rev. Robert L. Gannon, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton P. Sheehan, Laurette Taylor, Stephen S. Jackson, Daniel P. Higgins, Charles H. Ridder, Mr. and Mrs. Basil Harris, Rev. F. S. Talbot, S.J., and many others.

In two pre-release engagements representative of east and middle west, "Hold Back the Dawn," co-starring Charles Boyer, Olivia de Havilland and Paulette Goddard, is proving successful at the box office, Paramount announced this week, with grosses exceeding all of Paramount's hit pictures of recent months except "Caught in the Draft," the top money picture of the year for that company.

Opening at the Denham theatre in Denver last Friday, "Hold Back the Dawn" has exceeded the grosses taken by "Aloma of the South Seas," "The Lady Eve," "Virginia," "Buck Benny Rides Again," "The Road to Singapore" and "The Ghost Breakers."

In its second week at the Metropolitan theatre in Boston, "Hold Back the Dawn" has nearly equalled the receipts of "Caught in the Draft" in its second week at the Hub theatre, the company said.

"Little Foxes" Campaign

Terry Turner, head of RKO's field exploitation staff, left for Washington, D. C., last Friday, September 19th, as his initial stop in a tour of 15 cities in which campaigns will be set for the opening of "The Little Foxes." He will also cover New Orleans, Omaha, Denver, Des Moines, Chicago, Champaign, Kansas City, Rochester, St. Louis, Boston, Providence, Lowell, Newark and Trenton.

In Atlantic City, N. J., "The Little Foxes" wound up its third first-run week at the Virginia theatre with one of the top grosses for the house in several months, RKO reported. The business has bettered that of "Kitty Foyle's" second week in the same theatre by a considerable margin.

"The Little Foxes" opened at the Warner theatre in Atlantic City, was moved to the Stanley for its second week and then to the Virginia theatre for the third week.

"YANK" CARNIVAL SET

"'Sergeant York' will be the greatest earning picture of this year and will be the greatest earning power picture Warner Brothers has had in 12 years," Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, announced Monday.

"Reports of seven pre-release engagements of the picture throughout the country reached this (New York) office this morning. These reports represent a cross section of business ranging from first runs in Los Angeles and Hollywood to Amsterdam, N. Y.; from Cumberland, Md., to Nashville, Tenn. In every instance the picture has run from 35 per cent to almost 200 per cent ahead of 'The Fighting 69th,' a picture which established all time records for business in most of these situations, not only for this company's pictures, but for their entire history as film theatres.

"Public responses to these openings proves the eagerness of the people of this country to see this picture. We tested 'Sergeant York' in a number of situations to try and determine a price policy fair to the public and equally as fair to Warner Brothers; taking into consideration," Mr. Sears said, "the more than $3,000,000 we have expended to date on its production and merchandising. I am confident that the minimum admission scale of 55 cents for evening performances; 40 cents for matinees, and 25 cents for children is proving to be the equitable scale.

"I believe that 'Sergeant York' will take its place among the all-time top money making pictures produced to date by the film industry; certainly the biggest grosser ever to go on the books of Warner Brothers.

Seven Openings Reported

"It has opened at the Avon theatre, Watertown, N. Y.; the Ritz, San Bernardino, Cal.; The Strand, Cumberland, Md.; the Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn.; the Rialto, Amsterdam, N. Y., and the Hollywood and Downtown, Los Angeles. Operators of these theatres know what it is doing for them," Mr. Sears concluded, "and I believe they will concur with everything I have said."

"Sergeant York" will make its long-delayed opening in Philadelphia at Warner's Aldine theatre on or about October 15th, following the run of "Lydia" at the theatre. The picture, originally scheduled to open in August in connection with the Veterans of Foreign Wars convention in that city, will be shown continuously at advance prices.

Meanwhile, "Sergeant York," completing its sixth week at the Hollywood theatre on Broadway, after moving up the block from the Astor, chalked up a week's gross of $20,340, Warners report. The picture has now earned over $250,000 in its Broadway first run, going over $100,000 during its run at the Astor theatre and totaling more than $150,000 additional during its run to date at the Hollywood.

On Friday, September 19th, "York" opened at the Knickerbocker theatre in Nashville, Tenn., to business that broke all house records. Tony Sudekum, chairman of the "York Day" committee and operator of the Crescent circuit, Governor Prentice Cooper, Mayor Thomas Cummings, Pastor Pile and other state and civic officials served on the committee which arranged the all-day celebration re-creating the first time Sergeant York returned to Nashville as a hero.

The all-day holiday included the re-naming of Sixth Avenue as Sergeant York Avenue, a reception at the State Capitol, another reception at the State Fair Grounds, a night reception for all state, civic and other officials and legionnaires and a broadcast over station WLAC. On the stage of the Knickerbocker, Sergeant York, Governor Cooper, and others made speeches and Mrs. York talked to Joan Leslie in Hollywood over a long-distance hook-up. The phone conversation was amplified throughout the theatre.

On October 3rd, "Sergeant York" will open at the Penn theatre in Pittsburgh, on the wave of a local radio publicity campaign that will garner more air time in the next week than any picture ever to open in the city, Warners say. Hillbilly bands, commanding some of the largest listening audiences in that area will dedicate a number to the Warner film on each program during the week. In addition spot announcements will be made to tie in with the air "breaks."

The picture has been set to open in the Strand theatre in New York October 17th, following its run at the Hollywood.

Carnival for "Yank"

Stage and radio entertainers, name bands and members of current Broadway productions, including the entire cast of "Hellzapoppin," will appear at the "Yank in the R.A.F." outdoor carnival and mardi gras which will be held Friday in conjunction with the world premiere of "A Yank in the R.A.F." at the Roxy theatre in New York. The carnival will be held in the parking lot in the rear of the theatre, which will be converted into a "Midway" for the occasion, and the proceeds will go to the British American Ambulance Corps for the purchase of ambulances and medical supplies to be sent overseas.

The list of entertainers and band leaders is headed by Bill Robinson, Jimmy Savo, Jane Pickens, Zeke Manners, Mark Warnow, Shep Fields, Ted Strater, Dick Todd, Ted Steele, Art Green, Vincent Lopez, Bob Chester, Eddie Duchin, Johnny Long, Vaughan Monroe, Sammy White, and members of the casts of "Lady in the Dark," "Panama Hattie" and "Pal Joey."

A dance floor has been erected in the lot, where showgirls from these and other Broadway hits, and models will dance with the public on a "dime-a-dance" basis. Another feature of the entertainment will be the reappearance on their old stand of "The Three Pitchmen," who started on that location as street pitchmen, and are now starred in the "Crazy House" show. Charmaine, a burlesque queen, is also scheduled to perform in the interests of overseas aid.

The engagement of Alexander Korda's "Lydia" at the Radio City Music Hall points to a gross of more than $100,000 for its first week, United Artists has announced.

"Dumbo" Trade Shows

Trade screenings of Walt Disney's "Dumbo" have been scheduled by RKO Radio Pictures, the distributors, for Tuesday, September 30th, at 2:30 P.M., in 32 key cities throughout the country. Release for the new Disney film has been set for October 31st, through RKO. All of the trade showings were fixed for September 30th, at the same time, with the exception of the New York branch showing, to be held at 11:30 A.M., at the Broadway Theatre.

Extensive exploitation and promotion plans for "Dumbo" are now under way at the Disney New York office and through RKO. More than 100 leading department stores in the country will feature "Dumbo" displays in their windows, toy departments and local newspaper advertising for the period from Thanksgiving to Christmas.

Still Delay Minnesota Law Ruling

Film industry attorneys and exchanges in Minneapolis, chief film distributing center of Minnesota, marked time this week, awaiting decision of Ramsey County district court Judge Hugo Hanft, on a temporary injunction to prevent enforcement of the state's law forbidding majors to sell films in any manner but en masse, with a 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

Six majors—the decree-bound five, and United Artists—petitioned for the injunction, and aired their arguments in Judge Hanft's court, in St. Paul, nearby city, several weeks ago. They also plan to ask a permanent injunction and a ruling on the law's constitutionality.

Their briefs, lengthy and involved, are said to have occasioned the delay, which has hamstrung selling of the majors affected; although the "little two," Columbia and Universal, and the independent film companies are operating freely.

Meanwhile, from Washington came word of possible Department of Justice delay in prosecution of its second "field" anti-trust case, that against the Schine circuit, Columbia, United Artists, and Universal, in Buffalo Federal Court. Department spokesmen said the trial might not begin before January.

Last week, Schine attorneys filed interrogatories to be answered by the Department within 20 days. The interrogatories, in 44 pages, ask for more details in the Government's complaint and bill of particulars.

On Monday, there was a hearing in New Haven Federal Court on motion of the plaintiffs in the Pickwick Theatre, Greenwich, $5,452,575 anti-trust suit against the majors, asking dismissal of their "separate defenses," which, in turn, seek dismissal of the action.

The Pickwick motion to dismiss defendants' "separate defenses" was granted Tuesday.

Exploitation Men Shifted by RKO

Several changes in the RKO field exploitation staff have been made by Terry Turner, head of the staff. Henry Howard has been transferred from the Prairie district to cover Seattle, Portland and Vancouver, and Fred Calvin has been assigned to the Prairie district. Eddie Rivers has been given the St. Louis territory in addition to Cincinnati and Indianapolis. Eddie Barr is now making his headquarters in Kansas City, which has been added to Omaha and Des Moines as his territory.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

In "Flicker Memories," a new short subject, MGM ribs exhibitors, from the days when the theatre owner was also manager, ticket taker, usher, porter, janitor and when, between reels, slides were flashed on the screen with such trenchant messages as "Ladies will remove their hats. Others must!"

We know of one operator who locked his theatre doors at show time. Anyone arriving for the performance after that hour had to ring a bell, to signal to the manager to come down from the projection room—where he was running the machine—and let the customer into the house.

Versatility with a capital V is the characteristic of Ivan L. Haley, manager of the Mayfair and Dundas Theatres in Dartmouth, New Brunswick, Canada. When the Mayfair was being built two years ago, as a de luxe house, Franklin & Herschorn, the sponsors, did not engage a contractor for the project. They handed everything over to Haley, who directed the construction work from the ground up to the roof, and also supervised the outfitting of the finished theatre, completing one of the most ornate jobs in the eastern Canadian theatre field, and without a hitch. During the building and equipping process he handled the bricklayers, masons, carpenters, electricians, painters, tilers, plumbers, steamfitters, sound technicians.

Manager Haley has a potent flair for machinery and is a talented machinist. He is a skilled cameraman and projectionist. Often, he exhibits his own pictures, and operates a machine for charity, including entertainments for soldiers, sailors and air-forcemen. Incidentally, he is in charge of all amusement programs for the servicemen held in the Dartmouth area.

He has been at work on a plan to thwart enemy air bombers and has submitted his brain child to the national research council of Canada. The council has highly complimented him on his work in this connection, and disclosed it is under minute consideration and tests, the plan having been referred to the British defense authorities. In spite of his diversified activities, and, on the side, he manages two theatres.

Hollywood, of all places, is going to make "Marriage Is a Private Affair," via MGM. Furthermore, the same company is going to do "Never Love a Stranger."

COLUMBIA PICTURES' Hal Hode, at the home office in New York, came across something interesting as the result of correspondence with a retired sailor whose name is Gordon E. Wykes. He is at the U. S. Naval Home in Philadelphia and his hobby is collecting stills of early vintage movies.

According to Wykes, his hobby led him to contact the estate of Lotta M. Crabtree who, when she died, left over $4,000,000. According to the terms of the will, the interest of her fortune is to be used in the form of monthly pensions of $30, to veterans of World War I who can establish that they lived in Massachusetts or California up to the time they went to war and served in outfits which came from those states, serving in those outfits all during the last conflict. If by reason of decimations the units were regrouped into other units which hailed from other States, or if any of the Massachusetts or California soldiers became casualties and upon recovery were transferred to units hailing from other States, such men cannot qualify for the Crabtree pension.

While, according to the informant, it would appear as though a lot of men would automatically qualify for the pension, the fact is that relatively few have been able to establish claims to it beyond all legal doubt. Incidentally, an additional requirement is that the claimants must now be residents of Massachusetts or California and must not be recipients of any aid from any other similar source and at the same time must be in genuine need of same. Incidentally the address of the estate of "Lotta M. Crabtree" is The Park Theatre Building, Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

The Pacific Coast Association of Magicians has in effect a decision, made at their annual convention, that, in the interest of economy, the trick would be abandoned because it requires too many props and is too cumbersome to transport. Equipment Note, being a report from Gertrude Lander, our "sees everything" correspondent in New Haven:

The Paramount Theatre, New Haven, is the first house in this district to install a popcorn vender in the lobby. The installation was made after enlargement of the candy stand, moving of checkroom, installation of a coca-cola dispenser and target gun installation in the men's room.

A communique from Loew's in St. Louis says M-G-M's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," really is frightening. A wager was made between several employes and two Negro porters that the two wouldn't sit through a screening of the film—but the white workers failed to specify the place of the screening. Arrangements were made to hold the showing in a cemetery. Portable equipment was used. The two porters fled after 30 minutes and didn't return until three days later.

Subscribers to this publication, delivered so promptly to their door by reason of Circulation Manager William McDonnell's devotion to the interests of its readership, might be pleased to earn that MGM in Culver City, Calif., has announced the incorporation of not one but two featured solo dance numbers for Ray MacDonald, his son, in "Babes on Broadway," the Mickey Rooney-Judy Garland musical.

Readers will recall that the young man's performance in "Life Begins for Andy Hardy," his first film, had newspaper writers writing enconiums and predictions about him before the film got into first run.

It now appears to be something of a break, in view of the extremity to which the studio had to go to get Laraine Day killed out of the "Dr. Kildare" series for bigger things, that the script of the "Life Begins" job got MacDonald killed out of the series before his continuance in the Hardy adventures became mandatory.

Undisclosed until now, by the way, is the fact that the young man in discussion, on being discovered by the autograph hunters as among those present at the California preview of his first film, slid down out of sight and hid under a row of seats to escape the fans intent upon congratulating him. Our California informant, witness to this unseemly burst of modesty, opines that MGM will coach him over that hurdle successfully.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Dream Comes True

The dream of pioneer founders of the Motion Picture Relief Fund, intra-industry organization which takes care of Hollywood's own, is a step nearer completion this week.

Sunday, ground was broken for the Motion Picture Country Home, where the industry's workers who have met temporary reverses will be cared for.

With impressive ceremonies including a coast to coast CBS hookup, construction of the first unit of the establishment was begun on 41 acres of rolling terrain in Woodland Hills, in San Fernando Valley near Calabasas.

Funds for the home were raised through the Screen Guild radio show, sponsored on CBS by the Gulf Oil Company which paid $10,000 weekly to the MPRF for the services of actors, writers and directors in presenting the program.

Among those participating in the ceremony was Mary Pickford, one of the founders of the Motion Picture War Service Association, the predecessor of the MPRF. The association was formed to take care of the industry's needy during World War I. Several years later, in 1919, the MPRF came into being to continue the relief activities.

Since that time, the leaders of the Fund had dreamed of establishing a home to care for the needy.

Participating in the ceremonies were Jean Hersholt, present president of the Fund; Y. Frank Freeman, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers; Edward Arnold, president of the Screen Actors Guild; George Stevens, president of the Screen Directors Guild; Sheridan Gibney, president of the Screen Writers Guild; and Roger Pryor, who acted as master of ceremonies.

With the property including 16 acres of citrus trees and 25 acres of walnut groves, the buildings ultimately will occupy nine acres.

The first series of buildings will house 40 persons, and will be gradually expanded to take care of 165.

There will be from two to six units per building, with each unit including a sitting room with a large bed alcove, bathroom and dressing room.

The central building group will be made up of the administration unit of dining room, recreation hall, stage and projection room, complete kitchen with an outside dining terrace, a large lounge and library. A health unit will consist of a ten-bedroom hospital with complete facilities for guests who are convalescing. Complete emergency facilities, both medical and dental, will be supplied later, along with a complete therapeutic unit.

The fund also plans a 550-seat theatre for legitimate stage productions, swimming pool, horseshoe court, croquet field, and gardens.

Contract for the construction of the home has been awarded, after opening sealed bids, to the Joshua H. Marks-Charde firm of Los Angeles. William L. Pereira, consulting architect for Paramount studios, designed the layout.

Among those donating checks for the construction of the units are Otto Kruger and his daughter Ottilie; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Arnold, Jean Hersholt, Osa Massen, Billie Burke, and Ralph Morgan. The British actors, writers and directors in Hollywood have banded together to donate another unit.

Approximately $360,000 was expended in 1940 by the Fund on 8,095 relief cases. In 1919, the fund handled 18 cases.

Eligible for aid are those persons who have earned their livelihood in motion picture production for at least three consecutive years.

HOLLYWOOD ENVOY REPORTS CONFIDENCE

Hollywood film and radio quarters heard good news this week from Arthur Eddy, long time New York trade press representative, later Warner studio public relations contact, returning from an eight-weeks tour of 45 cities in which he visited exhibitors and radio editors in the interests of Rinso's CBS Edward G. Robinson program, "Big Town", which he will continue to represent in its public relationships for a second year.

Exhibitors across the country told this envoy from the seat of production that they are looking forward to a season of revitalized patronage, due to increased employment, augmented payroll scales and improvement in product, this last foreshadowed by the first trade-showings.

On the point of expectancy with respect to effects of the Consent Decree upon practical operation of their business, said Mr. Eddy, exhibitors displayed some variation of attitude but no apprehension. Neither was optimism rampant, he said.

Cooperation between radio editors and program sources has attained to a state of harmony, auguring benefits to both ends and that important middle—the public—according to his observations.

This week Monday Mr. Eddy established his own public relations bureau in Hollywood and will handle both film and radio clients.

Burma Convoy

(Universal, 1941-42)

Topical Melodrama

Produced with a clear conception of melodramatic values by Marshall Grant and directed for all that's in it, which is quite a lot, by Noel N. Smith, this action-film integrated with the news of the day contains a maximum of thrill, suspense and the related ingredients of thrilling entertainment for followers of adventure pictures.

It is to be recorded that, although the story pertains to the trucking of munitions along the Burma Road to the Chinese army under British direction and with some Americans participating in the proceedings, there is no dialogue reference to Japan, and the parachute troops who attempt to sabotage the convoy are identified as Chinese insurrectionists.

Uniqueness of scene is an asset to the enterprise, and conciseness of plot prevents lagging or confusion. An amplitude of fighting, by fist, by knife and by firearms, keeps interest high and action headlong.

Synopsized on page 137 of your Product Digest, the picture is a timely number suitable for exhibition in any and all places for audiences of all ages.

Previewed at the studio for a trade press group which pronounced it a high point in the company's flow of adventure films.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Mr. Celebrity

(Producers Releasing Corp., 1941-42)

Human Interest Comedy

One of the most substantial supporting program films to come out of Hollywood, regardless of budget, "Mr. Celebrity" contains just about everything from heart tugs, comedy, and action to nostalgia, all neatly wrapped up and aimed at every type of audience. Having a horse-racing background, it also tells the story of an orphaned boy whose grandparents want to obtain his custody and take him away from his uncle, a veterinary. Their destinies become entwined with those of a group of former "greats"—film stars, a boxer, a lawyer, a jockey, bound together by common interest in racing a horse which seems the way to prosperity.

Playing themselves are Francis X. Bushman, Clara Kimball Young and Jim Jeffries, the sight of whom will awaken memories of film goers and sports fans of a generation or more ago. Little Buzzy Henry, as the boy; James Seay, as the uncle, Doris Day, William Halligan, Gavin Gordon, Johnny Berkes, Jack Baxley, Larry Grey, John E. Ince, and a host of others complete the cast, all of them delivering knockout performances under the able creditable guidance of director William Beaudine.

George R. Batcheller, in charge of production for P. R. C., and Martin Mooney, making his debut as a producer, have achieved a near miracle in mounting the picture, giving it qualities many times surpassing the budgetary confines.

The film is an all around remarkable job from cast, story, direction, production down and up.

Previewed at the Academy Lounge projection room, Hollywood, Roosevelt Hotel, Hollywood, to a press and professional audience, wise in the ways of film making, which was amazed by the qualities of the film. It made a hit such as few pictures have.—V. K.

SETOA Hits Fifth Columnists

The Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, in the course of their convention in Jacksonville, Florida, adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, our country and our kind of world are today subjected to one of the most vicious assaults in all history by those who have made sabotage, espionage and deception the chief instrument of their evil policy, and,

"Whereas, it has been the policy of the dictators who hurl such assaults, not only to strike from the outside but to bore from within the body politics of their enemies, and,

"Whereas, a nation is no stronger than its spirit and its unity and the morale of the people, now,

"Therefore, we, the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, do hereby denounce all those agencies and efforts designed to undermine the foundations of our institution, to produce dissension and confusion amongst our people, to break down the morale of our citizens and to paralyze the will and the mind of this nation to defend itself and remain a great and free land.

"Be it further resolved that we, the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, do further commend and endorse all those governmental agencies such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Intelligence units of the Army and Navy, the state, county and municipal police officers and all civic and patriotic organizations who have made it their purpose to ferret out these sinister and insidious agencies and all others who are giving aid or comfort to our dictator enemies and trying to destroy the safety and security of our land.

"Be it further resolved, that we heartily endorse the courageous and worthy American leadership of our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his heroic defense of our country, our continent and democracy of the world.

"Be it further resolved, that we do call upon the President to strengthen and add to those Federal agencies which are engaged in fighting against the despised Fifth Columnist, the Trojan Horse and other un-American influences which have been gnawing at the vitals of our country.

"Be it further resolved that we, the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association in convention assembled at Jacksonville, Florida, September 9th, 1941, do call upon the public to lend all possible cooperation to federal, state and municipal agencies as well as to all worthy patriotic organizations endeavoring at this crucial time to defend our land, our homes and all that we love.

"Be it further resolved, that copies of this resolution to sent to the President of the United States, to each member of the House and Senate, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and to the press."

MEXICAN UNION PLANS TO CLOSE ALL OFFICES

Federation Threatens Complete Shutdown of U. S. Distributors After September 29 Deadline

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS

in Mexico City

New aspects of the conflict between the National Cinematographic Workers Union and the eight major American distributors have developed since the union called a strike on September 17th against Warner Brothers having previously called one against Metro Goldwyn Mayer and Columbia. Opinion in the Mexican film industry, especially among exhibitors, is that the union will go through with its strike against the five remaining distributors when the respite allowed the distributors by the union is at an end on September 29th. It is also expected that when the contracts of the American film companies with the Mexican theatres expires on October 2nd, the country will be without major Hollywood product.

Much speculation has been inspired by the remarks of Lic. Javier Rojo Gomez, Mayor of Mexico City, who has been trying to negotiate a contract, after he had been interviewed by Pedro Tellez Vargas and Salvador Carrillo, union officials, following the strike against Warners.

"The Government is seeking a solution of the cinematographic problems," Mayor Gomez said, "and will take the measures that the situation demands to prevent the closure of the cinemas, for it regards them as important sources of work and diversion that is highly important in our social life."

Investigation Asked

Just what is meant by the government taking measures "that the situation demands" to prevent the closure of theatres is the subject of much discussion, in view of the fact that Srs. Tellez Vargas and Carrillo have admitted that they have been conducting informal conversations with the Ministry of the Interior.

A new and interesting development is the presentation to the Senate by Senator Fernando Amilpa of a proposition calling for a senatorial investigation of the controversy. In presenting his bill, Senator Amilpa said the Americans had "persecuted" Mexican exhibitors by establishing arbitrary terms for the screening of their pictures "even to the date and time for the exhibitions of their pictures, even those that are mediocre and of little public interest. That amounts to a monopoly," Senator Amilpa continued, "and gives this country (Mexico) the aspect of a mere colony." He also spoke of the "fabulous profits" of the American companies, but did not cite any figures.

Meanwhile, discontent has spread in the union with the enforcement of its leaders' orders that each member must forego a day's pay every week to provide a fund for the strike. This fund has now been fixed at $90,000. Its original amount was $45,000, indicating, possibly, that the union is preparing for a shutdown of all American distributors.

Mexican producers report that during the past three months they have stepped up film production with the completion of 22 features. That number is most significent when it is remembered that Mexico's feature production for all of last year was only 27 pictures. These circles agree with the union's boast that the theatres will be able to keep going indefinitely with the supplies from home, American independents, especially Republic and Monogram, and from Argentina.

It is also believed that if the American distributors do leave Mexico the country will ease the ban on exhibition German and Italian films, a ban that the powerful Confederation of Mexican workers has exercised against all Nazi and Fascist films as far back as 1938.

There is also talk of theatres setting unheard of prices for Mexico—$1.25 to $2.25—for the showing of first class films if and when the American majors withdraw, the idea being that the public likes pictures so much that it will go to see them at any price. The prevailing current rates for first class theatres are from 24 cents to 52 cents.

National Film Week

The Second National Cinematographic Week, held under the auspices of the motion picture industry, the Federal film supervision and censoring department, and the National Athenaeum of Arts and Sciences was held in Mexico during the week of September 11th to 17th. Theatres throughout the country showed Mexican motion pictures and stars made appearances at various theatres.

A feature of the week was the representation at three of the leading studios in Mexico City of Lic. Miguel Aleman, Minister of the Interior, Lic. Francisco Javier Gaxiola, Jr., Minister of National Economy, and Mayor Javier Rojo Gomez of Mexico City. The officials were feted by the studio staffs and were told that Mexico's film production rose steadily since the country made its first two talking pictures in 1930, until it fell into a slump last year making only 27 pictures.

The Ministry of the Interior is reported to have asked Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to suspend exhibition of "The Bad Man" because the Mexican consul in Chicago advised his government that this picture has characters that are far from complimentary to Mexico. It is said that the Ministry considers that the withdrawal of this film would be a good will gesture.

Radio station XEW, Mexico's largest station, celebrated the 11th anniversary of its establishment on September 18th with a unique program which featured the inauguration of the Pan American network of NBC and 24 Mexican stations, headed by XEW, and of a direct news wire and telephone service from New York by the Associated Press, a service sponsored by the Bristol-Myers Co. The program lasted from 6.55 a.m. one day until 1.25 a.m. the next. Lic. Ezequiel Padilla, Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, spoke at the opening of the Pan American network in which he said that radio is the most potent means for spreading Pan Americanism and the doctrine of Democracy in the Americas.

XEW is owned and operated by the Emilio Azcarraga Co. which also owns local radio stations, XEWW, short wave associate of XEW, and XEQ, of 50,000 watts, and the select first run theatre, the Cine Teatro Alameda. XEW began in 1930 with only 5,000 watts. It is soon to again increase its potency to a wattage that has not yet been determined.

Variety Club Activities

Tent Number One of the Variety Clubs of America, the Pittsburgh tent, headed by C. C. Kellenberg, will elect new officers next Monday evening, and will hold its annual banquet Sunday, November 2nd, honoring Mr. Kellenberg and fellow officers.

The annual charity golf tournament of the Indianapolis tent, at the Broadmoor club, last week, resulted in the victory of Dr. Harry Leer, with a 76 score. Approximately 180 attended. Chairman of arrangements was Richard Frank, United Artists.

The Baltimore club is to open its new quarters atop the Stanley Theatre there Saturday.

The Philadelphia tent has elected Joseph Murphy house manager, succeeding David Greenberg.

Approximately 100 registered for the annual golf tournament, held Friday, September 19th, at the Philmont Country Club.

Albany's plans for revival of its tent proceed. Members are selecting a club headquarters.

The Indianapolis tent has given the City Hospital a dual short wave and ultra short wave generator, for diathermy.

DEMAND FOR FIGHT FILMS REPORTED DOUBLED SINCE REPEAL OF U.S. BAN

RKO, Principal Distributor, Finds Profitable Market for Pictures; 7,000 Bookings Reported for Joe Louis-Billy Conn Fight

When Congress on July 1, 1940, counted out the Sims law banning interstate shipment of prizefight motion pictures it gave new impetus to fisticuff films, which, for years, had been circulated illegally across state borders.

Within the 15 months since repeal of the federal law the demand for the motion pictures following a major boxing match has doubled, according to RKO, presently the principal distributor of the subjects.

Historically, boxing films were one of the first great boxoffice attractions for the motion picture. They contributed substantially, in early days, to both the economical and technical growth of the industry.

Following the repeal of the Sims law, RKO, by outbidding the "sporting circle" producers, received exclusive rights for the Lew Jenkins—Henry Armstrong lightweight match on July 24th, 1940, and returned the filming and distribution of prize fights to the organized industry.

Bookings Up to 4,000 Theatres

Nationwide distribution of the first films following repeal of the law reached about 2,500 theatres, according to RKO Pathe. The figure was considered high inasmuch as the bout was a non-title contest. Encouraging reports of audience reaction from its own circuit and independent theatres prompted RKO Pathe to again seek exclusive film rights when Joe Louis met Buddy Baer last May.

The Louis-Baer fight on May 23, 1941, was photographed by Pathe News camera crews and edited by the newsreel staff. Distribution was through RKO exchanges and the regular short subject and feature sales staff. The deal was arranged in a contract between the Madison Square Garden Corporation and Mike Jacobs, head of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club, promoters of the match, and Ned E. Depinet, vice-president of RKO. The agreement was for one fight only.

On its second fight film venture, RKO, it is reported, booked the pictures into approximately 4,000 theatres, nearly twice the number exhibiting the Jenkins-Armstrong reels. Exhibitors reported that the pictures were excellent boxoffice attractions in themselves.

On June 18, 1941, RKO-Pathe again filmed a Joe Louis fight, this time his match with Billy Conn. The 15 round bout, classed by many as one of the most spectacular ring encounters ever filmed, was given special distribution attention, with RKO salesmen, in New York for the company convention, telephoning key accounts immediately after the decision. Approximately 7,000 bookings were closed, it is reliably reported. The picture, according to A. J. Michalson, short subjects sales manager, is still playing in subsequent run situations, three months after the encounter. This is one of the longest playing records established.

Circuit executives, newsreel theatre operators, and many independent exhibitors classed the fight as a major feature attraction after viewing the attendance attracted by the pictures. One circuit figure observed that the fight pictures were strong enough to support "a very ordinary feature" on a double bill. A study of programs including the fight reveals that this was the practice in many houses.

In explanation of the rapid increase in the number of theatres showing fight pictures, both salesmen and managers agreed that theatres benefited tremendously from the ready-made public interest created by radio broadcasts of the encounter. The Mutual Broadcasting System, which carried the fight for the Gillette Razor Company, estimates that 70,000,000 persons heard the Louis-Conn bout. The audience was exceeded only by listeners to presidential addresses.

This publicity backlog is considered unsurpassed by both theatre operators and film distributors. They predict that the number of theatres may again be doubled if the forthcoming Joe Louis-Lou Nova on September 29th is as closely fought a contest, with equally good photographic results.

Contract Signed

A deal giving RKO-Pathe rights to the Louis-Nova bout and all subsequent matches under the sponsorship of the Madison Square Garden Corporation was reported signed and approved this week by the office of Colonel John R. Kilpatrick, president of the Garden, which is promoting the Louis bout. Under the agreement, it is said, Pathe will film and edit the fights and RKO will distribute the pictures on a percentage basis. The Garden Corporation will receive a percentage of the gross and is in the position of producer.

It has been the practice in the past to hold up publicity on the picture coverage of fights until after the bout. Exhibitors and salesmen are of the opinion that unless a fight runs at least six rounds it does not provide enough action for profitable exploitation. Also a successful fight film must have a maximum amount of slugging fisticuffs, well filmed, to stand up under the top billing and exploitation which most exhibitors feel their cost demands.

Ordinarily prints of the fight are available the next day in New York, or the area in which the bout took place. They are shipped to the field by the second day, and thence through first, second and subsequent runs. As with the Louis-Conn pictures, the life of a good fight film may run several months. There is also a profitable export market.

Rentals for good fight films are high. In some key situations they equal or exceed the feature's cost. In the case of most of the early runs a rental, plus percentage, deal is often concluded in advance of the fight, the exhibitor thus sharing with the distributor on the gamble against a one round knockout or poor film boxing. Deterioration of interest in fight pictures is rapid, most of them slipping to a flat rental four or five times less than the initial cost during the second or third week.

Protection on fight pictures is not necessarily based on regular arrangements. One exhibitor reports that films are sold to the same key houses in each city largely on a precedence basis. That is, the same house will habitually get the fight films first. There is no clearance between runs of fight pictures. They ordinarily follow immediately, at weekly intervals, through first, second and subsequent runs.

The first fight pictures were filmed at Thomas A. Edison's "black maria" stage in West Orange, N. J., in July, 1894, with Michael Leonard and Jack Cushing staging six rounds before the Kinetograph for nearly 1,000 feet of film. The pictures were spectacularly successful. In August, 1894, James Corbett, heavyweight titleholder, signed the film's first star contract to fight six demonstration rounds before the Edison camera. The Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight was filmed at Carson City, Nev., and faked in Philadelphia. Both versions, according to Terry Ramsaye, in his history, "A Million and One Nights," were business successes.

Subsequently Biograph took motion pictures under artificial light at the 1899 Jeffries-Sharkey match and fight films became a major portion of film product. Sporting bloods became among the first of film fans.

Showing Causes Race Riots

Race riots which followed the exhibition of the films of the Jack Johnson-Jim Jeffries fight at Reno on July 4, 1910, and the notorious activities at Chicago afterwards of the negro, Johnson, aroused a storm of public protest against fight pictures. Congress on July 31, 1912, passed the Sims bill after agitation by religious groups and others, and the boxing film traffic became illegal. The Johnson-Jeffries pictures reportedly earned $300,000 for General Film Company and were the last fight pictures distributed by a major company until 1941.

Filming of the pictures, manufacture of prints, and their shipment to theatres became an undercover operation conducted by members of the sporting fraternity who were willing to risk $1,000 fines for conviction of violations of the federal law. Many established theatre owners became unwilling to risk screening the illegal pictures and outlet for the films was sharply curtailed.

With the repeal of the Sims law, through the efforts of Senator Warren G. Barbour, of New Jersey, last year, shipment of the screen record of ring contests again became permissible. Senator Barbour, at one time a leading amateur pugilist, piloted the repeal measure through Congress without evoking opposition from church groups or the other organizations responsible for the law's enactment in 1912.

ARMY ASKS QUICKER FILM DELIVERIES

The shortage of prints in the Los Angeles area has brought United States Army representatives to the film row with a request for quicker film delivery service.

Jack Garretson, film booker and assistant to the district officer in charge of entertainment, conferred with distributors concerning deliveries for the 17 Army camps he is booking for. There are approximately 50 Army centers in the western division.

CBS Concert Stock

Original owners of Columbia Concerts Corporation confirmed at its annual stockholders' meetings last week acquisition of all of the stock held formerly by the Columbia Broadcasting System. The transaction, it was said, did not affect any artist, employe or customer of the concert bureau, as it has always been an autonomous organization. The business is now called Columbia Concerts, Inc., representing original concert managers who became affiliated with Columbia Broadcasting, including Arthur Judson, Evans and Salter, Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Haensel and Jones, Wolfsohn Musical Bureau of New York, and Community Concert Service.

$2,751,864 UNIVERSAL PROFIT FOR 39 WEEKS

Increase of $1,000,000 Over 1940 Period; Columbia Has $552,743 for Fiscal Year

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has reported a net profit of $2,751,864 for the 39-week period ended on August 2nd, after all charges but before provision for Federal income and excess-profits taxes, according to an announcement from J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board. Similarly computed, the profit for the 39 weeks ended July 27th, 1940, was $1,771,805.

After provision for Federal income and excess-profits taxes of $751,000, the profit for the latest period amounted to $2,000,864. Comparable figures for last year were not available.

For the 13-week period ended on August 2nd, the profit before provision for Federal income and excess-profits taxes amounted to $992,530, while for the 13 weeks ended July 27th, 1940, the profit on the same basis was $598,803. After Federal income taxes and excess-profits taxes of $361,000 the profit for the 13 weeks of this year amounted to $631,530.

Mr. Cowdin pointed out that the figures for the 39 weeks ended August 2nd last, included blocked funds of $1,299,408 in Great Britain accruing in that period and the income and excess profits taxes thereon.

Columbia Net Is $552,743

At the same time profits were announced by Columbia Pictures Corp. Columbia's net earnings for the year ended June 28th, 1941, were $552,743 after all charges and provisions for federal income and other taxes and after a special charge of $84,157.

The profit is equivalent to approximately 95 cents per share on 366,268 shares of common stock outstanding after deduction dividends on outstanding preferred.

This compares with the earnings for the corresponding period ended June 29th, 1940, after all charges and provisions for Federal Income and other taxes, of $512,185.

Balance sheets as of June 28th show current assets of $13,594,372 of which approximately $1,170,000 is represented in cash. The total current liabilities amount to $1,704,608 and working capital equals approximately $11,890,000.

A $3,000,000 revolving credit for five years has been obtained by Columbia from the First National Bank of Boston, the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Los Angeles, and the Bank of the Manhattan Company, New York, the picture company's stockholders were informed Tuesday, in a letter from Harry Cohn, president, accompanying the annual report. The company's consolidated balance sheet shows that $1,800,000 has been borrowed under the agreement, to date, on notes due February 28, 1946.

Mr. Cohn's letter says the loan will provide more working capital, which had been decreased by "freezing" of foreign earnings; also that it replaces the short-term borrowings of former times.

The company's net profit of $552,743 for the fiscal year ended June 28th includes $230,036, which is subject to currency restrictions in England and Australia, and $93,160 from operations in other foreign territories, the report revealed.

Assets of five subsidiaries operating in invaded countries and Japan and Spain have been written down to $1 each. Allocation of negative amortization is being continued by the company at 25 per cent to foreign revenue, the report states.

The acquisition of Monogram Pictures common stock by two officials of the company have been reported by the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, D. C.

The report showed that Herman Rifkin of Boston, acquired 8,418 shares of the stock, giving him a total of 9,018 shares, and Norton V. Ritchey, New York, acquired 3,168 shares.

In a report showing the holdings of persons becoming officers or directors of corporations, the SEC showed that J. P. Friedhoff of Hollywood, held no Monogram securities when he became an officer on April 4th last, but that Howard W. Stubbins, Los Angeles, who became a director on July 7th, held 328 shares of common direct, 2,635 shares through Monogram Pictures of California and 1,317 shares through Monogram Pictures of the Northwest.

Paramount Stock Converted

Conversions of Paramount second preferred stock into common, considerably accelerated since the recent voting of a 25-cent common dividend, reached a total of 206,100 shares last week, a tabulation completed by the company revealed. This is 32 per cent of all second preferred shares originally issued.

On September 12th, 46,480 shares were converted, and in the period from July 1st to September 12, 116,000 shares were converted. About $50,000 of first preferred has been converted in recent weeks.

The first of four payments totaling $860,000 due the eight major film distributors from Japan under a three-year-old monetary agreement with that country was scheduled to be made Friday, September 26th, by the Yokohama Specie Bank in San Francisco.

The initial payment will amount to $215,000 and will be apportioned among the companies in proportion to previously established percentages based on a number of pictures distributed in Japan by each company.

The subsequent payments, in equal amounts, are due October, November and December. The funds were earmarked for the payments some time ago and, therefore, will be available for payment when due despite the existing Japanese-American "freezing" orders.

The payments cover business done in Japan in 1939. No remittances other than print costs have been received by distributors from Japan since.

Iowa Film Industry To Study New Taxes

Leo Wolcott, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, has called a special meeting of the Iowa film industry, including theatre owners, managers, bookers and salesmen at the Savery Hotel in Des Moines, September 29th, for discussion of the new Federal Defense Tax. Tax experts will be present to answer questions.

Following the tax meeting, theatre owners will meet to consider film rental terms and other business.

TAX COLLECTIONS HIT NEW HIGH

Collections of $7,330,283 in August brought the monthly revenue from the Federal admission tax to a new high record, approximately $569,000 above the July total of $6,760,861 and nearly $3,000,000 above the August, 1940, revenue of $4,407,097, it was reported September 22nd by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

More significant than the dollar increase, however, was the fact that a general up-turn in business throughout the country was indicated by the figures compiled by the bureau.

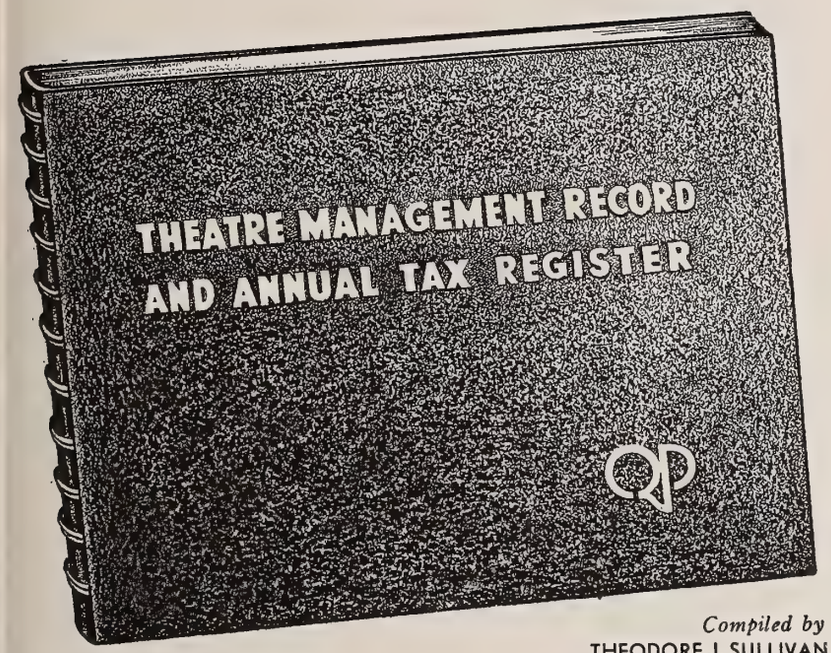
Whereas for some months past such increases as occurred in total collections were largely absorbed in the Third New York (Broadway) District, that area accounted for only a small part of the August expansion.

Total collections in the district were $1,590,584 in August against $1,501,903 in the preceding month, accounting for only approximately one-sixth of the total increase.

The bureau reported that box-office collections in the district increased from $1,434,942 in July to $1,529,055 last month, but that receipts from admissions to roof gardens and cabarets, the next most important item, dropped from $59,785 to $54,984. Revenue from tickets sold by brokers dropped from $6,653 to $6,385, and that from tickets sold by proprietors in excess of established prices from $456 to $10, but receipts from permanent use or lease of boxes and seats increased from $66 to $150.

Warner Zone Managers Meet

The sixth annual meeting of Stanley-Warner Theatres managers, district managers and department heads in the Philadelphia Zone met Wednesday, September 24th, at 10 A.M. at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, according to an announcement from Ted Schlanger, zone manager.



Following the annual custom, several guests from New York were seated at the dais, among them, circuit general manager Joseph Bernhard; Leonard Schlesinger, assistant; and Harry Goldberg, circuit advertising and publicity chief.

In line with a policy established last year, three new cars were to be awarded to three managers credited with outstanding achievements of the past year by Bernhard.

Philadelphia Associates Meet

Philadelphia Motion Picture Associates, at its first fall meeting Saturday, September 13th, at the Paramount exchange projection room, voted in favor of preserving paid-up insurance policies on all the members. President Ely Epstein, RKO salesman, reported that the membership of the group is now 110 and that all the members are now gainfully employed in some sales capacity in the industry.

RESTRICTIVE TAX MOVES HIT 'JUKE-BOX' PICTURES

Massachusetts Studies Plan for $50 Levy; Wurlitzer Company Hit by Priorities

Massachusetts exhibitors' efforts to restrictively tax coin operated movie machines —the so-called "juke-boxes"—are under consideration by a recess commission designated by the state's House of Representatives to investigate a tax bill which had been offered, and to report on it before October 31st of next year.

Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal related difficulties of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, of North Tonawanda, New York, in obtaining materials for juke-box production, with the implication the industry faced a serious situation. This disclosure comes after a statement in Chicago by Fred Mills, president of the Mills Novelty Company, that city, makers of the Panoram machines, that 1941 business will be 70 per cent above 1940's.

The Massachusetts efforts to restrict the machines is duplicated in other areas. Roy Reichelderfer, supervisor of the Ohio Censor Board, has decreed the machines' product must carry an "approved leader." Milwaukee's aldermen may act soon on an ordinance to license the devices, at $50 per year, and limit their operation to persons who have resided in the city at least three years. Ontario police officials have proclaimed publicly the imminence of a "clean-up" of such machines with films or music, and Dominian officials are said to be considering taxation.

Would Tax Machines $50

The Massachusetts measure, originally introduced by Arthur K. Howard, manager of the Allied-affiliated Independent Exhibitors, called for a $50 annual tax on each machine plus a $2 certification fee for each film used on the machines.

Since December, 1940 more than 200 machines already have been placed on location and all are earning an estimated $150 per week for their operators. This builds up to the staggering total of approximately $30,000 weekly or an estimated $1,000,000 since they were introduced.

The bill's provision for certification of each film automatically means a $16 per week charge for each machine if eight films are changed weekly. Theatre interests believe this high taxation is one of the only means of bringing about a more equitable competition between the jukes and the theatres. A fine of $100 is provided for violation of the law.

The Wurlitzer Company reported a 40 per cent drop in production of their machines, as related this week by the Wall Street Journal; and that it has cut its staff in North Tonawanda from 1,750 to 1,350. Farny R. Wurlitzer, chairman of the company's executive committee, said it had one small defense order, and hoped for more.

The announcement in Chicago by Mr. Mills, anent the prosperity of his company, producing Panoram machines, also contained the disclosure it is making 75 per day, in addition to producing 200 vending machines daily. He added the company increased its staff 30 per cent during the year.

In New York, the Soundies Distributing Corporation of America has been established to dispense the films used in the Panoram machines. Minoco Productions, the film producer for the Panorams, has announced plans for 248 pictures during the next six months. The Philadelphia dispenser of Panorams has been established, the Philadelphia Panoram Company, headed by Edward Klein, Samuel Weinstein, and William Helreigel, Jr.

In Portland, Oregon, Robert O. Boyd, of Oregon Soundies, Inc., has asked for an ordinance to permit the operation of the movie machines. In Kelso, same state, L. A. Newgard, Julia Jacobson and Lillian Neward, have filed papers for Pacific Soundies, Inc.

In Columbus, Ohio, the IATSE Local 386, through its local representative, William Lewis, has asked the common pleas court to dissolve the temporary injunction recently granted by Judge Joseph M. Clifford, restraining members of the local from picketing restaurants where coin-operated pictures are in operation, and serviced by a non-union man, contending the injunction violates United States Supreme Court decisions on picketing. The injunction was granted on application of George Elum, Columbus distributor for the machines, who claimed that his customer's business was being jeopardized, and that his interests were being seriously affected by the picketing.

After playing in more than 12 locations in Terre Haute, Indiana, the coin machines have been withdrawn, according to reports from that city. Some of the machines were said to have returned as little as three dollars per week to operators.

Company to Distribute South American Films

The United South American Pictures Corporation with offices in New York, plans to present a program of Spanish language pictures during the 1941-42 season. The schedule includes ten feature films and five featurettes.

Edmund St. Strul, president of the new company, announces that beginning in October, the company will release a feature a month and one featurette every two months. The pictures were made in South America and the entire program has already been completed. These films will be released with their original Spanish dialogue, supplemented by English titles.

Mr. St. Strul believe that the interest now being shown by the people in the United States in the other republics of this hemisphere has opened a wide market for Spanish language pictures in this country. This market is being augmented by the ever-increasing number of Americans who are studying Spanish and who will find such films of inestimable aid.

United South American Pictures Corporation's first release is "Retazo" starring Alberto Vila and Paulina Singerman, two of South America's most poplar stars. The locale of "Retazo" is Buenos Aires where the picture was filmed.

Charteris To Produce

Leslie Charteris, author of "The Saint" series, has formed his own production unit, and will be a producer-director as well as writer.

FCC Head Warns Independents on Monopoly Control

Characterizing the Senate sub-committee inquiry into alleged motion picture propaganda as the kind of attack to which broadcasting might become vulnerable, James L. Fly, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, warned the National Independent Broadcasters' Association on Monday that "the weeding out of monopolistic tendencies in broadcasting" was necessary, "if you are to remain undisturbed in your ownership and operation of American broadcasting stations." The FCC is currently probing the question of newspaper-radio ownership.

Diversified radio and prevention of radio control concentration are the primary objectives of the FCC, Mr. Fly told more than 200 NIB members who convened in Chicago at the Palmer House for the annual convention of the independents.

Mr. Fly pointed out that the Senate subcommittee charged that a few men had seized control of American microphones and were propagandizing the American people, and that these persons wielded far more power than elected representatives or responsible government officials.

Future Acquisitions Affected

He declared that the FCC inquiry into newspaper-radio ownership was concerned mainly with frequency modulation grants to publishing interests and that whatever recommendations might come out of the hearings would not be concerned with existing licenses but only with future acquisitions.

On Tuesday, NIB convention delegates voted to break away from the National Association of Broadcasters and form their own organization by November 15th. Representatives of 200 stations voted upon the proposal after a dozen speakers had charged that NAB is "dominated" by the networks. The new organization, when incorporated, will be limited to independently owned and operated stations. Harold A. Lafaunt, NIB president, estimated that 95 per cent of the nation's 800 stations would be eligible.

Meanwhile, in Washington last week at the FCC hearings, newspaper representatives denied that their papers dictated broadcasting policies to their radio stations. Testimony developed, however, the fact that William Randolph Hearst had a firm conviction that radio could be used as a valuable adjunct to the newspaper. Emile J. Gough, former general manager of Hearst Radio, Inc., said that newspaper-owned stations were the first to develop the present form of news broadcasting and that the newspaper tradition of independence from outside control had been carried into radio. He disclosed that Hearst went into radio in the early '30's to build up the prestige of his papers. Charles B. McCabe, president of Hearst Radio, Inc., and president of the New York Daily Mirror, told the Commission that to the best of his knowledge, there were no instances where Hearst newspapers had governed the policy making of Hearst radio stations. E. M. Stoer, present general manager of Hearst Radio, Inc., also appeared at the hearings.

Roy A. Roberts, managing director of the Kansas City Star which operates station WDAF, one of the city's six broadcasting stations, testified concerning ownership, control, circulation, scope and operation of the Star's daily and weekly publications and the development of its radio station. "Because of the newspaper affiliation," he said, "we have been able to do a better job in radio. Radio would be better off if we had more newspapers running radio stations," he told the FCC.

Donald D. Davis, president of WHB in Kansas City declared, "I feel that newspaper radio operation is a logical development for dissemination of news in a community." He added, however, that "the point is whether the publisher takes undue advantage" through ownership of his newspaper in competition with other radio stations.

Others who appeared before the FCC were Joe Maland, vice president and general manager, Central Broadcasting Company, Des Moines, Ia.; H. Dean Fitzer, of Kansas City and Louis Caldwell, counsel for WGN which is owned and operated by the Chicago Tribune.

Harold V. Hough, chairman of the Newspaper Radio Committee and special counsel Sydney Kaye, head of the FCC opposition.

Chairman Fly has overruled any and all attempts to halt the hearings despite contention of Elisha Hanson, counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, that the proceeding is illegal and not within the Commission's jurisdiction as originally intended by Congress when the FC Act was passed.

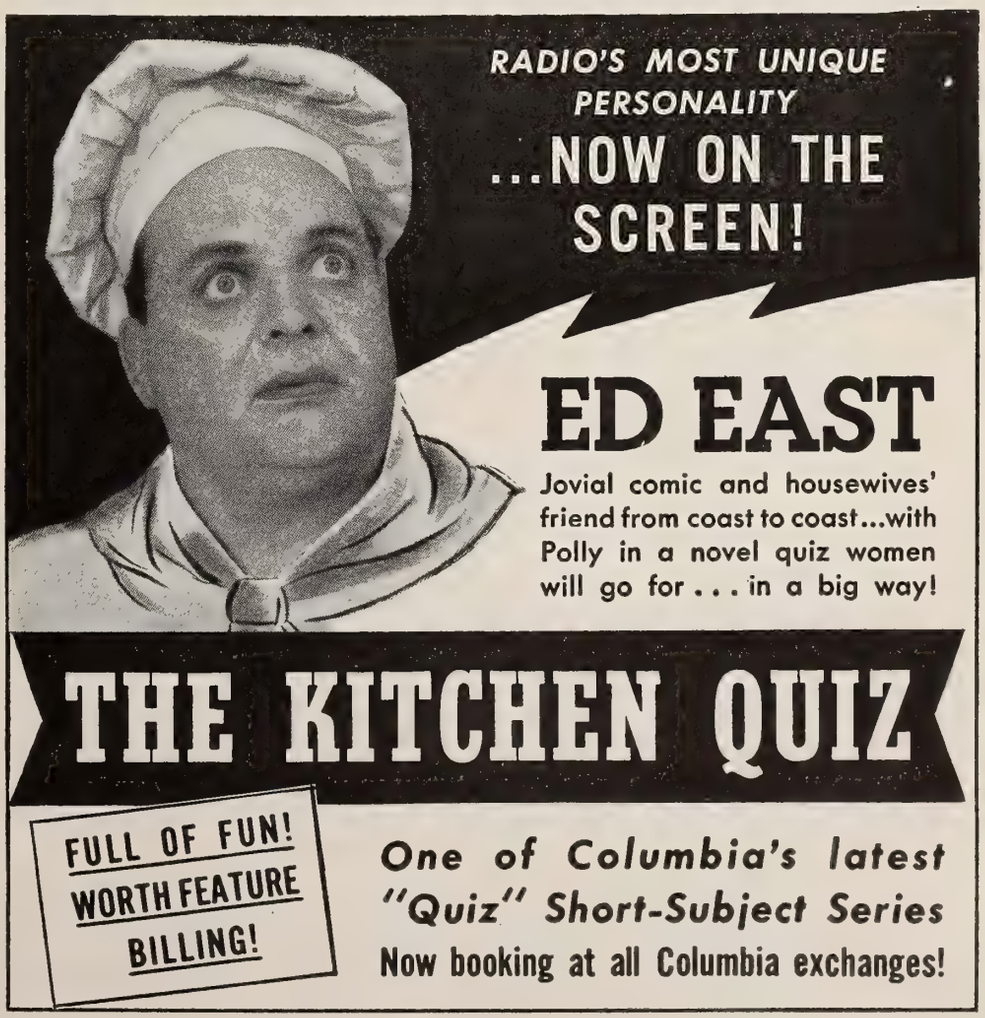
Plans Set for Audio-Visual Convention

Teaching aids found in such modern devices as the sound motion picture and radio will be the principal topic at the Southern Conference on Audio-Visiual Education, which will meet at the Ansley Hotel in Atlanta, Ga., November 13th to 15th.



The three-day program will include an afternoon devoted to showings of new educational films; several general sessions in which talks, demonstrations and film previews will be intermingled; and an afternoon of specialized group forums in which educators will meet with technicians and experts for informal discussions of mutual problems. In addition, there will be exhibits of the latest types of projection and sound equipment, and showings of new educational films. A wide attendance is expected for the meeting, which last year attracted educators from 16 states.

William K. Jenkins, secretary-treasurer of the Lucas and Jenkins circuit of the Southeast, has been appointed to the morale board of the Citizens Committee for the Army and Navy, Inc., in the Fourth Corps area.

Feinblatt Joins Warners

Eddie Feinblatt, formerly with Newburger and Loeb, investment brokers, has joined the Warner theatres circuit booking department in Philadelphia. He replaces Stan Arnold, who leaves to join the independent Varbalow circuit in southern New Jersey.

CBS Delays ASCAP Return

Another hitch in the return of the music catalog of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers to radio networks on Sunday which had been expected by both disputants in the music-radio war, was indicated this week by reports that the Columbia Broadcasting System was unable to complete final drafts of the new ASCAP contract for approval of all its affiliated stations. NBC, however, sent out its contract forms to affiliates on Monday.

ASCAP's board of directors which already ratified the NBC terms, met on Thursday, but it was doubtful that the CBS contract, pending affiliates' approval, would be submitted in time for the board's ratification.

Exhibitors Complain

During the convention proceedings of Allied States Association in Philadelphia, meantime, ASCAP came in for a share of exhibitor complaints. Delegates, before convening, added to the resolutions passed one which empowered the Allied board to follow through on discussion of the ASCAP situation as it effects motion picture theatres and to take immediate action on whatever measures it deemed legal and effective to bring about relief to exhibitors.

Moreover, a Troy exhibitor and attorney, Leonard Rosenthal, recommended to the membership that Allied chart a course of action in regard to Broadcast Music, Inc., the music composer-publisher organization set up by the networks last year. Mr. Rosenthal claimed that music should be taxed at its source, meaning Hollywood, instead of at the theatres under present ASCAP regulations. He also pointed out that BMI's music library is rapidly increasing in volume and popularity and that the time may come when BMI will be collecting in the picture business. The Troy exhibitor mentioned "four spankings" received by the Society last year which he said gave encouragement to exhibitors. He referred to radio's obtaining a payment cut on ASCAP music from 7 per cent to 2 and three-quarter per cent; the Government's suit against ASCAP which resulted in a consent decree provision requiring membership election of the board of directors; the Supreme Court's ruling upholding anti-ASCAP laws in the states of Florida and Nebraska and the West Coast exhibitors' action against the Society.

Litigation in New York

Litigation against ASCAP, reported in New York last week, involved two cases, with a total of $156,300 in damages asked by complainants. Oscar F. Johnson, Edwin H. and Ray L. Shipstad, producers of "Ice Follies," which played at Madison Square Garden, sued ASCAP in New York Supreme Court, claiming that the Society licensed use of seven songs in the ice show which were subsequently claimed by Tams-Witmark Music Library, Inc. The plaintiffs declared that ASCAP acknowledged it had made a mistake in licensing these songs and that as a result, they were forced to pay $6,300 to Tams-Witmark in settlement for the unauthorized use.

The other suit in which ASCAP was named as a defendant was that brought in New York Supreme Court by Henry M. Propper, as receiver of A.K.M., Austrian affiliate of the Society. Damages of $150,000 were asked by the plaintiff who claimed that ASCAP failed to pay part of royalties due to A.K.M. from 1933 to 1936 and all of those accumulating from 1936 to 1938. Application to dismiss the suit will be heard on September 30th.

War Newsreels Seen on Wane

War "horror" newsreels have reached a new low in popularity with motion picture audiences throughout the country, in the opinion of W. French Githens, president, Newsreel Theatre, Inc., and Harold Wondsell, head of Soundmasters, Inc. It is their belief, however, that news films picturing America's industrial, military and civilian defense preparations "are still strong" with the public but that "horror" shots of the war abroad are waning in audience acceptance.

Mr. Githens and Mr. Wondsell, who have been engaged in the newsreel field for about 15 years, were the principal speakers at a luncheon held last Friday in the Hotel Martinique, New York, by the Conference on Association Publicity. The purpose of the luncheon was to instruct publicity directors of trade associations and welfare organizations how to make their publicity "photogenic" in using the screen as an additional medium of public relations.

Offers "Practical Plan"

A former managing editor of Pathé News, Mr. Githens heads the company which owns and operates five newsreel theatres in Manhattan and Newark. In proposing a "practical plan" to the Conference membership for getting their subjects into newsreels, he offered the following suggestions:

"Don't be a pest to newsreel editors. Observe newsreel technique. Spot the 'plugs' and see how they are executed. Select an idea or subject that is of national and human interest, preferably one that is extraordinary, even bizarre. Remember that you have to get across a subject that will interest 85 per cent of a national audience. Then develop your idea thoroughly. Submit it in writing to newsreel editors. Suggest that they may be able to help you work out an interesting story. Be prepared to cooperate with them if they offer suggestions to adapt your subject to newsreel technique. Don't ask for any special favors. Establish good 'working' relations with the editors and if you get one or two stories a year from one or more newsreels, be satisfied.

Following presentation of this plan, the Conference membership submitted technical questions to Mr. Wondsell who discussed in great detail the necessary steps of procedure in working out an idea for newsreel purposes.

Presiding at the luncheon was G. K. Dahl, acting chairman of the association and editor of World Convention Dates. Among the organizations represented were: National YWCA, American Transit Association, New York League of Women Voters, National Conference of Christians and Jews, Russell Sage Foundation, American Jewish Committe, National Association for Prevention of Blindness and the Greater New York Council of Girl Scouts.

Castle Films Gets Government Job

The largest "plum" of a contract ever dealt by the Government to a commercial film company was awarded this week to Castle Films, Inc., of New York, by the Office of Education, for printing, distribution and promotion of 12,000 to 15,000 prints of 50 16mm. educational and vocational training films. Castle won out over the spirited bidding of some 20 producers and distributors in the sponsored and educational picture field, receiving the award, it was said, because it offered the lowest figure of any company for all the numerous items stipulated in the contract bidding provisions.

It was reported in commercial film circles this week that Modern Talking Pictures, Inc., was the next lowest bidder, and that the Institute for the Advancement of Visual Education and Vocational Training, Inc., whose bidding figured prominently as a "bone of contention" among competitors in the industry, handed in a higher bid than Castle or Modern.

Organized in 1918

Castle Films, Inc., at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, organized in 1918 and operating nationally, produces and distributes institutional, advertising and documentary pictures. Eugene W. Castle is president. Last year its record for production and distribution was as follows:

Institutional films: 8, 35 mm. sound, black and white; 2, 16 mm. sound, color; Sales-dealer instruction films: 6, 35 mm. sound, black and white; 2, 16 mm. sound, color; Documentary films: 5, 35 mm. sound, black and white; 1, 16 mm. sound, color.

Officials of the company refused to comment on the award, saying on Monday that they would meet with heads of the Office of Education in Washington this Thursday for the purpose of rounding out all details pertaining to distribution of the prints. Whether or not Castle expects to farm out some of the print jobs in connection with the large award, could not be determined.

LONE WOLF TAKES A CHANCE: Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, June Storey—This series has a following which brings business. Our audience in both the Plaza, Tilbury, and the Centre, Chatham, like it.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON: Jean Arthur, James Stewart, Claude Rains, Edward Arnold—James Stewart was exceptionally good in this picture. Jean Arthur supplied the romantic angle in her own inimitable way to the complete satisfaction of our patrons. All in all, a very good picture that pleased everyone. Running time, 130 minutes. Played August 16-17.—W. J. Overstreet, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

PENNY SERENADE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—One of the finest pictures it has ever been my pleasure to run. Nothing but praise from my patrons on this great picture. It didn't do a big business but gave me the satisfaction of knowing that my patrons had been entertained by a fine picture. Step on it when you play it and you should come out O. K. Preferred time by all means. Running time, 120 minutes. Played September 7-8.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General patronage.

PRAIRIE SCHOONERS: Bill Elliott, Evelyn Young—To our western fans, it seemed to satisfy.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF THE CAMPUS: Ruby Keeler, Harriet Hilliard, Ozzie Nelson—Fair little programmer for the jitterbugs. Played to one of lowest grosses of all time. If they don't go for lightweight musicals, pass this one up. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 11-12.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—Played this on two days notice to better than average business. Color is swell, but picture is too long and lacked love interest. Should do swell business anywhere. Running time, 135 minutes.—Ritz Amusements, Inc., Park Theatre, North Vernon, Ind. Small town patronage.

SINGAPORE WOMAN: Brenda Marshall, David Bruce—We played this one day at bargain prices and the customer reaction was surprising. Everyone was pleased. We did above average business and could have played this a second night. Miss Marshall's acting is improving and we should be hearing more from David Bruce. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 19.—Morris V. Beisner, Dream Theatre, Glasco, Kan. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Brothers, Tony Martin, Virginia Grey—Slapstick comedy chiefly, but excellent music on harp and piano, and fine singing by Tony Martin. Audience laughed so much they missed some of Groucho's gags. The Marx Bros. run a store about like the New Dealers run the country; smashed everything up. Sorry to see the Marx boys leave the screen.—N. W. Huston, Maywood Theatre, Galena, Kan. Mining territory patronage.

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Brothers, Tony Martin, Virginia Grey—The best that the Marx Brothers have made for a long time. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 13-14.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

LOVE CRAZY: William Powell, Myrna Loy—One of the very best and finest pictures of the season. It has 100 per cent plus entertainment and box office drawing power. I'll take my hat off to any company who can produce this kind of picture. Running time, 99 minutes. Played August 19.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

NAVY BLUE AND GOLD (REISSUE): James Stewart, Robert Young, Lionel Barrymore—A timely revival, which went over big. A few of this type are well worth bringing back.—N. W. Huston, Maywood Theatre, Galena, Kan. Small town and mining patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE, A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas, Conrad Veidt—I take back the mean things I have said about Joan Crawford. In this picture she is wonderful. If the producer will keep her in this type picture, we will want them all. Running time, 106 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL, THE: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—Didn't see this one but business was bad on it. Comments were quite favorable, however. Metro's big pictures have not gone over for me for some reason and this was no exception. Running time, 130 minutes. Played August 24-26.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General patronage.

ZIEGFELD GIRL, THE: James Stewart, Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner—A gorgeous show. Had many compliments on this one. Stunning costumes and musical sequences very fine.—N. W. Houston, Liberty Theatre, Columbus, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—A box office natural for any theatre. Any exhibitor who cannot make money with this picture is in a tough spot. It is perfect entertainment all the way for any type of audience. Running time, 80 minutes. Played September 5.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

CHEROKEE STRIP: Richard Dix, Florence Rice, Andy Clyde—This is an excellent western picture. Dix is not a very popular star in our theatre. If you can get the people in, every class of audience will be pleased and cannot help but say they received their money's worth of entertainment. Running time, 86 minutes. Played September 16.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—An A-1 show. Good drawing power. Many favorable comments with no kicks. It is without doubt one of the best of its kind released for some time. Running time, 132 minutes. Played August 29.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE: Mary Martin, Don Ameche, Oscar Levant—Good musical show which failed to draw. Guess the title was wrong for small towns. Running time, 85 minutes. Played September 10-11.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE: Mary Martin, Don Ameche, Oscar Levant—Very poor draw at box office. Opinion seemed to be divided as to the picture. Personally, thought it very good. Has plausible story, good music, and acting is good. Running time, 85 minutes.—Ritz Amusements, Inc., Park Theatre, North Vernon, Ind. Small town patronage.

LADY EVE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda—Very good to good business. Running time, 97 minutes. Played August 24-25.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

LAS VEGAS NIGHTS: Constance Moore, Bert Wheeler, Phil Regan, Tommy Dorsey and his Orchestra—A swell little musical comedy that everyone enjoyed and business was O. K. on it, too. Lots of good music and dancing. O. K. for Sunday if they are not too particular. Paramount knows how to make good program pictures. Keep up the good work. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 27-28.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General patronage.

LIFE WITH HENRY: Jackie Cooper, Leila Ernst, Eddie Bracken, Hedda Hopper—Play this one by all means. This show packs 'em in. This "Aldrich Family" series is O. K. Paramount has a real series started. Did exceptional business for me. A money maker in any man's town and will give satisfaction.

Played August 31-September 2.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—Played this middle of the week to most disappointing business and that isn't what we like.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray—A splendid picture. Spicy dialogue that's clever and not too suggestive to offend. Necessary to strain a little to understand the English dialect. Had not much drawing power. Running time, 97 minutes. Played September 12.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

PIRATES ON HORSEBACK: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Cylde—"Hopalong" has a good following in Chatham. Played it at Park Theatre. Biggest matinees in history of show.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

REACHING FOR THE SUN: Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Eddie Bracken—Very little to recommend; forced throughout; seems as though the entire story was built around the crane fight. May stand up on a triple bill. Running time, 88 minutes.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

ROAD TO ZANZIBAR, THE: Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Good picture to poor business. Guess they just don't care for this combination in Exira, as their first picture flopped badly, too. It's a swell show though where these stars go over big. Running time, 89 minutes. Played September 14-15.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP (REISSUE): Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Chares Ruggles—This reissue is still a good picture, but it failed to draw. It is badly dated and I had some walkouts. Running time, 90 minutes. Played September 14-15.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—Drew big business, as the author was so well-known in this section. Dark color, too much emphasis on moonshining, but fine acting by Betty Field and Marjorie Main—N. W. Huston, Liberty Theatre, Columbus. Kan. Small town patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—One of our top grossers of the year. Color is good, it is well acted, and everyone seems to have read the story. It will please both young and old. Running time, 95 minutes.—Ritz Amusements, Inc., Park Theatre, North Vernon, Ind. Small town patronage.

VIRGINIA: Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray, Helen Broderick, Carolyn Lee—Really a show. Beautiful color. Very fine story, well produced. Madeleine Carroll is very beautiful and a wonderful actress. Did very good business. Get out and advertise this one. It's the best picture of the year in my book. Played August 24-26.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

WIDE OPEN TOWN: William Boyd, Russell Hayden—Good western picture which pleased week-end trade. Running time, 78 minutes. Played September 12-13.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Republic

MR. DISTRICT ATTORNEY: Dennis O'Keefe, Florence Rice, Peter Lorre—See review on "Sunset in Wyoming," Republic.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

RIDE, TENDERFOOT, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey, Mary Lee—This one did not draw as well as we expected. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 15-16.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Colonna—Our folks liked this and business was good. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 29-30.—Ray Peacock, Onalaska Theatre, Onalaska, Wash. Loggers and mill workers patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby, Charles Butterworth, Jerry Colonna—We usually double Republic pictures. We showed this single and it is good enough for any theatre to run single or for any day in the week. Judy Canova is a favorite star with our audience. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 26.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

SUNSET IN WYOMING: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Doubled this with "Mr. District Attorney." Packed them in with these two pictures. Both of them were bang-up entertainment for our audience. Autry and Burnette are 100 per cent box office draws for this section. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 9.—J. L. Thayer, Leddy's Theatre, Raymond, N. H. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BOY SLAVES: Anne Shirley—A very fine picture; well worth playing.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

NO, NO NANETTE: Anna Neagle, Richard Carlson, Victor Mature—Played second run at Park Theatre. Did some business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SUNNY: Anna Neagle, John Carroll, Ray Bolger—A good show that pleased all who saw it, but didn't do any extra business. Maybe the patrons remembered "No, No, Nanette." Ray Bolger's dancing is superb and the scenes with Miss Neagle were excellent. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 17-18.—Morris V. Beisner, Dream Theatre, Glasco, Kan. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Grable, Robert Cummings—Ran this with "Blondie in Society" to very poor receipts. However, this is one dandy musical with the very best in color we have ever shown. There were plenty of comments on that score. I watched it carefully each time myself just for the beauty of it. Had one person come to see it all four times it was on the screen. That is swell except for the fact that the individual was a walkin. Probably the best explanation of the small receipts is that all the folks around here had already seen it elsewhere and had left town for Miami to enjoy it themselves. I would go myself next week but I would miss "A Woman's Face" and I really want to see that one. Running time, 91 minutes. Played September 10-11.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

RIDE ON, VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—Good entertainment. This series grows in popularity, and draws the women, too. Romero's Spanish lingo is not forced, and his acting gets better. Long live the "Cisco Kid!"—N. W. Huston, Liberty Theatre, Columbus, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

SLEEPERS WEST: Lloyd Nolan, Lynn Bari, Mary Beth Hughes—Just another feature that we had to play from Fox. Will not do the business it should as it is allocated too high. Public is fed upon detective stories. Comedy and music seem to be what they want today. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 29-30.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General and rural patronage.

TIN PAN ALLEY: Alice Faye, Betty Grable, Jack Oakie, John Payne—A heart-throbbing, inspiring and exciting picture that thrilled everybody. Exceptionally well played by Alice Faye and others. Went over very well here. Running time, 115 minutes. Played August 23-24.—W. J. Overstreet, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

United Artists

CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP: Martha Scott, William Gargan—Superb acting by Miss Scott plus "Bess Streeter Aldrich's" fame made this picture do above average business on a mid-week bargain nite. Played August 20-21.—Morris V. Beisner, Dream Theatre, Glasco, Kan. Small town patronage.

ETERNALLY YOURS: Loretta Young, David Niven, Hugh Herbert, Billie Burke—A really romantic love story that was mixed with every kind of dramatics and pleased all of us. Was rated high by our patrons. Running time, 95 minutes. Played August 30-31.—W. J. Overstreet, Florida State Prison, Raiford, Fla. Prison patronage.

POT O' GOLD: James Stewart, Paulette Goddard—A very entertaining musical that did nice business. No regrets.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

ROAD SHOW: Adolphe Menjou, Carole Landis, Charles Butterworth, Patsy Kelly—A screwball musical comedy. United Artists can do better than this. Business average.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THAT UNCERTAIN FEELING: Merle Oberon, Melvyn Douglas—Swell sophisticated comedy which my Prize Night crowds liked. Lots of good comedy and all performances excellent. Good enough for Sunday playing time. They'll like it. Running time, 84 minutes. Played September 9-10.—Don Bloxham, Palace Theatre, Exira, Iowa. General and rural patronage.

TOPPER RETURNS: Joan Blondell, Roland Young, Carole Landis—They really liked this. Spookier than most "horror shows." As usual, "Rochester" stole the show. Lots of laughs. Played August 22-23.—Morris V. Beisner, Dream Theatre, Glasco, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANPOWER: George Raft, Marlene Dietrich, Edward G. Robinson—Good picture but no boxoffice. Our customers do not like Marlene Dietrich or Robinson either; the trailer could have been a lot better. Picture itself is okay. Running time, 105 minutes.—Ritz Amusements, Inc., Park Theatre, North Vernon, Ind. Small town patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck, Edward Arnold, Walter Brennan—Plenty of favorable comments. Business above par considering the sultry weather. Played September 14-15.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

IN COURTS

Cohen, Shevin Ask Suit Dismissal

Ben Cohen and Samuel Shevin, formerly operating the Kramer theatre, in Detroit, have filed an appeal in the United States district court, Cincinnati, from decrees of United States District Judge Edward J. Moinet, Detroit, dismissing their suit against Herman Kramer, Jr., individually and as executor. The decree directed cancellation of the theatre lease held by plaintiffs, appointed Edgar E. Kirchner receiver, with authority to operate the house, and directed plaintiffs to pay Mr. Kramer $7,600 plus interest and costs.

The plaintiff's petition recites that Mr. Kramer failed to reconstruct the house to conform with the Detroit building and theatre code after the city condemned that part of the property for the widening of Michigan Avenue. Mr. Kramer responded with the claim that plaintiffs had made fraudulent representations to obtain the lease, and that they have failed to carry out the provisions thereof.

RCA Stockholders Balk Settlement

Application was filed this week in New York Supreme Court by six minority RCA stockholders to restrain the settlement of the consolidated RCA stockholders' suit, in a petition which termed the $1,000,000 offer as "grossly inadequate." The application refers to a $500,000,000 stockholder action against the company, its officers and directors, General Electric and Westinghouse and asked the court to vacate a previous order which refers the question of settlement to Abraham J. Halprin, referee.

Asks Crosley Dismissal

The dismissal of a similar action against the Crosley Corporation, operating WLW, WSAI and short wave radio station WLWO, in Cincinnati, in the District Court, of the District of Columbia, is cited in a notice filed in the United States District Court, in Cincinnati by Raymond H. Sullivan, et al., inventors, Rochester, N. Y., for dismissal of their suit against Ronald J. Rockwell, Crosley technical engineer, and the Crosley Corporation. The plaintiffs sued to have the court set aside decisions of the United States Patent Office denying them a patent on a voltage transformation apparatus. Mr. Rockwell had applied for a similar patent, his assignees being the Crosley Corporation. Patent officials ruled in Mr. Rockwell's favor in interference proceedings involving the two patent applications. United States District Judge John H. Druffel, in Cincinnati, dismissed the suit.

Claims "Rebecca" Infringed

A plagiarism suit against United Artists, Selznick International, David O. Selznick, Daphne du Maurier and Doubleday Doran & Co. has been filed in the United States district court in New York by Edwina Levin MacDonald. The complaint charges infringements of the plaintiff's book, "Blind Windows," published in 1924, in the novel and film "Rebecca."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

That Manpower Question, Again

What is to happen when the war is over and defense dollars stop pouring through theatre ticket-windows? Grosses will drop alarmingly and the reason will be the lack of adequate manpower to carry on.

The above is the theme of an interesting communication from Mr. D. Luce, of the El Cerrito theatre, in El Cerrito, Cal., who sounds the alarm that unless managerial staffs are remunerated in keeping with theatre revenues increased by defense spending, the showmen will take off "for better jobs, at better pay with less hours and more advancement in dozens of other industries." Further, writes Mr. Luce:

"It is folly to suppose that any large part of the capable managerial manpower will remain at low-pay, high responsibility positions for the glory of it."

The end will find the theatres in the hands of "well-meaning but inexperienced pups hopelessly incapable of coping with the situations into which they have been thrust," continues the writer. He calls upon the industry to do something about it now, "to establish standards for its managers commensurate with those of the men they supervise so that men in lesser capacities will be encouraged to stay with the business, learn and protect it against less prosperous days when they will be sorely needed."

The reasonableness of Mr. Luce's contention is unquestioned. However, the condition is no overnight development. The boom to which he alludes just happens to be the most current of the factors which have long aggravated a deep-seated condition. That condition has principally to do with encouraging the more promising of the lesser personnel to withstand the temptation of better outside jobs available in lush times.

This department cannot speak for all managerial manpower. Among the active of the membership, comparatively few managers have left the business for defense or other jobs. A number of the younger theatremen are serving in the forces, but not in numbers enough, so far, to parallel the situation Mr. Luce describes. It may be that theatremen in showbusiness any length of time prefer to stay with it, for better or for worse. Those well paid have no reason for leaving. And the business being what it is, others do stay on somewhat "for the glory of it," while hoping for better.

The problem becomes more serious as the difficulties of replacement among the lesser personnel throw extra duties upon the manager, interfering seriously with his main job of promoting the theatre. Mr. Luce strikes a red-hot note in calling for more consideration for the little feller on the job. That can be had by making the manager's lot more attractive, so that ambitious staff members will be given incentive to stay on.

It all resolves itself to a matter of good business judgment among exhibitors concerned with manpower adjustments. Some see the need of such incentive. Others do not, or refuse to see.

That the latter far outnumbers the former remains a major weakness. It will remain a weakness until that time—long overdue—when it is realized that lack of theatre manpower is as damaging as any other dangerous attack upon the industry—and dealt with accordingly.

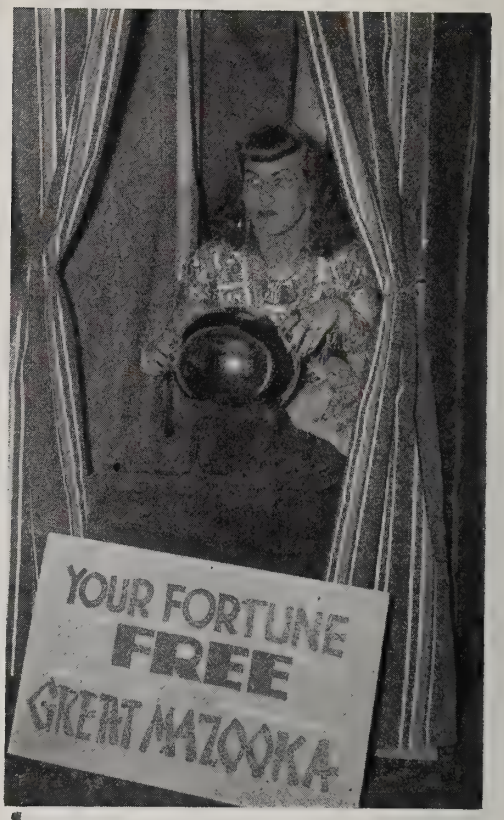
THEY NEVER WILL GROW OLD

In Indianapolis, Loewman Bill Elder had a dinner-tied, high-hatted lad on the streets playing around with jig-saw pieces of a "When Ladies Meet" poster. When crowds gathered, the lad fitted together the pieces for a quick look to sell the picture and date.

In Providence, the Morton-French duo promoted the "letters-to-editor" column for "Citizen Kane" at the RKO Albee. Well in advance, a letter was run asking "Whatever became of 'Citizen Kane' starring a Mr. Orson Welles?" Two days later, another reader obligingly replied, telling all about the attraction. Further letters were planned to praise the unusual photography and other boxoffice slants.



These two stunts are among the hardy perennials to earn their spurs in the past for many and many a date. The point to be made is that the Round Tablers concerned were smart enough to streamline the venerables to make them sparkle all over again.

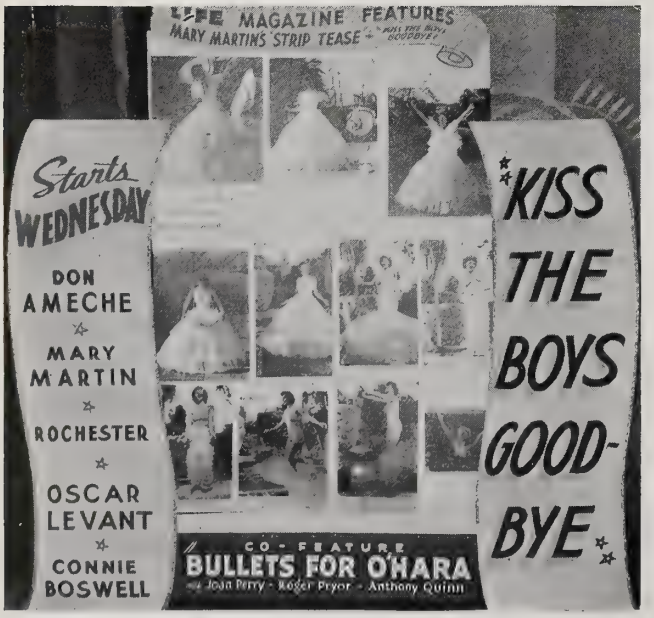
Round Table In Pictures



Ray Whitman at the Ohio, in Springfield, ahead of "Wagons Roll" dressed cashier as crystal gazer and had her tell patrons' fortunes. In addition, teaser cards were distributed advising that "The Great Mazooka" would be in the lobby.

For advance publicity on "The Black Cat" at the L. & J. Georgia, in Athens, Ga., J. D. Kinard decorated his lobby with giant cat cutout from 24-sheet. Painted on body of feline were title, cast and playdates.

As a street attractor, Bill Elder at Loew's, Indianapolis, bannered truck with "When Ladies Meet" copy and placed it outfront during marquee change. Additional street stunt was usher stopping at busy corners to work jigsaw cut from pressbook cover.

Attractive lobby setpiece constructed for "Kiss the Boys Good-bye" by Richard Stoddard at the Tri-States Rocket, in Rock Island, Ill., featured 40 x 60 blowup of the Mary Martin spread in a recent Life issue. Co-feature was plugged at base of display.

Arranged by Manager George French and Publicist Bill Morton at the RKO Albee, in Providence, ahead of "Citizen Kane", was the giant cutout of Orson Welles set against the headline, "It's Terrific". Discs at either side stressed the fact that the picture would be shown at regular prices, plus second feature billing.

"PERSONALS" SELL DATE

Above is reproduced center spread of folder gotten out by Jimmy Redmond of the Bonham and addressed to 400 residents in the Fairbury, Neb., area for a unique buildup on "Dive Bomber". Each folder carried individual newspaper "personal" item having to do with those addressed. Front cover read: "We have been reading about you in the Fairbury News". Back cover carried names and addresses.

Hart Builds Recruiting On "Navy Blue and Gold"

Since the intensity of naval recruiting is being heightened by the willingness of officials to cooperate on outside promotions, Lou Hart worked in a neat tieup on "Navy, Blue and Gold" at Schine's Hippodrome, in Gloversville, by selling the district naval officials on opening a recruiting station in town. Empty store nearby the theatre was provided, the windows appropriately lettered, and furnishings inside including theatre advertising. Booklets highlighting the outstanding events in U. S. Naval history were promoted and sniped with playdates and distributed at the theatre in advance. Local Sea Scout troop gave the proceedings more color by walking guard out front of the theatre bedecked with naval pennants running from the roof to marquee.

Hart emphasizes the newspaper publicity, which was unusual in that the promotion was carried as news and in which the theatre and picture were fully credited.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Local Shepherd of Hills Exploited by Feldman

In the Navarino Hills, near Syracuse, lives a gent who is known in his community as "The Shepherd of the Hills," since he owns over 100 sheep and has open house for strangers. To this gentleman, Dick Feldman at the Paramount tied his date on "Shepherd," inviting him to attend opening night with his family. In addition, cooperating daily interviewed the shepherd and broke with two-column story ahead of opening. Borrowing one of the sheep from his fold, usher dressed in keeping with staff and appropriately back-bannered proved good street bally.

Contest angle was featured by Feldman for "Jungle Cavalcade" with paper offering two of the latest Frank Buck books for the best snapshots submitted showing how wild life utilized the coloration of nature for its self-protection. Also planted was a two-column, 100-inch coloring ad contest for tickets. False theatre front was created with giant cutouts of Buck surrounded by ferns, etc. Book departments in stores devoted counter displays to the two Buck books, "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and "All in a Lifetime."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Giant Star Signed Passes Auctioned Off for U.S.O.

Through the efforts of Paul O. Brake at the Regent, in Battle Creek, Mich., for "They Met in Bombay," six giant passes were drawn up and sent to the MGM studios to be autographed by the stars of the film. After their return, in cooperation with the U.S.O., the passes were auctioned off at the theatre, proceeds going to that worthy organization.

Heralds were distributed, tieups arranged with local merchants, with displays in jewelry and men's wear store windows and spot announcements on local radio station.

Women Riders Sell 'Starr' Campaigns

Activities ahead of "Belle Starr" in St. Louis on Clyde Brown's date at the Fanchon & Marco Fox, featured a teaser campaign built around reward cards illustrated with action shot of Gene Tierney and offering "$10,000 in gold coin for apprehension." This was also carried out in radio and newspaper ads. Street ballyhoo followed the teaser angle with a local beauty impersonating "Belle Starr" on horseback escorted by masked riders.

Publicity dwelt upon a controversial angle designed to create interest in the character of the female bandit through a series of articles and letters to newspapers. These anticipated objections which might be raised as to the historical accuracy of the Belle Starr legend. Radio was also extensive, Station WIL sponsoring a "find Belle Starr" contest for five days; Station WEW was promoted for a scrambled words contest. Novel stunt was the placing of hitching posts in front of the theatre with free admission to people arriving on horseback. Horses and buckboards lined up added color.

Terrell's Masked Rider Clicks

In Washington, D. C., Dan Terrell built the date at Loew's Capitol with a masked woman rider on horseback. As an item for the columnists, Dan had the girl visit the local information center to reveal who she was in answer to the many queries. Terrell used the "reward" slant as a herald. Decorated newsstands were had in conjunction with Gene Tierney fan magazine publicity and wide cooperation received from leading beauty shops with window cards carrying stills of the star and copy "Is Gene Tierney Hollywood's most glamorous discovery?" Bottom of card carried playdates.

In Hartford, Conn., Lou Cohen smoked up the "Starr" date at Loew's Poli with a newspaper doubles contest. Paper ran cut of the star with following story that her double would be seen in the downtown area at a certain day between noon and two o'clock. Attractive prize was offered to the person capturing the double. For the action exploitation, Cohen held shooting contests at rifle ranges and shooting galleries.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Doorman Is Angry, Can't See Picture

Using the doorman for his buildup on "Million Dollar Baby" at the Warner Jeffery, in Chicago Manager Bob Busch planted two easels in the lobby. The first one, reading: "Be Careful. The ticket taker is mad," was placed at the front doors to be noted by patrons entering the theatre. The second, with copy "I am mad because I won't be able to see," etc., etc,. was placed directly in front of the doorman. Busch notes the idea going over so well that some patrons offered to work for the doorman so that he could see the show. He also credits his assistant, Ervan Sedlack, with the idea.

For "John Doe," Busch struck upon having one of the theatre chairs endorse the date by placing seat in the lobby together with card reading: "I have seen a great many pictures in my time, but I've never heard people rave as much," etc., etc.

KING FOOTBALL FIRMLY ENTHRONED AS MORE MEMBERS REPORT DOINGS

Promotions for "Harmon" Dates Help Usher in Activities for Pigskin Season; Most Valuable Player Awards To Be Stressed

Since "Harmon of Michigan" at the Griffith's Chief ushered in the first home game of the high school eleven at Enid, Okla., City Manager George Limerick made a proper to-do about it, starting two weeks ahead by laying out a model football field in the lobby, measuring 10 feet wide by 20 long. Markers in white water-color were painted upon the dark tile of the lobby floor and at each end of the gridiron goal posts were erected, wrapped in Michigan colors. Across the entire field was lettered: "Tommy Harmon. A Great Football Player. A Great Guy. Harmon of Michigan," followed by playdate. The background was a giant display of the star running with the ball, the entire setting flood-lighted at night for further effect.

Football Paraphernalia Featured in Lobby

Other displays included a lobby exhibit of football suits, equipment and footballs, and the gridiron theme was also employed for a window showing in a prominent downtown situation. Here, goal posts served as background with cutout figures of players piled up in the center. A former Notre Dame football star, resident in Enid, supplied "famous" footballs, photos of other Rockne "greats." Limerick invited the high school team and coaching staff to attend the showings, in exchange securing room-to-room announcements over the school's public address system. Cutout footballs with playdate lettering were placed in recreation halls, bowling alleys and billiard rooms. Also found effective by George was the co-op window card for the opening game, space divided between game announcement and the picture. Theatre pays for the cards which are distributed to stores and posted conspicuously by the students. No passes are involved.

Limerick has also booked the Norman Sper "Football This Week" series, plugged with a board out front used throughout the series. Following introductory copy headed "Football," is another head, "Games Pictured In This Week's Series," under which are slots in which the games concerned are noted. Similar boards are located around the city in popular gathering places, wherever possible, next the ticker-tape news machines. The series was also introduced by attendance of team and coaches for additional newspaper publicity.

Girl Athlete Throws "Forwards"

Capitalizing upon the fame of a local girl athlete, skilled in the handling of a football, Ed Fitzpatrick arranged a contest at the high school's opening game wherein the girl competed with the team captain in throwing forward passes. Tied in with "Belle Starr" at Loew's Poli, the stunt brought a goodly measure of publicity in the Waterbury, Conn., papers.

Annual pigskin promotions by Fitz feature a pre-season reception at the theatre for the three high school teams and coaching staffs, all introduced from the stage. Trophies given in the name of certain stars in the bigger attractions are also found fine publicity builders and another hefty annual used by the Loewman is the shooting of the big Thanksgiving game, the footage shown at the theatre the following week. Ed assists the big games by holding pep sessions at the theatre, each school headlined on a different night. Student ticket drive is part of the promotion which covers a parade to the theatre, music by school orchestras, etc. School dances through the season are also being covered with theatre 40 by 60 posters and banners, announcements of playdates over the public address system.

FOOTBALL PLAYERS THROW FORWARDS AT MARTHA

One of the best pigskin promotions put over by Harry Unterfort, and highly recommended for adaptation by the Schine Syracuse city manager, was built up with a cartoon cutout of Martha Raye with a large opening left for the mouth.

Cutout was set up in the Syracuse University stadium and photos were taken for the sports pages, showing members of the team throwing forward passes through the exaggerated orifice. Thus, additional publicity was secured for the star's coming picture booked to open a few days later.

Murphy Set for Weekly Rallies

Football activities at Loew's State, Syracuse, N. Y., are centered around a series of six rallies, one a week, on Thursday nights, closing the theatre week, reports Manager Frank Murphy, starting with Syracuse University. School band and cheer leaders will feature the usual squad introductions from the stage, and radio cooperation is set with WAGE, prominent announcers doing the weekly master-of-ceremony. Murphy has promoted novelty megaphones for distribution, audience invited to join the college songs and cheers. Each rally set to last a half hour, is to be broadcast.

The University Night is to be followed by high school and private academy sessions and comprehensive publicity coverage is arranged in ads, movie and sports pages, lobby displays, ads, trailers and promoted radio time over WAGE.

Since Everchevsky, former Michigan star and Harmon team-mate, is now coaching at nearby Hamilton College, the Loewman is planning a personal appearance, radio stunt, sports dinner and opening night festivities on his date for "Harmon of Michigan"—all to be built around the pigskin "great".

Rosenthal Ties In with Local Daily

For the third successive year, Morie Rosenthal has arranged his annual All-Bridgeport Greater Football Team tiein, a voting contest put on with the sports editor of the local Times-Star. Proceedings start immediately after the Thanksgiving game of the high schools, paper and theatre providing vote blanks, and public invited to participate. When the results are known and released to fat publicity breaks, date is set for the appearance of selected team at Loew's Majestic where boys are presented with gold footballs, promoted by Rosy. Event was covered by dailies.

On hand for the ceremonies are the Governor, Mayor, local and national football celebrities. Street parade is held to the theatre where band puts on stage concert. Speeches and elaborate fan-fare follows, with awards to team winding up the show. This year promises to be biggest yet, says Morrie, with school teams steamed up for the honors, the presentation of which is always good for capacity business.

Theatremen Aid New College

The opening of a new junior college in Fairbury, Neb., allows a wider horizon for football activities to the Kempkes-Redmond duo at the Bonham, the theatre furnishing co-op window cards on all home games in addition to individual game schedules. Rallies at the theatre on the eve of the big games are contemplated with cheer leaders on hand to do their stuff.

For out-of-town games last year, the theatremen arranged for phone calls after each quarter from the field, giving the scores immediately flashed upon the screen. Score telephone information on all games given by the theatre was advertised, each of the hundreds of calls resulting additionally told of the current attraction. Both of the above promotions are repeated this year as will the two awards for the most valuable linesman and back on high school and college teams. Trophies are obtained at low cost from cooperating jeweler in exchange for advertising.

Schiners Ready for Football

As a means of building football rallies throughout the Schine Circuit, Seymour Morris, publicity head, reports arrangements being made for datings on "Harmon of Michigan" to tie in with those events. The Schiners are working on Chamber of Commerce and merchant association cooperation for window displays, advertising mention, invitations to former football "greats" and other tieins in keeping. Torch light parades to the theatre are favored and it is suggested that student price concessions be made wherever practical.

Other ideas reported by Morris include a newspaper score-guessing contest for the first football game with tickets given as prizes. Since Royal Crown Cola used Harmon's sponsorship in an ad, it is suggested to try to get them to sponsor a score card or newspaper ad for the game. Displays in gymnasiums, stadiums, bowling alleys, swimming pools, etc., are also suggested. For street ballyhoo a couple of footballplayers in uniform could toss the ball to each other, players wearing Harmon's famous 88 number on their backs.

ENDING OF THE THIRD QUARTER

With the results set down here, listings of the current Fortnight also mark the ending of the Third Quarter of the 1941 Awards, the three-quarter mark of the year.

Continuing the spirited competition noted all through the six previous periods of the Quarter, results in this last Preliminary show 60 Fortnighters to 62 entrants.

Results of the judging for the Third Quarter-Master Plaques, Medals and Citations, now taking place, will be announced in next week's issue.

The Fourth Quarter, now current, will comprise seven Fortnight two-week periods. As usual, entrants best reperesented in these periods will be given first consideration in the finals.

Department Store Tieup Aids Lykes on "Big Store"

Effective tieup was made by Jack Lykes with local Toledo department store whereby special cards were planted throughout playing up the comedy angle of "The Big Store," variety of stills were used in all window displays with such copy as "For big values shop at Blank Store, for Big Laughs, see" etc. Nut shop furnished Lykes with glassine imprinted envelopes in which nuts were filled and these were distributed at dedication ceremonies of new city airport. For street stunt, man dressed as Groucho pushed a two wheeled truck carrying a large packing box with title letters.

Gag cutouts of the Brothers were planted in numerous store windows with appropriate tiein copy, orchestration of hit songs from the picture were landed with local bands, bumper strips displayed on delivery trucks and teaser cards with crazy sayings were placed around theatre, on mirrors and hung to wall fixtures two weeks ahead.

Essays Highlight Flex's "Sea Wolf" Campaign

In connection with "The Sea Wolf" opening at the Keith Theatre, in Syracuse, Jack Flex landed an essay contest in local daily with entrants requested for passes to write letters expressing their opinion of Jack London stories and why they would like to see the picture. Second newspaper contest featured letters on why entrants liked adventure stories. Book stores and public library system made up window and counter displays using London novels for background with scene stills, distributing bookmarks, in addition.

Fashion stills of Ida Lupino were used for window displays in leading department stores, as were stills of John Garfield in men's furnishing shops. Candid camera fans were invited to submit pictures of all types of ships or boats which were shot on lakes or at sea. These were displayed in lobby during engagement, best photos awarded tickets for following week's show.

Unique Lobby Aids Grey on "Cavalcade"

Harry Grey of the Lyceum, Winnipeg, Canada, used a 24-sheet for "Jungle Cavalcade" by mounting it on the marquee, and used bulbs set in their sockets protruding through the sheet to outline the print of the title.

Grey tied in with a local pet shop and hung several cages in which were imported birds, from the arch at the entrance to the theatre. A boy, dressed in a jungle costume and leading a live monkey, was used for a theatre-front ballyhoo. Young kittens were spotted in a large cage which was billed as a gag: "The dangerous animals are kept inside, see" etc., etc.

Tying up with the Hudson's Bay Department Store on Frank Buck's book, a window with unique decorations was given over to the jungle thriller. A ballyhoo truck with mounted 24's paraded the street. Grey also took space in the comic pages of local newspapers in order to reach the youngsters.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Tying up with a popular local hot spot, Francis Deering, Loew's, Houston, arranged a rhumba contest in connection with the engagement there of the Pete Smith Specialty, "Cuban Rhythm." Also cooperating was the local Arthur Murray organization. The stunt was good for plenty of publicity. Winners were awarded substantial prizes, including a full course in learning the rhumba, a loving cup and a record album of rhumba music.

The Cleveland News devoted plenty of space to the eight local Hardy families brought together by Jim Harris, Loew's, for the opening of "Life Begins for Andy Hardy." In Houston, Francis Deering of Loew's, arranged a special dinner and theatre party for local Hardys, also with excellent breaks. Another Hardy break was the double page spread on Mickey Rooney as the "Carvel Casanova" planted in the Ohio State Journal by Fred Ostreicher, Loew's.

BEAUTY, PHOTO CONTESTS AID "NAVY BLUES" DATE

On "Navy Blues" at the Fox, in Philadelphia, Bill Israel planted newspaper beauty contest, with the winner being guest of honor at luncheon tendered for the "Navy Blues Sextette", in town for the opening.

The Warnerman also tied in with another daily on a "shutter-bug" contest, wherein photos taken at the station when the sextette arrived were rewarded with cash and other prizes.

Pop Graver, manager of Warners' Grove Theatre, Willow Grove, Pa., used a stencil line drawn from the street corner to the box-officer to call attention to "Love Crazy," the line running in curves and circles with copy set nearby stating: "Follow this line and you'll go Love Crazy." Promoting prizes from local business houses, Graver promoted a beautiful child contest for "Broadway Limited."

Edgar Wright, assistant manager at Mark Rubinsky's Lyric Theatre, Dallastown, Pa., had two ponies ride through the streets of the city and the surrounding towns for "The Singing Hills." Large signs on each side of the ponies heralded the attraction and playdates. The horses were trained animals and always created crowds by performing a few tricks for the onlookers.

THEATRE OFFERS STAMPS INSTEAD OF CHANGE

Neat newspaper break was secured by Milt Harris for the Cheektowaga Drive-In Theatre, Buffalo, with announcement that the theatre is successful in prevailing upon patrons to accept ten-cent defense stamps instead of currency in change. Through cooperation of local bank, bond booklets are distributed to all patrons so that stamps given in lieu of cash may be inserted without difficulty.

To attract local youngsters to his "Billy the Kid" date at Loew's Granada, in Cleveland, Carl Rogers had youngster ride bannered shetland pony about city streets. In addition kid covered playgrounds, etc., with young man with camera snapping youngsters sitting in the saddle.

You'll Never Get Rich

(Columbia, 1941-42)

Fred Astaire Joins the Army

Here's a picture for all the customers of all the theatres as of any and all times and especially now.

Here's Fred Astaire, back at his dancing after those two or three tries at limiting his output, joining the Army, and doing most of his training in the guard house.

Here's Rita Hayworth, Number Two Star of Tomorrow by your own vote in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD poll, dancing and romancing opposite Astaire in a manner to beguile the weariest of tired business men.

Here's Robert Benchley, portraying a business man not too tired to buy diamond necklaces for everybody but his wife, in a casting that fits him like a satin glove and gives him the kind of dialogue he loves to fool around with.

Here's music by Cole Porter in the pink, dances staged by Robert Alton on a sky's-the-limit budget, and here are some other items to mention to the prospective ticket-buyer:

Cliff Nazarro drilling an infantry squad in his incomprehensible double-talk;

Donald MacBride repeating his creation of the hardboiled top sergeant;

Guinn Williams personifying a dimwitted doughboy;

And these additional names: John Hubbard, Frieda Inescort, Osa Massen, Marjorie Gateson, Ann Shoemaker and Boyd Davis.

Showmen are warranted in telling their customers this film contains all the ingredients of the training-camp comedies they've been liking so well but isn't like any of them.

Showmen who share the general belief that a dancer's first obligation to his public is to do a lot of dancing can assure the world that Mr. Astaire lets go in plenty, at length, and with and without partner and/or chorus, this time.

Showmen in locations where the fans bristle at the faintest suggestion of impropriety may want to mention that a stickler for impeccable connotations could find a minor objection to one character's roving interest in chorus girls, but the urge never gets beyond the point of tolerance.

Samuel Bischoff, producer, rates a plume for fabricating a picture full of audience values.

Sidney Lanfield, director, can point to his job in this enterprise as something for the decendants to remember.

Songs by Cole Porter are among that composer's best.

Mr. Astaire, for returning to the business of dancing and the peak of his proficiency in that art, rates the gratitude of everybody everywhere.

Niagara Falls

(U.A.-Roach, 1941-42)

Streamlined Feature

Doubtless it was not to be expected that Hal Roach or any other producer could maintain the pace set by his first streamlined feature, "Tanks a Million," but this second in the sequence is by no means a bog-down. It is as funny, in its way, as its predecessor, and no producer can make every picture a cantonment comedy.

This one is a story about newlyweds who arrive at Niagara Falls and experience various misunderstandings, misplacements and mistakes generally which interrupt the normal flow of honeymooning processes. The humour varies from the sophisticated to the slapstick, with spots of double entendre, some flecks of the risque, a dip into trick photography for a "wolf" gag and other incitements to laughter.

Slim Summerville as a groom too busy attending to other people's matings to consummate his own and Zasu Pitts as his frustrated bride dominate the goings-on. Tom Brown and Marjorie Woodworth portray a pair of unweds believed newlyweds who give up and get married in the finale.

Direction by Gordon Douglas keeps the picture just inside the zone of propriety and wastes no footage.

It's shorter than the first streamlined feature and fits the showman's need for a secondary to follow any of the 100-minute jobs now coming on the market.

Twilight on the Trail

(Paramount, 1941-42)

Detective Western

During the first half of this film Hopalong Cassidy and his comrades, played by Brad King and Andy Clyde, pose as dude detectives from the East who are attempting to capture a gang of cattle rustlers. They wear city clothes and pretend that they can neither ride nor shoot. But the humor seems a bit strained. At length after some slow-moving action and a few pleasant musical intervals, Hopalong and his pals discard their disguise. Then there is some hard riding and fast shooting to please the fans of this series, ably produced by Harry Sherman and directed by Howard Bretherton.

The case is solved after Hopalong discovers a secret entrance to a hidden valley where the stolen cattle have been driven. Near the end suspense is created by the fact that Hoppy and California are captured by the rustlers. But they escape in time to catch the whole gang, including the leader who was the foreman of the range from which most of the cattle had been stolen.

Previewed at a home-office screening for a small group of the trade press that showed no enthusiasm.—MARTIN QUIGLEY, JR.

Riders of the Timberline

(Paramount, 1941-42)

Western

Timber country provides the colorful and exciting background for another good turn by "Hopalong," "Johnny" and "California." While trouble-shooting in lumber camps is a bit out of their usual line, and railroad cars and aerial trolleys can hardly substitute for horses, "Hopalong's" good judgment and daring prevail.

The locale slows up the action a little, although Producer Harry Sherman achieves a clearer story thereby and it makes for beautiful photographic shots and varied characters. "The Fighting Forty," who arrive in time to execute "Hoppy's" plan and assure fulfillment of the lumber contract, are as tough and likable a crew as you'd find anywhere in the West. If their French-Canadian accents are spotty, their voices are consistently fine.

That the performances are above average for a western is in good part due to the work of Lesley Selander, the director. William Boyd, Brad King, Andy Clyde, J. Farrel McDonald, Anna Q. Nilsson and Victor Jory will deserve special mention.

The Lone Star Vigilantes

(Columbia, 1941-42)

Western

This third of the Columbia western series starring Bill Elliott and Tex Ritter exceeds its predecessors in the qualities that make action pictures widely acceptable. "The Lone Star Vigilantes" is laid in Texas shortly after the end of the Civil War. Elliott, Ritter and Frank Mitchell enact roles of Confederate soldiers mustered out only to find that "carpet-baggers" are looting their county under the guise of an illegal rule. The story is how they aid the ranchers and the townsmen defeat the looters and bring them to justice.

Leon Barsha's production and Wallace W. Fox's direction leave nothing lacking. The action is fast and the shooting is straight . Ritter's three songs are delivered in a manner not to impede the tempo of the story.

The trio is supported by Virginia Carpenter, Luana Walters, Budd Buster, Forrest Taylor, Gavin Gordon and others.

Stick to Your Guns

(Paramount, 1941-42)

Hoppy in Danger

William Boyd, as Hopalong Cassidy, seeks trouble at the opening of this picture by pretending to join up with the rustlers. He and California are accepted as members of the gang but later the leader becomes suspicious and they escape just in time to save their own lives and help the other former Bar-20 men wipe out the rustlers.

There is plenty of action of both the riding and shooting and killing types in this Western though the story material is routine.

While Hoppy and California are with the rustlers in the Black Buttes, their companion Johnny Nelson, played by Brad King, leads the Bar-20 men. An old prospector acts as guide, over the objections of his niece who comes along to look out for him. The rustlers and the Bar-20 men engage in a lively gun fight but Cassidy saves the day once again.

Harry Sherman is the producer and Lesley Selander the director.

A Dangerous Game

(Universal, 1940-41)

Arlen-Devine Vehicle

Richard Arlen and Andy Devine, whose series of adventure pictures for Universal have heretofore been entertaining, return in another vehicle in which the elements of adventure, mystery, comedy and romance have been mixed with negligible results.

Set in an isolated hospital for the mentally ill the picture concerns two detectives, Mr. Arlen and Mr. Devine, a number of sick patients upon whom the comedy is based, and a ring of thieves seeking a fortune inherited by one of the patients. with these collected under one roof a number of murders are committed, many are suspected and the killer is caught after putting putting poison pills in the victims' drinks with the aid of "tiddlie-winks." However, before the inevitable is accomplished the comedy gets silly while the adventure consists of the whole cast running through the hospital for a great portion of the film, all of which leaves the audience exhausted.

Ben Pivar, associate producer, and John Rawlins, director, made the best of what little comedy and story material they had to work with.

Fugitive Valley

(Monogram, 1940-41)

The Rangebusters Ride Again

Under the aegis of George W. Weeks, producer, and Roy Luby, director, the Rangebusters, Ray (Crash) Corrigan, John (Dusty) King and Max (Alibi) Terhune, come to Fugitive Valley to capture "The Whip," notorious bandit.

Besides the action, songs and shooting, there are one or two innovations. Terhune, cast in the role of a traveling magician and ventriloquist, supplies a bit of comedy in a verbal bout with "Elmer," his dummy. He uses pigeons, not only to pull out of a high hat, but as carriers to transmit messages.

The military objective of the Rangebusters in this adventure is "Fugitive Valley," which is almost inaccessible. They solve this problem, and once inside Fugitive Valley, their personal objective is "The Whip." With the aid of horse, gun and carrier pigeon they discover that "The Whip" is none other than the fair heroine, enacted by Julie Duncan, who, needless to say, is not a bandit at all, but very much like a Rangebuster in purpose. The real bandits are ascertained, apprehended and arrested.

Ray Corrigan and John King enjoy and seem to be very much at home in their roles. King sings two songs very pleasantly, "Riding Along" and "My Little Prairie Annie." Julie Duncan is not at all the usual type of negative western heroine. She is feminine and pretty, rides a horse extremely well, and in her role not only attracts men, but leads them as well. Corrigan and King are both smitten by her but by a ruse, Terhune prevents them from becoming involved. Thus we are assured that the Rangebusters will positively ride again.

Ellery Queen and the Murder Ring

(Columbia-Darmour, 1941-42)

Murder in a Hospital

Rebounding from a letdown last time out, the Larry Darmour series of Ellery Queen detective melodramas here attains its peak in point of mystification, suspense, humor, surprise and the affiliated ingredients of criminological entertainment. Bafflement is complete, both as to audience and most of the characters, until an unexpected finish in which the ends of plausibility and satisfaction of the customers are served with equal competency.

The first of the three murders which keep the mystery mounting is committed in a hospital, the other two occurring adjacently, and a good deal of comedy is worked into the proceedings without violence to the amenities of the setting. An inheritance figures in the plot, but without overemphasis, and suspicion is directed at just about everybody except the title character. It's a tightly wrapped script with plenty of suspense achieved.

James Hogan's direction is of the best, making every role a source of substantial profit to the enterprise.

Rudolph Flothow's services as associate producer entitle him to ample credit.

The picture is tip-top in its field.

Previewed at the Lareina Theatre, infrequently used for this purpose and some distance out of Hollywood, where it kept an audience drawn by "Hold That Ghost" and "Blossoms in the Dust" audibly amused, eliciting applause at the finish.—W. R. W.

The Driftin' Kid

(Monogram, 1940-41)

Western

The resemblance of an American agent for the Mexican government, who is hired to track some stolen horses, to the rancher who sold them, forms the basis for "The Driftin' Kid," Monogram western starring Tom Keene. The cowboy star ably plays the dual role, being supported by rodeo star Betty Miles, the trained horse, "Rusty," Frank Yaconelli, Glen Strange, Stanley Price, Fred Hoose, Slim Andrews, Gene Alsace, Steve Clark, Lou Yaconelli and James Sherridan.

There is plenty of action and quaint dialogue in the film, produced and directed by Robert Tansey.

Acting as the rancher, the agent ferrets out the gang of rustlers who, failing to murder the former, succeed in planting the guilt upon him. However, the agent slips through the trap and rounds up the band.

Seen at a projection room in Hollywood.—V. K.

Outlaws of the Desert

(Para.-Sherman)

Meaning the Arabian Desert

It's a lot of mileage but not a far cry from preceding Hopalong Cassidy pictures to this one. This time the trio of adventurers portrayed by William Boyd, Andy Clyde and their new affiliate, Brad King, ship off to Arabia on a horse-buying mission and become involved in a plot which, save for the wearing of Arab garb over their chaps, differs in no essential from the type of risking and rescuings they've been engaged in on this continent for several years. There is as much riding, shooting and fighting as the followers of the series have been taught to expect, possibly more. Whether the shift in geography will add to or detract from the appeal of the number to the regulars is a question for them to answer. It got some snickers from a small tradeshow turnout.

Opening in the American west, the story moved to Arabia, where a local villain is encountered and ultimately dealt with, a kidnapping for ransom figuring in the proceedings.

After some scenes in which an interpreter is used to facilitate communication with the natives, this device is dropped in the interests of speed.

As in all Sherman pictures, the scenery is an asset.

Direction by Howard Bretherton is inhibited somewhat by the vastness of the terrain utilized.

Lewis J. Rachmil is down as associate producer.

Trade shown at the Los Angeles exchange to a small audience which found the geographical switch more amusing than beneficial.—W. R. W.

Secret of the Wastelands

(Para.-Sherman)

Hoppy Discovers a Shangri-La

With this number in his Hopalong Cassidy series producer Harry Sherman introduces Brad King, cowboy, who replaces Russell Hayden as associate of William Boyd and Andy Clyde in their adventurings. It is for the followers of the series to decide about the newcomer's qualifications, and it may help somewhat if showmen inform them that the young man has joined the U. S. Army after having appeared in the five films now offered as a block.

This number departs from the pattern of the series somewhat in that it introduces a number of Chinese characters who are made to seem villians in the beginning but turn out to be earnest folk who have converted a secluded plateau into something of a Shangri-La, which "Cassidy" saves for them when he learns of their virtues and purity of intent.

Before it gets to this point, the story contains a deal of riding, fighting, shooting, although moving with less momentum and more time out for explanations than is par for the series. Director Derwin Abrahams might have stepped up the tempo with some profit to the enterprise.

Lewis J. Rachmil served producer Sherman as associate.

In addition to caring for the romantic aspect of the tale, Mr. King sings a song.

Trade shown at the Los Angeles exchange to a small group which displayed no sentiment pro or con.—W. R. W.

Two Latins from Manhattan

(Columbia)

Comedy with Music

Utilizing a slightly added plot, "Two Latins From Manhattan" is a comedy with music localed in a New York night club and displays the comedy talents of Joan Davis and the attractiveness of Jinx Falkenburg, model making her film lead debut, and Joan Woodbury. The story concerns a night club press agent, played by Miss Davis, who palms off her two roommates as Cuban singers and dancers, when the original artists are kidnapped.

It is an unpretentious picture, modestly designed by producer Wallace MacDonald and director, Charles Barton. Three songs are used —"The Kid With a Drum," "How Do You Say It?" and "Daddy," the latter two being the standouts.

Miss Falkenburg's debut is impressive, the girl showing much promise.

Supporting the trio are Fortunio Bonanova, Don Beddoe, Marquita Madero, Carmen Morales, Lloyd Bridges, Sig Arno and Boyd Davis.

The climax comes with the revelation that the real singers were kidnapped by an agent of their former employers to prevent them from carrying out their American engagement and the two "imposters" having made a hit, continue with their roles.

Soviet Power

(Artkino, Inc.)

Documentary

Aimed at giving American audiences a sympathetic understanding of the life of the people in the U. S. S. R., "Soviet Power" attempts to depict how the Red republic is prepared to withstand the onslaughts of Hitler through its economic, industrial, agricultural and military forces. The picture, which is a composite of three documentary films and two newsreels, opens with foreword quotations taken from the book, "Soviet Power," written by Hewlett Johnson, England's Dean of Canterbury, which the Reds have exploited to the hilt, since its publication.

Divided into five sections, each with separate commentator and musical background, the film first shows "Citizens of Tomorrow," documenting the Soviet's care of children from the cradle to university days; next, "Armenia, Land of Joy," which aims to depict the agricultural and industrial development of that country under sovietization; "The Soviet Woman" follows, a glorification of women under the Red Star, with shots of aviatrix, women locomotive engineers, technicians, physicians, et al. "Russia's Millions Mobilize" and "Reports from the Front," concluding the Utopian dream, comprise a series of newsreel shots which are supposed to be the first shown in New York. However, a number of sequences were recognized as having been included some weeks ago in American newsreel releases.

The inexpert editing and cutting of the film evidences haste in preparation. Some of the film is badly streaked and the musical background dubbing could have been improved upon greatly.

Viewed at the Central Theatre, New York, where a small afternoon audience of Red sympathizers applauded all shots of Stalin, officers and soldiers.—J. E. SAMUELSON.

Release date Sept. 6, 1941. Running time, 112 minutes. No P. C. A. number. General audience classification.

General Suvorov

(Artkino)

Documentary from Russia

This film, produced by Mosfilm, Moscow, in the U. S. S. R., and distributed by Artkino in the U. S. A., is a documentary about the military career of Alexander Vasilevich Suvorov, who was Field Marshal of the armies of Catherine the Great and Czar Paul I.

There is no plot; only episodes in General Suvorov's life and career are pictured. After many military successes during the reign of Catherine the Great, General Suvorov broke with her successor, "Mad Emperor" Paul I, over questions of army policy. He went into retirement, during which period he wrote "The Science of Victory," which contained such timely maxims as "swiftness of movement accompanies victory" and "the real general is he who defeats the enemy before reaching him."

However, that era, too, had a dictator and conqueror, Napoleon. Paul I recalled Suvorov to become the leader of the joint armies of Russia and Austria. Napoleon not only had a Nelson and a Wellington, but a Suvorov. Suvorov helped to defeat the Napoleonic armies in Italy, and his victory at the Devil's Bridge in the Alps is especially emphasized.

Only Russian is spoken throughout, but Englis titles are superimposed. The cast is entirely Russian. Mr. N. P. Cherkasov in the title role gives a brilliant performance; he is dynamic, realistic and has a wide range of facial expression. The photography is good too, especially those scenes dealing with the battle at Devil's Bridge.

"General Suvorov" will definitely appeal to Russians, both White and Red, art theatres, students and those interested in military strategy.

Reviewed at the New Stanley Theatre in New York, before a scattered mixed audience, who seemed to enjoy it.—I. S.

Paramount's new series bringing Hollywood to the screen, with famous movie actress, columnist and commentator Hedda Hopper as our guide, we visit all the high spots of movieland and its environs.

The reel opens with "Circus Week" at Palm Springs, with Warner Baxter, Bill Gargan, Jerry Colonna and other favorites in attendance.

Then off to a Hollywood party and a look-see at Frances Dee, Freddie Bartholomew, May Robson, Fred MacMurray and a host of other guests.

Remember William S. Hart, two-gun western hero of the silent screen?

Finally, right on to a movie set and a jam session with Kay Kyser and his gang from the Kollege of Musical Knowledge, featuring lovely Ginny Simms in a swing version of the nation's number one novelty song hit, "Alexander the Swoose."

THE QUIZ KIDS (Par.)
Quiz Kids (Q1-No. 1)

Here are radio's famous Quiz Kids on the screen and more exciting and amusing than they ever were on the air. This first of a new series of Paramount feature shorts introduces mental marvels Richard Williams, 11; Joan Bishop, 14; Van Dyke Tiers, 14; Cynthia Cline, 15; and, of course, Gerard Darrow, 8.

With Joe Kelly as quiz master the youngsters demonstrate for screen audiences their amazing fund of knowledge, and, at the same time, leave the impression that despite their intelligence and book learning they are just regular kids.

Just as their radio program, so this short is absolutely unrehearsed.

FROM NUTS TO SOUP (Col.)
Cinescope (3972)

A scientist's inventive genius to give to the world the benefits of his creations is the basis for this film. Professor Russel E. Oakes, an alumnus of a great college, discloses a few of the secrets of his success. They are all interesting and extremely funny inventions. How to eat soup without that embarrassing sound, reaching for potatoes without getting your sleeve caught in the butter, conveying peas on a knife, a pie-pinching machine to save the crust, the correct way to dunk doughnuts, and his patented sleep inducer are just a few of the gadgets the professor demonstrates.

THE GAY KNIGHTIES (Par.)
Madcap Models (Color) (UO-4)

This delightful musical puppet drama is a dream-adventure of Jim Dandy.

A fierce ogre has terrified a mythical kingdom of yore. Sir Archibald Cornwal Dandy, a wandering troubador, meets the ogre on a deserted road and charms him with his lute.

Later, Archy serenades a lovely princess and is thrown into a dungeon by the king for his impertinence. Archy plays his lute in the underground prison and the sad lament is heard by the ogre who bursts through the walls of the castle. There is wild confusion in the castle as everyone runs for their lives.

Archibald Dandy becomes the hero of the day. He has rid the countryside of the fierce ogre. And, best of all, he has won the heart of the fair princess.

SHOOTING MERMAIDS (Par.)
Sportlight (RI-No. 1)

Grantland Rice explores the underwater technique of photography and swimming in this unusual reel.

It shows the Sportlight's crew preparing to shoot at beautiful Wakulla Springs, Florida. An alligator ferry is the jumping-off place for swimmers. The aquatic chorus board a large submarine studio which is used to keep swimmers comfortable before they submerge.

Newton Perry, one of the world's best underwater swimmers and tops as a coach and developer of underwater performers, shows the aquatic tricks of his trade. The inverted periscope that allows a camera to be submerged is shown in this short.

IN A PET SHOP (Par.)
Speaking of Animals (Y1-No. 1)

Imagine birds and animals actually talking like humans!

A new film technique, a combination of animation and trick photography, makes this possible.

A flock of birds, fish and pets of all kinds, even including a turtle, produce one gag-line after another.

The scene of the short is a pet shop and among the birds and animals that talk back are a South American macaw, a bulldog, rabbits, lovebirds, monkeys, a sheep dog, a pigeon, a turtle, Mexican jumping beans, a baby kitten, a Scotty and Mexican Chihuahua, a sparrow and a spitz.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS, No. 2 (Col.)
No. 2, Series 21 (3852)

Hobart Bosworth, silent day star and friend to all those screen personalities who have passed on, is the commentator for this most unusual reel. Clips of famous scenes from pictures that featured Tom Mix, Agnes Ayres, Monroe Owsley, Owen Moore, Walter Connolly, Robert Woolsey, Joe Penner, Pauline Frederick, Marie Dressler, Jean Harlow, Alice Brady, Ralph Lewis, and many other great stars comprise the film. Truly a splendid tribute to their memory and a subject that should be appreciated by the fans.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

MARTIN QUIGLEY, Editor-in-Chief and Publisher

Vol. 145, No. 1 — October 4, 1941

BY INVITATION

FOR the first time since it was born, the motion picture industry has stepped out before the world in the center of a limelighted and official arena to declare itself officially on position, policy and practice.

In the hearings before the Senatorial committee in Washington the motion picture industry of America is doing its first major, direct, public relations job on the big stage.

Ironically, this is an unintended consequence of the misguided inquiry which has come to focus at the national Capitol.

The arena of ordeal has become a tribune of proclamation.

No one planned that.

It is what can happen in this republic.

"I know my business," Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., said on the witness stand.

Among all the phrase-making of all the phrase-makers gathered there in that crowded caucus room, those words, so simply spoken, cut through the tumult and the fog of controversy.

To many of us familiar with all of the story of the motion picture and its traditions, those words from Mr. Schenck and his manner of saying them, the occasion and the background out of which he said them, give the declaration a connotation that shall be historic.

"I know my business." One may hope that this will become known and understood to a wider audience.

Nicholas M. Schenck does know his business.

The world of the motion picture has long known that he knows it.

To the rest of the world it is to be hoped that there will be more than implication that the motion picture industry knows its business, too.

IT has been plainly enough evidenced these many years that the motion picture industry would have to know how to run its own business, through executives of its own making. There have been experiments aplenty in other courses and in the superimposition of executive figures from other fields. They have been as transient as snow on the desert.

When, on Mr. Schenck's failure to name all of the Loew subsidiaries, Senator Tobey exclaimed, "God save the stockholders," in professed alarm about executive competency, he was proceeding precisely in the pattern which invalidates the inquiry and which is giving the screen its great day on the stand.

Considering the dividend record of two decades of Loew's and related enterprises, the Senator, by exhaustive research, could not have arrived at a more inept spot for his attempt at a bon mot.

In these hearings, with testimonies from Mr. Schenck, Mr. Harry M. Warner and Mr. Darryl F. Zanuck, the public is for the first time hearing on commanding, poignant issues, about and from motion picture executives, in the terms of a great industry.

Mostly, the motion picture, for the public, consists of stars and titles, the stuff that marquees proclaim.

NOW, contrary to the intent of the Senatorial inquisition, the public is finding that the industry of the motion picture has its equivalents of the Ketterings, Sloans, Swopes, Knudsens, and such. Probably never before has the American public been so informed that the motion picture is not just "the movies" but also an institution. That, to be sure, is no fault of the public's. The motion picture has attended to that oversight in its negative fashion, but it has also, by reason of the uncalculated path of the inquiry in Washington, been showered with a realized opportunity to speak for itself as an institution.

The testimony of Mr. Schenck has been of a nature to convince the readers of the daily press that he attends to business and has a business to which to attend—the motion picture. From Mr. Warner they have heard an exposition of a social philosophy, along with a business judgment. From Mr. Zanuck they have heard from a militant producer whose chief capital and concern has been keeping in tune with the customers, selling them that which they have bought by their contemporaneously recorded interest.

It would appear that the motion picture at this point, in its own proper witnesses, has made rather a showing that it tends to its own business, and is capable of doing that.

SUNDAY NIGHT

WITH well-packed briar in hand of a chill autumn eve and redolent applewood a-crackle in the fireplace, the editorial hand turns to that weekend stack of the this-and-that the attention-callers have forwarded.

In time comes up a quaint item—entitled, it seems, "The New Republic". It is printed, as usual, on appropriately soft paper and seems, as ever, to be dedicated to its long-established policy of Leftish uplift-at-a-deficit journalism. That is always the keynote of a paper which is more beloved by its editors than its readers.

The paper of The New Republic is friendly to the touch and the type is big enough to make a few words take many ems. It is nice to look at by the fireside.

And, fancy then, the intrusion, in this friendly hour, of an item about movies discussing, of all persons, your editor and your publisher. It seems there is a piece which talks about books on the movies which says: " . . . the book is Terry Ramsaye's 'Million and One Nights', if you can read it, and

Petty Cash Vouchers

THE Hollywood gossip columnists and Senate propaganda inquiry witnesses, Jimmie Fidler and George Fisher will just have to wait for payment of the $552.04 worth of "petty cash" vouchers which they submitted to Senate sub-committee Chairman D. Worth Clark to cover their expenses in flying from Hollywood to Washington and staying therein, for their day on the stand testifying for the Senatorial isolationists who charge that the American screen purveys war propaganda.

Wednesday, Senator Scott Wike Lucas, of Illinois, chairman of the Senate Audit and Control Committee, indicated in Washington that he would take no action on the subcommittee's vouchers until the investigation had been completed or he was given definite information on what expenses were contemplated. The only pending vouchers are one from Fidler, for $287.54 and one from Fisher, for $264.50.

Senator Lucas indicated that if the inquiry expenses were very considerable, he would ask the Senate to decide what to do about them. But if the amount involved is only a few hundred dollars the Audit and Control Committee would probably approve them and let the matter drop.

remember that Ramsaye is on the whole a journalist whose feet hurt and that he works today at the right hand of the practically unspeakable Martin Quigley. Thousands have fussed and fumed, but I doubt anything else has been written with much pertinence to the forbidding factual mountain of make and sell, buy and beat the drum."

The piece has been done, so the signature declares, by a Mr. Otis Ferguson. He appears to be engaged, so far as The New Republic discloses, in reviewing motion pictures and books for children. Examination of the reference volumes yields nothing until we come to Motion Picture Almanac, which seems to indicate that Mr. Ferguson came out of the navy to literature, recently, about 1935.

As an ex-sailor maybe one should not expect him to know; but the fact is that if he were able to give this editor any pain it would not be the feet that would hurt but a more unspeakable area.

Hi'yuh, sailor!

'One Foot in Heaven'

THE SENATORS who have been investigating motion pictures were to step out to the movies Thursday night, some admittedly for the first time in years, when, as the guests of Warner Brothers, one of the distributors cited for making propaganda films, they were to attend the Washington premiere of "One Foot in Heaven," a film about the life story of a Methodist minister.

Wednesday night, Warners announced that Chairman D. Worth Clark and Senators Charles W. Tobey, C. Wayland Brooks and Ernest McFarland had accepted invitations to the opening at Washington's Earle theatre.

They were to be among a large delegation of Congressmen, Protestant clergymen, and Washington officials attending the premiere.

Other plans are on page 54.

Quarter-Masters

BY vote of the judges for the Third Quarter of the 1941 Quigley Awards, 75 theatremen participating in the competitions were selected to receive "Quarter-Master" Plaques, Medals and Citations. Among the plaque winners, Harold H. Thomas, manager of the Malco Circuit's Fulton theatre, in Fulton, Ky., now holds the added distinction of being voted these honors for the third successive quarter of the year.

Complete listing of the "Quarter-Master" winners and their situations is set down in Managers' Round Table, on page 70, this issue.

No Knockout

ADMITTING that films of the six-round Joe Louis-Lou Nova prize fight did not "contain sufficient pictorial ring action," to which admission most of those witnessing the fight agreed, RKO-Radio, on Tuesday withdrew the special fight issue which had previously been announced. The decision was reached by Ned E. Depinet and A. J. Michalson of the RKO sales staff, Colonel John R. Kilpatrick, Madison Square Garden president, and editors of Pathe News which filmed the action for the parent RKO.

It is the first time in memory that a special fight film has been announced and then withdrawn. There was so little action in the fight, and so little pictorial material in the sixth round knockout, according to those who saw the picture footage, that it will not even be included in regular newsreel releases.

"We hope Louis' next fight is more of a slugfest, and not a waltzfest," spokesmen commented.

The withdrawal dampened RKO hopes of again doubling the number of fight picture bookings, as they have done with each of the three issues since the Sims law banning interstate shipment of the pictures was repealed in July, 1940. As reported in Motion Picture Herald last week (page 43) there has been a boom in theatre interest in fight pictures. The Armstrong Jenkins bout, first fight pictures distributed by RKO- radio under the repealer, played 2,000 theatres. The Louis-Baer picture distribution doubled to 4,000 and over 7,000 theatres played the Louis-Conn fight reels.
